> The efforts of the Aluminum Co. of America, which were not opposed by the consumers of aluminum ingot and sheet, resulted in an increase in the duty on ingots from 2 cents to 5 cents per pound, and on "coils, plates, sheets, bars, rods, circles, disks, blanks, strips, rectangles, and squares, from 3½ cents to 9 cents per pound." The act went into effect September 22, 1922. The Aluminum Co. of America increased its price of ingots on September 26, 1922, from 20 cents to 22 cents per pound, and on November 1, 1922, the price was again increased to 23 cents per pound. Thus, in a little over one month after the tariff went into effect, the entire increase in duties on ingot aluminum was reflected in the price to the consumer. The price of sheet aluminum was also increased on September 26, 1922, and November 22, 1922, aggregating 3 cents per pound against 5½ cents per pound increase in the tariff duties.

There was an increase of 3 cents per pound upon ingots or pigs.

I wonder if there is any conception among the Members of the Senate as to just exactly what that increase in price of 3 cents per pound on aluminum meant to American consumers? Since that time the consumption of aluminum has increased very largely. Every manufacturer of household utensils, and particularly every manufacturer of automobile bodies, was called upon to pay 3 cents a pound more for his aluminum on account of this duty as here disclosed.

I have caused a computation to be made and I find that since that time that increase has cost the American people, assuming the increase to be 3 cents per pound, not less than $800,000, and the duty upon sheets and coils unquestionably was at least a million dollars. All this goes to the Aluminum Co. of America, the only producer of crude aluminum in this country. Every dollar of it goes to that company, a gift to the company.

That company is also engaged, or at least one of its subsidiaries, the Aluminum Manufactures Co., in the production of household utensils manufactured from aluminum, upon which, as we were told by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. McMASTER], there is a duty of 11 cents per pound and 55 per cent ad valorem. I have no doubt at all that it realized from that source as much as it did from the other two sources combined. So that this has amounted to a gift to the Aluminum Co. of America, of which Andrew W. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, is the controlling figure, of not less than $3,000,000 to $5,000,000. And for what?

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. McMASTER] has told us that no evidence of any kind was submitted to the committee of either House justifying any increase in the duty on aluminum.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. May I interrupt the Senator to inquire if he does not think that that fact furnishes a very excellent reason why the power to fix import duties should be lodged in a tariff commission, subject to the approval of Congress in each instance? In that event there would be testimony. The commission would have at its disposal a corps of trained experts, to begin with, and it would be a part of its duty to take the fullest testimony with reference to the expediency of any particular tariff duty. Then, after it had fixed the duty, the duty would be subject to the approval or disapproval of Congress. In other words, the duty would be reported to Congress and unless Congress disallowed it within some fixed time it would automatically go into effect.

I am curious to know how the Senator feels about this proposition, because he has had great experience in relation to the tariff and the enactment of tariff laws. It seems to me that it might lead up to an ideal state of affairs. The organization of such a commission would be followed by the fullest opportunities for taking testimony in regard to tariff duties. The public is in no position to know whether a duty is excessive or not. Possibly we can not hope for a tariff system administered by a tariff commission, closely similar in point of organization and otherwise, to the Interstate Commerce Commission. But I will say to the Senator that the special tariff investigating committee which was appointed by this body is about to report, and so far as the trend of the members of the commission, both Democratic and Republican, has become evident, it has, I should say, been in the direction of such a commission.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not like to be diverted from the course of the argument I am making to discuss with the Senator now the question of the advisability of a tariff commission having power to fix rates subject to revision by Congress.

Mr. BRUCE. My interruption was rather untimely, I admit.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That subject is one which has been debated over and over again in the Congress of the United States. Something like 20 years ago the ideas of the Senator from Maryland were elaborately discussed and many eminent statesmen and economists advocated the idea now advanced by the Senator. It never, however, had the approval of the leaders of either political party in either House of Congress. The present Tariff Commission, however, is authorized to go almost as far as the Senator has suggested. That commission is supposed to be equipped with experts. It is supposed to study every schedule in the act. It is supposed to accumulate all possible information with respect to matters. When we had the bill of 1922 under consideration it gave us such information as it could command with respect to practically every item in the bill, and with respect to most of them the Congress of the United States paid no attention whatever to the recommendations of the commission.

Mr. BRUCE. Of course, the Senator is aware of the fact that the commission as at present organized simply reports the results of investigations to the President, and, as I conceive it, the President is the very last person in our entire political organization who should have anything to do with the tariff.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree quite fully with the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. Then again I imagine undoubtedly a good deal of this opposition to the Tariff Commission is due to the fact that, of course, there are some selfish considerations by a considerable part of the Republican Party that it should be merely a continuation of the old system of fixing tariff duties, because we all know that one of the effects of the Tariff Commission is very considerably to increase the capacity of very wealthy Republicans to make handsome contributions to the Republican funds from time to time as such contributions are needed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may say to the Senator from Maryland that when the tariff bill of 1913 was under consideration I made a very determined but vain effort to induce my colleagues to put in a provision for the appointment of a tariff commission. I failed, but it was only three years afterwards when the present commission was created. That it has not met the expectations of most of us need not be elaborated.

Mr. BRUCE. I think it is of very little use as organized at present. All the revisions have been upward and none downward, and the commission finds it very difficult, no matter how honorable its motives may be, to resist the personal views of the President in regard to fixing the tariff rates. I think the flexible provisions of the tariff law should be repealed, and I think the President ought to be completely eliminated from any connection at all with the fixing of tariff duties. I am obliged to the Senator for recording that fact to which he has just referred.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was endeavoring to call the attention of the Senate, when the interruption occurred, to what there was before the committees of the Congress upon which the rate was fixed. Mr. Davis, representing the Aluminum Co. of America, came before the House Committee on Ways and Means and said to them:

> We are asking a tariff only to compensate for the difference in the cost of manufacture between Europe and this country, and that on pre-war or normal conditions. It is impossible to say what the actual condition is under these abnormal conditions, but under pre-war conditions we estimate that the difference in the cost of manufacture is about 7 cents per pound, which was the duty that we had under the Payne-Aldrich Act.

That is to say, in the year 1922 the same rate was asked as was given by the act of 1909, the investment in the industry meanwhile not being taken into consideration at all. He frankly stated that they had not any basis upon which the fact could be determined.

But, Mr. President, it will be observed that while a tariff was asked equal to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, no figures whatever were given as to what it cost to produce this article either in this country or abroad; at least no information was given to the Congress upon the subject. We find, however, in a bulletin gotten out by the Tariff Commission that they did have before that body some evidence from the Aluminum Co. of America of the cost of producing their product here. I read from page 41 of the Tariff Information Surveys on the articles in paragraph 143 of the tariff act of 1913, speaking of the cost of the manufacture of aluminum:

> Detailed cost figures for 1917 covering the making of aluminum from the mining of the ore to the remelted ingot are in the confidential files of the Tariff Commission. These figures were submitted by the Aluminum Co. of America to the committee on raw materials, Council of National Defense. In the tariff hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, prior to the act of 1913, a brief submitted by Julius Hess & Co., of Chicago, gave the cost of 1 pound of aluminum metal at 12 cents in the United States and 6 cents in Germany at that time.

The current price of aluminum is 27 cents. It has been held at that figure, although it was but 22 cents at the time the present act was passed. It has practically remained at the figure of 27 cents since that time. I can furnish the Senate with some information concerning the cost of producing aluminum.

If Senators will turn to page 4387 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 67, part 4, of the Sixty-ninth Congress, they will find there inserted an article from the Mining Journal of January 30, 1926, written by Robert J. Anderson, of Cleveland, Ohio, bachelor of science, metallurgical engineer, and doctor of science. The article discloses that the writer is thoroughly familiar with this particular subject. He tells us—and I read from page 4387:

> Calculations for the production cost of aluminum have been made many times by those competent in the business. Thus Debar gives the cost for German practice as about 16 cents per pound, including interest and investment and amortization of plant. Clacker, of the British Aluminum Co. (Ltd.), has quoted the figure of 12 cents, Collet has given 8.6 cents for Norwegian practice, Nissen has given 12 cents for European practice in general, and Lodin has quoted 11 cents per pound. Calculations by the writer for American practice show 13 + cents, which is amply high.

It costs 13 cents a pound to produce aluminum in this country and the current price of that article is 27 cents. When it was 22 cents per pound and it cost 13 cents a pound to produce it, Congress then added a duty of 3 cents more per pound, without any justification whatever, as I have attempted to show.

Mr. President, I challenge any Senator upon this floor to stand here and attempt to make a justification of these rates. They are nothing more than a pure gift to the Aluminum Co. of America of anywhere from three to five million dollars a year. Senators will bear in mind also that that company is the sole producer of aluminum in America—a perfectly ironbound, copper-riveted monopoly.

Then, another thing, Mr. President. It is not pretended that there is any other element in the cost of producing these articles making the cost in this country greater than it is abroad except the labor cost. Here are the ingots or pigs upon which there is a duty of 5 cents per pound. Those pigs are rolled into sheets; they are simply passed through a rolling mill and come out in sheets instead of in the shape of pigs or ingots. I undertake to say—and I challenge anybody to demonstrate to the contrary—that it does not cost all together 4 cents per pound to roll the ingots of aluminum into sheets, not to speak about the difference in the cost of doing that work in this country and abroad.

Of course, if there were any mills in this country that were engaged in the production of sheets out of ingots they would be entitled to a compensatory duty equal to 5 cents a pound; and then they would have an additional duty of 4 cents on top of that simply for rolling the ingots into sheets.

Mr. President, how can a thing like that be justified? I should think that gentlemen here who are attached to the principle of protection, who believe that it is a sound policy, who insist that it ought to be preserved, would hasten to remove these excrescences from the tariff law.

However, Mr. President, whatever may be the cost of rolling ingots into sheets, what part of that entire cost must be attributed to the labor that is employed in it? As a general rule, upon manufactures of this kind the entire labor cost rarely exceeds 20 per cent, and the difference between the cost of labor in this country and abroad can be only a small fraction of that 20 per cent.

Mr. President, I said to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] that, notwithstanding the fact that the Tariff Commission had furnished us with all manner of information upon these subjects when we had the tariff bill under consideration, the necessary deductions from the facts they gave us were entirely disregarded in fixing these rates. In the case of most articles the entire labor cost was given and the rate fixed often exceeded the entire labor cost, not to speak about the difference between the cost of production in this country and abroad.

At the time this matter was under consideration the Chicago Tribune, one of the great Republican newspapers of the country, called attention to the injustice and the wrong and the oppression of this particular schedule, and then stated that it was altogether likely that similar injustices could be found in many of the schedules in the bill. Anyone who knows anything about the course of the passage of that act can not doubt that that is the case.

Mr. President, I insist that the revision called for by the pending resolution ought to have taken place years ago; and I think it is occasion for wonder that the Representatives from the sections of the country which have suffered so seriously and been so seriously oppressed by these heavy rates have not long ere this asked for a revision, as is contemplated by the resolution under consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can neither vote for nor against the pending resolution and thereby express my view as to the situation, which fact seems to necessitate a word from me more in the nature of an explanation of my vote than an attempt to discuss the subject itself.

I voted against the present tariff law at the time of its passage. I voted against it for two reasons. I thought, in the first place, that there were a number of the schedules which could not be defended upon what I conceived to be the proper theory of protective duties. It is my view that when an honest, thorough investigation is made to ascertain the difference between the cost of producing an article in this country and the cost of producing it abroad, the correct theory of a protective tariff is that the duty should express that difference. It seemed to me that a number of the duties in the bill were far in excess of that rule. I quite agree with the statement made by the Senator who has just taken his seat [Mr. WALSH of Montana] that it is quite as much the duty of those who believe in the protective system to guard against those mistakes as it is the duty of those who are entirely opposed to the system.

Naturally, therefore, Mr. President, having voted against the bill because of what I conceived to be errors in it in that respect, I am sympathetic with the resolution which would urge a revision of the present tariff law, and, in so far as the resolution urges a revision or expresses the desire for a revision, it has my sympathy. I do not want, however, to vote for a resolution which would commit me to what might be called the doctrine of a horizontal downward revision. I am particularly opposed to that, in view of the situation which the agricultural interests occupy under the present tariff law or under any tariff law which might be enacted.

My second objection to the present tariff law was and is because of what is known as the flexible-tariff provisions of the law. If those provisions of the present tariff law are not in contravention to the Constitution of the United States, then I have studied that instrument and our whole theory of government in vain. I think it is a wrong principle. If there was anything about which our fathers were primarily concerned, it was to keep wide apart the sword and the purse and not permit them to be in any sense under the control of the same individual. We have gone a long way, Mr. President, toward giving to the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States the power to control the revenues of the Government. It is not a conclusive step, but it is an important step; and, in so far as it is a step at all, it is a vicious one. I feel that the President, the chief executive officer of the Government, regardless of who he may be or what party he may represent, should have no power or authority with reference to fixing tariff duties upon imported articles, save such as is given him in his authority to sign or veto measures passed by the Congress.

If we can give to the President of the United States the power to increase or decrease rates of duty to the extent of 50 per cent, we can give him the power by the same authority to increase or decrease them 100 per cent, and we can place in the hands of the Chief Executive what, in my judgment, is a sufficient control of the revenues of the Nation to make that control effective as to the amount of revenue which shall be collected.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the President may change the rates of tariff duty, he may likewise change the rates of taxation on incomes or anything of that kind, may he not?

Mr. BORAH. I should think that the same authority, if it could be found anywhere in the Constitution, which would authorize him to do the one could authorize him to do the other.

It is true, Mr. President, that the Supreme Court of the United States in what is known as the Field case went a long distance in justifying the delegation of what seems to me legislative power; it certainly went further than most members of the profession anticipated it would go before the decision had been rendered; but in that case the court clearly intimated it had gone the full distance. In this matter, however, we have gone an arrow's flight beyond the point which was held constitutional by the Supreme Court in the Field case. It is not only wrong as a constitutional principle, but it is undesirable in practice. I shall not detain the Senate by a discussion of the present Tariff Commission and the present flexible provisions of the tariff act as reflected in the work of the Tariff Commission, but I would deem it of great advantage if the Finance Committee would bring in a bill at this session to permit us to repeal the flexible provisions of the present tariff act. I should like to remove it from the law and once and for all discard the theory which gave it a place in our revenue laws. I know that there are members of that committee who have had in contemplation doing that thing, and I trust they will permit us to go at least that far in remedying what I think is a very bad provision of the law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question in that connection?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have always felt—this will be a question, not a speech—that the flexible tariff provision as it stands imposed too heavy a burden upon the Executive as a practical matter. Of course, the Senator remembers that the power is delegated subject to strict limits. The President may only make the tariff rate conform to the difference in cost of production here and in the principal competing countries. Would the Senator favor the delegation of that power to some commission in the nature of the Interstate Commerce Commission? That is, would the Senator favor taking the power from the President and conferring it on some semijudicial, semilegislative body?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should not want to conclude myself at this time by an answer to that question. Before my experience with the present Tariff Commission I have always been sympathetic with the view which the Senator indicates; and it might be possible that such a law could be framed that I would be willing to experiment with it. I have come to the conclusion, however, after observing the working of the present Tariff Commission, that, slow as the Congress of the United States is, and inefficient as it is in dealing with details of this kind, Congress could meet and pass a tariff law and discharge all its other business covering an entire session and adjourn more speedily than the present Tariff Commission could pass upon one item of that law. Some two years ago there was a petition filed with the present Tariff Commission to revise the tariff on onions, and they have just now got to a notice of hearing.

I perhaps should not discuss the matter further at this time. I want to reserve a conclusive answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. President, I have no desire by any vote of mine here to indicate antagonism to what I conceive to be a wise protective tariff policy. I have no desire to indicate that it is my purpose at any time to take from the manufacturing interests of our country that which they are really entitled to under the rule which I stated a few moments ago. I would not break down the American market as I conceive it would be broken down by reducing the duties below what it costs to produce in this country and abroad. It is extremely important, however, that we shall not abuse that principle; and it seems to me that in view of the conditions under which this tariff law was framed, and in view of some of the facts which we now possess with reference to some of the schedules, a revision of these duties would not only be the just thing to do but the wise thing to do so far as the protective policy would be involved. What I am most concerned about, however, is preserving the market which is built up under the protective policy exclusively for the farm products of the United States in so far as the farmer of the United States is prepared to furnish them. I regard this as the most vital thing in the whole tariff question at the present time.

Heretofore, and until within very recent years, the protective policy has not been of any direct benefit to the American producer. When I say "direct benefit," I mean that the levying of a duty upon products which we were exporting was of no direct benefit to the producer of those articles. Of course, there has always been a contention, and I sympathize with that view, that notwithstanding that fact there has been an indirect benefit to the American farmer by reason of the fact that we were building up, close to home, a permanent, strong market for his products.

I do not regard that as what I term the direct benefit, but as the indirect benefit. No one has stated that indirect benefit better than Mr. Clay many years ago; and I pause long enough to read a paragraph from perhaps his most noted speech upon this subject. When Mr. Clay spoke we were exporters, and very large exporters, of practically all farm or food products. Nevertheless, he said:

> Under the operation of the American system the products of our agriculture command a higher price than they would do without it, by the creation of a home market, and by the augmentation of wealth produced by manufacturing industry, which enlarges our powers of consumption both of domestic and foreign articles. The importance of the home market is among the established maxims which are universally recognized by all writers and all men. However, some may differ as to the relative advantages of the foreign and the home market, none deny to the latter great value and high consideration. It is nearer to us; beyond the control of foreign legislation and undisturbed by those vicissitudes to which all international intercourse is more or less exposed. The most stupid are sensible of the benefit of a residence in the vicinity of a large manufactory, or of a market town, of a good road, or of a navigable stream, which connects their farms with some great capital. If the pursuits of all men were perfectly the same, although they would be in possession of the greatest abundance of the particular produce of their industry, they might at the same time be in extreme want of other necessary articles of human subsistence. The uniformity of the general occupation would preclude all exchanges, all commerce. It is only in the diversity of the vocations of the members of a community that the means can be found for those salutary exchanges which conduce to the general prosperity. And the greater that diversity, the more expensive and the more animating is the circle of exchange. Even if foreign markets were freely and widely open to the reception of our agricultural produce, from its bulky nature and the distance of the interior and the dangers of the ocean, large portions of it could never profitably reach the foreign market. But let us quit this field of theory, clear as it is, and look at the practical operations of the system of protection, beginning with the most valuable staple of our agriculture.

That states the view of the protectionist with reference to agricultural interests as it has obtained and as it has been the doctrine of the Republican Party from its organization and of the Whig Party prior to its organization. The time is now approaching, however—indeed, it is already here—when the American farmer is receiving and is to receive still more direct benefit from the duties which may be levied upon farm products. The great question is to assure him that benefit. His loyalty to the protective system has earned it, and fidelity to his interest will see that he gets what he has earned in helping to build up this policy.

It is true that in the case of wheat and cotton and hogs we are still exporters; and the direct benefit there does not arise, although I am going to discuss the wheat question with reference to that briefly in a moment. With reference, however, to a vast number of products, all of which enter into and make possible the prosperity of the American farmer, we have now reached a time when we are importing a large amount of farm products which the American farmer is perfectly prepared to supply to the American market.

During the last three years on an average we have imported into this country over $2,500,000,000 worth of food products which the American farmer is perfectly capable of supplying. I have a list of these products which I may ask to have printed; but, in sum total, they constitute a very large portion of the products of the American farm.

We produce in this country, it is estimated, something like 4,000,000,000 pounds of animal, fish, and vegetable fats, and something like 1,600,000,000 pounds of butterfats. Of course this is an exceedingly important item in the farmer's affairs; and that leaves us about 700,000,000 pounds for exports. Notwithstanding that fact, however, for the last three or four years we have been importing something like 300,000,000 pounds of fats—vegetable fats, but taking the place of those which we produce. There is a large class of business interests in the United States who are interested in securing the importation of these articles. The supply comes from the Asiatic countries, and the amount of the supply is incalculable. The extent to which the vegetable fats could be introduced into this country can only be estimated; but it would absolutely destroy, in my opinion, the home market for the home producer.

According to a statement published in Annals, a very respectable authority, we exported in 1898 food products to the value of $589,988,742. In 1923–24, at a time when the American farmer was hunting for markets, and when he was in that distress which has called for legislation, we imported $150,000,000 worth of farm products in excess of the exports, covering these items to which I shall refer.

Thus, Mr. President, we have reached a time when the most vital concern of the farmer is to preserve the American market for his products. The present tariff act does not do so. I am not undertaking now to assess the blame. The eastern representatives, as I understand, conceded the schedules prepared by those who represented the western area. I am not about to enter upon that dispute. I am only saying that under present conditions, and by reason of the rapid economic changes in the world's affairs, the present bill does not protect the American farmer. It is one of the items—and a very considerable one—in his present distress.

I sat in this Chamber 16 years ago and heard read from the desk a message from a Republican President advocating free trade for farm products and protection to American manufacturing interests. A few days thereafter I witnessed the leadership of the Republican Party turning to the support of the doctrine that we should have imports free which came in competition with the American farmer and protect the products of the manufacturing interests. It is sometimes said duties do not protect the farmer, but the time had arrived when it was thought otherwise.

I pause to read some of the reasons for this betrayal of what had been the doctrine of the party since its organization. Suffice it to say, by way of explanation of what I shall read, that the design and purpose was to reduce the price of farm products. The time had come when the tariff was a protection to the farm products, and, having arrived, the purpose was to open the markets of the United States to importations from all the agricultural regions of the earth, for Canada was only a beginning.

The President in his message said:

> Reciprocity with Canada must necessarily be chiefly confined in its effect on the cost of living to food and forest products. The question of the cost of clothing as affected by duty on textiles and their raw materials, so much mooted, is not within the scope of an agreement with Canada.

The only thing included in the agreement with Canada was that which the farmer produced. Our friends in the East, particularly throughout the New England States, were asking for permission to enter the Canadian market and supply their raw materials and the food with which to feed their employees, and at the same time were asking protection from the Government for their imports. It was the most pronounced, the most startling, and the most cruel surrender of a policy of a party which has ever taken place, to my knowledge, in the history of the United States. It was not only the surrender of a policy but it was the betrayal of a most loyal constituency.

Senator Root, of New York, said:

> Mr. President, there is no one here who believes that there is the least possibility that the people of the United States, until another revolution of sentiment has come, will permit the cost of their living to be increased by the imposition of a duty upon ordinary foodstuffs.
> I have never thought that the duties which were imposed upon farm products were of any real general benefit to the farmer.

Therefore he had always supported it.

> They have been quite indifferent, affecting only several localities here and there, so long as our production ran far ahead of our consumption. But with the increase of our cities as compared with our farming population, and the using up of our waste lands and the fencing in of old cattle ranges and the reduction of the productive power of our lands, we have about come to the point where the continuance of those duties, instead of being a matter of indifference to the people of the country, would result in putting up the cost of food.

What was proposed to be done in that instance by an open agreement is now being effectuated by the present tariff law. At the present time the products are being admitted into the market under a rule which is in violation of the principle of protection, while in this instance they were proposing an open agreement to that effect.

Here is the New England doctrine at that time:

> Massachusetts comes far from feeding itself. In consequence of our extremely small percentage of agricultural workers and the excess of population in proportion to available farm land, the State is mainly dependent on outside sources for its food supply. If, then, we are sure to buy from two-thirds to five-sixths of our food from producers at a distance; if by no possibility we can get whatever advantage might arise from relying on our own farmers to come anywhere near feeding us, no obligation prevents us from seeking to buy in the cheapest market available.
> Extension of Canadian reciprocity in the matter of manufacture is, in our belief, for the present out of the question.
> These will, at least, not be discouraged—

That is, the manufacturers—

> if we can make it possible for our people to buy their food in the cheapest market. If Canada chances to profit by supplying our needs to some small extent, so much the better both for Canada and for ourselves. But there is no reason why we should restrict our new purchases to Canada. If Mexico or Argentina or Australasia can help us out, let us turn to them as well.

This doctrine has never died away. Now I read from a statement made only a few days ago by one of the ablest and most highly respected leaders of Massachusetts:

> What harm would there be in taking in from Canada the products of the farm, the mines, the forests, and the fisheries? Reciprocity isn't new. It is a policy we have tried in part.
> We had a reciprocal trade treaty with Canada from 1854 to 1866 which covered the natural products, and it was abrogated directly after the Civil War for political and not for economic reasons. If that treaty could have been continued, manufacturers of the United States would not now be obliged to put branch factories all over Canada, and we could have played a great part in the development of that country to the north, rich in natural resources, virgin forests, the largest producer of nickel and asbestos, in fact, everything that would help to have built up and strengthened our own industries.

This doctrine was repeated a few nights ago.

Let me pause to say that if the protective policy is not to be regarded, treated, and applied as a great national system, building up our industries and avocations as a whole and furnishing scope for every bent and gift of the genius of man, then it is a subterfuge and a fraud, a special privilege, and an outrage, and should be destroyed.

I am therefore interested in this particular resolution. In so far as it expresses a purpose to secure a parity of rates between manufactured articles and farm products, it expresses a principle which is exceedingly vital at this time. It does more; it declares for a permanent policy with reference to agriculture.

At the present time, as I have stated, we are importing a large amount of food products. If I had my way about it, so long as the agricultural condition in this country continues anything as it is, I would devote the American market exclusively to the products of the American farmer as to those products which the American farmer is capable of producing. It is true, Mr. President, that we are exporters of wheat—and that is one of the large items—but it should not mislead us into the belief that we are exporters of a large amount of other farm products of which we are now importers. It should not mislead us into the belief that as to a great number of these farm products we would receive a direct benefit from an increase of the tariff duties.

Let us look at wheat for a moment, and take a glance into the future. It is true that we are now exporting something like 250,000,000 bushels of wheat, but that large amount of exportation is brought about by conditions superimposed by the World War. In 1898 we were exporters of some 500,000,000 bushels of wheat. From 1900 to 1914 the exports went down until they amounted to about 100,000,000 bushels a year, one year dropping down below 50,000,000 bushels. It was estimated by people who had made a study of the subject of wheat that at the then rate of trend by 1918, had it not been for the World War, we would have been no longer exporters of wheat.

It must be borne in mind that Canada can at this time produce one-half of the export demand of the world in wheat. It must be borne in mind that Argentina can increase her acreage ten times what it is now. We know that Canada and Argentina can produce wheat cheaper than we can. In the first place, they have no immigration bar. They have their cheap labor. They have their new land. They have their lands yet unoccupied to be occupied in the future. I venture to believe that Canada and Argentina, under proper stimulus, can to-day supply the export demand of the world in wheat. They will not do it to-morrow, or the next day, or next year, but under the stimulus which is to come, in my opinion, they will soon be supplying a sufficient amount of wheat to satisfy that demand.

In addition to that, we have Uruguay, southern Brazil, to a limited extent western Europe, and we have Rumania, Australia, and New Zealand. We have, in addition to that, Mr. President, the fact that our agricultural interests are not the only agricultural interests which are in a distressed condition. I know of but one possible exception to the statement that throughout the entire world all governments are now interested in protecting their agricultural interests, in stimulating the production of agriculture, and we have to meet the future with the understanding that other governments are seeking to protect their agricultural interests and to build them up, as we are seeking to do.

In addition, there is Russia. Prior to the war Russia was exporting some 250,000,000 bushels of wheat. Since the World War she has exported very little—I think not to exceed thirty or forty million bushels of wheat.

Russia is coming back. There seem to be those who think that because we do not recognize Russia, that takes Russia off the face of the earth. Russia is there, occupying one-sixth of the earth's surface, with the greatest natural undeveloped resources in the world, with a people naturally industrious, home loving, and law-abiding. Give the Russian peasant the modern agricultural implements, as he is now buying them, and Russia will not only put her 250,000,000 bushels of wheat in the market but she will add to it, in all probability, a hundred or a hundred and fifty million bushels.

Mr. President, while we are now an exporter of wheat, and that matter is here for our consideration, we must understand that the time is rapidly approaching when the American market will in all probability be asking for wheat on the outside, and if there is anything that the western man ought to contend for, it is that there be embodied into this law as soon as it can be revised, and in all other laws, the fact that the agriculturists must stand upon a parity with the manufacturers of the United States.

One thing more, Mr. President, and I shall not detain the Senate longer. I said that the agricultural interests throughout the world were suffering from depression the same as our agriculture. It will be remembered that last summer the Premier of Great Britain visited Canada. He was frank as to the purpose of his visit. It was for the purpose of strengthening the ties of the British Empire, economically, politically, and, as he said, spiritually. He asked the Canadians to purchase their manufactured goods from Great Britain, and to purchase what agricultural or food products they did not produce themselves in the Tropics, within the British Empire; in other words, to trade within the British Empire, build up within the British Empire, and exclude the outside world as a matter of trade and economics, so far as practicable to do so.

I refer to that not for the purpose of criticism, or finding fault with the British Premier. He was doing what in my opinion any patriot will do with reference to his own country. I refer to it for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that we must face the future with the understanding that not only are other countries putting up tariff walls throughout the world, but every effort is being made to preserve the markets for themselves, to build them up among themselves, and to build up their industries and their economic strength within themselves rather than in the outside world.

Mr. Garvin, the great editor of the London Observer, states it in a paragraph. He says in his editorial of October 17:

> Thinkers of all parties in this country now know that what they need is a clear, economic policy for the Empire. Any method on which we can generally agree must be more useful in practice than any method on which we hopelessly differ. Imperial preference, as now applied on both sides, is of proved value to the mother country and capable of further but limited extension. * * * The empire is an endless treasure house of unlocked riches. There is nothing required for the sustenance and prosperity of man that it does not abundantly possess or could amply produce. * * * Our more recent investment in Anglo-Persian oil is turning out handsomely. The last few days have reminded us that the industry in Malaya, which provides half the rubber output of the world, was founded by a single individual, with the help of Kew Gardens. * * * A well-organized protectionist country will easily beat out of the field an ill-organized, free-imported country.

Many writers and students of ability have discussed this subject, how Europe is building up her economic life and its effect upon this country. I shall quote briefly from only two—Mr. Simonds, the noted correspondent, and Mr. Clark.

The action of the other nations is referred to, Mr. President, as an economic war against the United States. In a sense, that is an accurate statement; but I do not regard it as an economic war in the sense that it is being carried on for the purpose of punishing, or with the spirit of antipathy or a spirit of revenge. I regard it as an economic policy which they have thought to be in their interest—to build up their home industries, to supply those home industries with their own farm products, to live within themselves, and to have in the future contests that economic strength which they did not have in the last contest. It is not for us to criticize or complain. It is only for us to observe and shape our policy in the light of facts.

Mr. Simonds, in a statement under date of November 14, 1926, says:

> I venture to say that under all else in the present tendency toward combination between European people lies the very definite idea of the United States just as the passionate hatred of the United States is at the moment the dominating idea in the minds of millions of Europeans of many nationalities. * * * The fact remains that Europe is moving combination to a degree and in a fashion which would have seemed incredible three years ago, and that in my judgment, the driving force is not any new spirit of peace or any moral revolution, but a definite reaction to what it conceives to be the American menace.

Mr. Evans Clark, a student of European economic conditions, says:

> The new French tariff, which occupies the attention of Washington and Paris, is the symbol of a new alignment in world affairs. The possibility of a new Europe looms on the horizon; a Europe that is no longer primarily the market for the manufacturers of America, England, and Germany, but a great industrial complex on its own account bidding for its share of the trade of the world; a Europe whose groupings and alliances follow the line of economic rather than diplomatic or military advantage. * * * The economic entente of Germany, France, and Belgium is already an accomplished fact. Enemies 10 years ago, France and Germany have formed a working partnership in industry and trade that is sealed by a dozen different pacts and ties in Belgium with them with a powerful natural unit of production.

Again, in another article in the New York Times, he says:

> Europe has come back. Considering the chaos of even five years ago the achievement is notable. * * * Allowing for all reservations, for all doubt and uncertainties, it may be set down as established that Europe is stronger industrially to-day than it has ever been before. * * * Economics have succeeded diplomacy, and politics is Europe's chief public concern. * * * In the first place, the machinery is the most modern and efficiently operated in the world. New woolen and cotton and linen mills, new sugar plants, new iron and steel works, newly equipped mines and heavy machinery plants have sprung up on the ruins of the old. * * * Europe faces the world to-day re-equipped and with a capacity for production far in excess of pre-war days. Now, that she has it, what is she going to do with it? * * * The peace of Versailles may have stilled the guns of Europe, but it opened another conflict—a struggle between the nations for economic advantage such as has never been seen before. The immediate objects of conflict are the markets of the world, and its battle lines are further flung than Flanders' fields.

Whether it is a wise policy or an unwise policy, when we view the world as a whole, philosophers and theorists may discuss. As a practical fact it is here. As a practical policy it obtains throughout the world. I am interested in the tariff, therefore, as a means of building up and maintaining the home market in the United States and then dedicating that home market to the products of the American farmer. If we can give the home market to the American farmer as he is able to supply it and then protect him against exorbitant and unjust exactions in his effort to reach that market, we shall have gone far in solving the great farm problem.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I wish to make only a few observations upon the pending resolution. I am very glad the resolution was modified as it appears before us to-day.

I have been at all times a believer in the protection of American industry. I find that under the Underwood Tariff Act there was very little difference in the percentage of duties paid upon all of the imports as compared with those paid under the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act, the one being a Democratic measure enacted by a Democratic Congress and the other a Republican measure enacted by a Republican Congress. I think it is therefore safe to assume that in general the entire country is on a nonpartisan basis so far as the system of protection is concerned. The controversy seems to revolve about the question of whether tariff protection shall be uniform, whether all industries shall enjoy the protection of the system, or whether there shall be a maladjustment of the schedule in the effectuation of the American system of protection.

I find the difference in percentages of duties paid under the Underwood tariff operating from 1914 to 1919 and the Fordney-McCumber tariff operating from 1921, when the emergency tariff act passed after the war became effective, up to and ending with the fiscal year 1926, to have been about 5 per cent of the duties paid upon all imports being imported under the two systems of tariff protection.

I desire now to submit a few observations upon the economic situation in the United States as it is now, so far as information is available, and as it has been since the passage of the emergency tariff act of 1921 and the Fordney-McCumber Act of 1922.

It is generally conceded that in this period of time we have had the greatest production of wealth that the United States has ever experienced. Never before in the history of the country has there been so much wealth produced as there has been since 1921. When we come to ascertain how this wealth has been distributed we get some very interesting information. I call attention to a statement made by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] on January 9, last. In the course of his remarks he said:

> Unemployment is small as compared with 1921.

He was speaking in defense of the McCumber-Fordney tariff and its operation upon industries and the general welfare of the United States. What do the actual figures of the Government show about employment at the time of which the Senator from Utah was speaking, as compared with the year 1921? We find in a report of the Secretary of Commerce, in a periodical called Survey of Current Business, issued for February, 1927, that from 1920 to 1926 employment in the United States decreased 18 per cent. In other words, when the Senator from Utah said that employment is better now than it was in 1921 he contradicted the figures of the Department of Commerce which last February stated there were 18 per cent less people employed in 1926 than there were in 1920.

The Senator from Utah said the percentage of commercial failures was not as great in 1926 and 1927 as in 1914. I do not know what they were in 1914. When the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate conducted their hearings on the McFadden banking bill in 1926, Mr. Willis, who had been engaged by a group of bankers in the United States and given a large sum of money to be used for the purpose of investigating the banking situation and the commercial situation in the United States, made the statement that since 1920 we had had more business failures and more banks closing, with greater total assets wiped out, than ever before in the history of the United States. That statement was made based upon information gathered by a group of experts whom he had employed and set to work at the request of the group of bankers who wanted to get the information.

The Senator from Utah said that production has increased. That is true. He also said that wages had maintained a high level. What are the actual facts as revealed by the Government's own figures? In the same periodical issued by the Department of Commerce, Survey of Current Business, for February, 1927, it will be found stated that from 1920 to 1926 the total average monthly pay roll for the United States decreased 30 per cent. In other words, labor in the aggregate throughout the United States in 1926 was receiving 30 per cent less than it did in 1920. Never before in the history of the country had there been such a great production of wealth. What part did labor get out of it? According to the figures given labor got 30 per cent less than it did in 1920.

What did labor produce? The Bureau of Labor Statistics in its report for 1927 reported that the quantity of manufactured goods per man employed increased 34 per cent in the last seven years. That is to say, the average workingman in the mills and factories of to-day, under a system of mass production, is giving the employer a yearly production 34 per cent greater, turning out one-third more than he did seven years ago. Here we have a situation where the average man, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, working in the mills and factories is producing one-third more than he was producing seven years ago, and yet Secretary Hoover's statistics show that labor in the aggregate has been reduced in its average monthly pay roll 30 per cent from 1920 to 1926.

What share of this prosperity has the farmer received? At a time when the farmer was exporting a greater amount of agricultural products than he had ever done before in the history of the United States, with the exception of one or two years during the war period, the reports of the Department of Commerce and the Department of Agriculture showed that from 1920 to 1923, of the 18 major agricultural products, we averaged three times more in exports than we did before the war.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLAINE in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. I was deeply interested in the Senator's statement with regard to the average wage paid to employees in the industrial activities of the country. The Senator will bear in mind that we are now discussing a resolution which calls for a reduction of tariff rates. Does he think that a reduction in tariff rates would be of benefit to those employees who in his opinion are now receiving less than they did five or six years ago?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator evidently has not been listening to my remarks, because I am at the present time addressing my remarks to the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] upon the floor of the Senate when he was speaking of the universal prosperity that has been spreading over the country as the result of the operations of the McCumber-Fordney tariff bill.

Mr. McLEAN. But the Senator is addressing himself to the pending resolution, I assume.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. My time is occupied upon the resolution. I shall come to the resolution after I shall have finished with the statement of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McLEAN. I was wondering whether the figures which the Senator stated indicated to him that a reduction in the tariff rates applying to those industries where wages have been reduced, would enable the employers to pay higher wages?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am calling the attention of the Senate to these figures to show that under the high tariff schedules in industry, which we were told had been enacted for the purpose of helping the American wage earner to get more out of the wealth which he helps to produce, that the Government's own figures show that the total average pay roll of the country had been reduced 30 per cent during its operations.

Mr. McLEAN. I think the Senator understands my question, but if he does not care to answer it that is for him to decide.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As a matter of fact, I did not understand it as a question but understood him to make a statement.

Mr. McLEAN. I put it in the form of a question. Does the Senator think that a reduction of tariff rates on these industries will put the employers in a position where they can deal more liberally with their employees?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. My observation has been to the effect that the tariff has very little to do with wages, apparently, and that view is borne out by the reports of the Department of Commerce, and, of course, the fact is that wages have been reduced.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator is in favor of the adoption of this resolution which calls for a reduction in tariff rates for the purpose of helping some one, and I assume from the debate that preceded his remarks it was to help the farmer.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Before I have taken as much time as the Senator from Connecticut has upon this resolution I hope to make myself clear.

Mr. McLEAN. I hope the Senator will, though he has not done so up to now. I was asking the Senator a question. He has adverted to men employed in the factories, and has stated they are not getting what they ought to receive, in view of the profits that their employers have made.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I did not make any such statement, Mr. President. I object to the Senator from Connecticut assuming to make my speech for me.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator says that the employees are not receiving as much as they formerly did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield further to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do.

Mr. McLEAN. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Minnesota should correct his statement. I do not want to misrepresent him, and the Senator knows that. Some employees are not receiving as much as they did. Does the Senator from Minnesota think that a cut in the tariff rates will be of any benefit to those employees?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not know. Let us find out.

Mr. McLEAN. I should find out, I think, before I voted for this resolution.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The increase of the rates in the tariff evidently did not increase the wages of the employees. It is evident that that increase in the tariff schedules reduced their wages.

Mr. McLEAN. There is no evidence of that.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have just read from the report of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. McLEAN. That report does not state that any reduction in the wages of employees is due to the tariff.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I did not say the tariff reduced the wages of individual wage earners. I simply stated the figures of the Department of Commerce show that the total average pay roll had been reduced by 30 per cent in six years. If the Senator from Connecticut finds fault with that statement, he can not quarrel with me, but he must go to the Secretary of the Department of Commerce, who gave out that statement last February.

Mr. McLEAN. I am not finding fault with the Senator's statement; I am trying to find out whether he believes that the adoption of this resolution will improve the situation. The resolution calls for a reduction in the tariff.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Has the Senator from Connecticut finished?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; I have finished.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator has finished, I desire to go on with my remarks.

Mr. McLEAN. Apparently the Senator from Minnesota has also finished so far as his disposition to reply to my question is concerned.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator from Connecticut, I am sure, will conscientiously admit that he is in a cantankerous mood this afternoon. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I understood the Senator to say that, according to the report from which he read, the sum totol of wages paid to employees is less, indicating that there was a lowering of wages.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; that the total average pay roll had been reduced by 30 per cent, according to the report of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. FESS. I understand that 10 per cent fewer men were employed and that they produced 25 per cent more of products. That would be a reduction of the wages, not because there was a lowering but the ratio would be less through the efficiency of labor; that is, less labor, because of its efficiency, has produced more wealth. I think that is the statement of the Commerce Department.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As I read the report—and I have a copy of it here, or a transcript of what the department stated—the average laborer in the factory, as reported last February, is producing 34 per cent more of the finished products than he was producing seven years ago.

Mr. FESS. That is my understanding.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The employees are producing more. That is not only, in my opinion, due to the increased efficiency of labor but to the vastly greater use of new labor-saving machinery.

Mr. FESS. Yes; the Senator from Minnesota is right as to that.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There can be no quarrel upon that point. There are several factors which enter into this question, but the fact remains that the total pay roll has been reduced. Of that part of wealth that is being produced labor, as such, does not receive such a large percentage as it did in 1920.

Mr. FESS. I am wondering whether we draw the same conclusion. A less number of laborers produce a greater amount of wealth.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Does that mean that the fewer number, although increasing production, are, as individuals, getting less than they previously did?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It means that a fewer number of employees are getting less than a 10 per cent greater number previously got.

Mr. FESS. Would that mean that the individual laborer is receiving less or all the laborers are receiving less in the aggregate?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I can not speak from knowledge.

Mr. FESS. That is the point to me.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator let me give an answer to the Senator's question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In just a moment I will yield. For instance, last year on the iron range of Minnesota we mined and shipped out between one and two million tons of iron ore more than we did in 1921.

Mr. FESS. With the same number of workers?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; with 6,000 men less employed.

Mr. FESS. That is the point.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The individual workers who produced that additional ore with machinery did not as individuals receive any higher wage, but I think it will be found that as individuals they received about the same wage. Labor on the range, of course, in the aggregate, as the result of there not being so many men employed, receive a great deal less.

In Detroit last week I was told that in the painting of automobiles, with a new device for spraying paint, one man can paint more automobiles than five or six men used to paint.

Mr. FESS. That is the Duco method.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes. The men engaged in that work used to get 60 or 70 cents an hour, and I understand the one man who now does the work that formerly used to be done by five or six men likewise receives from 60 to 70 cents an hour.

Mr. FESS. I have understood that they spray a car 11 times and do it as expeditiously as painting it once under the old method.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which shows that in the highly protected woolen mills wages have actually decreased, while the number of hours have increased. I mean by that that the average wage received by the individual worker was less in 1926 than it was in 1920 or 1924. I call this to the attention of Senators, because the defense and excuse, if not the reason, for maintaining the enormously high tariff rates on manufactured woolens is for the good of labor; but the records of the Bureau of Labor Statistics show that the average individual earnings of the laborers in the woolen mills was less in 1926 than it was in 1920 or 1924.

Mr. McLEAN. Is it the Senator's view that a reduction of the tariff would help the situation?

Mr. DILL. I think a reduction of the tariff would help to lower the cost of those products to the consumer.

Mr. McLEAN. That is not the question I asked.

Mr. DILL. Oh, well, the Senator asked me a question. Let me answer in my own way.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to have an answer to the question which I asked.

Mr. DILL. It would not help the excessive dividends and profits of the woolen manufacturer.

Mr. McLEAN. They are not enjoying any such profits.

Mr. DILL. But it would help the farmer who is almost starving to death, because he has to pay such enormous prices for what he has to buy.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator has read figures as to the wages of the employees of the woolen mills and he finds that they have been reduced.

Mr. DILL. Yes; and in the face of the high tariff given the manufacturers.

Mr. McLEAN. Is it the Senator's idea that a reduction of the tariff would enable the employers to pay higher wages?

Mr. DILL. Oh, no; I do not think the tariff has anything to do with the wages paid.

Mr. McLEAN. Then the Senator does not think that a reduction of the tariff on woolen goods would benefit the employees?

Mr. DILL. I do not think it would hurt the employers and I know it would benefit the great mass of the people who use woolen goods.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator does not think it would hurt the employers?

Mr. DILL. No; because they have such enormous profits and dividends now.

Mr. McLEAN. They have not been enjoying profits for some time past.

Mr. DILL. I have not read the latest reports, but in recent years, since the last tariff bill was enacted into law, their profits have been very large.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not know where the Senator got his figures.

Mr. DILL. Perhaps in the last year their profits have not been so large, but my point is that the tariff does not bring the laborer better wages.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, when I finish I will ask the Senator from Connecticut to explain where wages have been increased at all by the high tariff; and when I say that I say it as one who believes in the protective tariff.

Mr. McLEAN. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I say when I finish I shall give the Senator an opportunity, or the Senator will have the opportunity without my giving it to him, to explain how wages have been increased by the high tariff.

Mr. McLEAN. I am very much obliged to the Senator. It can easily be done.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, what do the Government's own figures show has been the part of agriculture during the past six years while we have had this great era of prosperity about which so much has been said? The Department of Agriculture in one of its reports shows that during the six-year period my State has had a loss in income of $1,000,000,000. In the report of the subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee for February 16 to February 24, 1926, inclusive, a table shows that from 1920 to 1925 3,500 banks in the United States, with total assets of $1,600,000,000, were closed and 95 per cent of those banks were conducting business in agricultural communities. The Department of Agriculture also shows in reports issued by it that the shrinkage in income to agriculture from 1919—I do not think that, perhaps, it is fair to take 1919, because that was a year when prices were high and there was inflation—but from 1920 to 1926 the report of the Department of Agriculture shows that the income from agricultural pursuits in the United States decreased 42 per cent. So we have from the Government's own figures a showing that during this period of time there was a decrease of income to agriculture of 42 per cent, and that the total average monthly pay roll for labor decreased 30 per cent, or a total of 72 per cent. What do the Government's own figures show has been the share which industry has been receiving during the same period? We have that from the Department of Commerce, also.

On page 126 of the February issue of the Summary of Current Business, Secretary Hoover has summarized the increase in value of industrial shares. Table 102, stock and bonds, shows that the average price in dollars per share for the 25 leading industrials on the New York Stock Exchange in 1922 was $98.50. In 1926 they averaged $165.70—a four-year increase of $67.12 per share, on the average. In other words, the value of industrial stocks increased 70 per cent, as compared to a decline in farm values of 35 per cent and farm income of 42 per cent, in seven years.

Here we have an economic situation—and I prefer to discuss these things from an economic rather than a political point of view—where we have produced more wealth than ever before in the history of the United States during a period of half a dozen years. We have produced more wealth upon the farm, we have produced more wealth in industry, and still the producers on the farm suffered a reduction in income of 42 per cent in the aggregate. The producers in the mills and the factories during the same period of time suffered a loss in the aggregate of 30 per cent in income, and the 25 leading industrial corporations, according to Mr. Hoover, had an increase in value of their shares of 70 per cent—just 2 per cent less than agriculture and labor lost.

I think that is a situation that demands the most earnest attention of every Member of Congress and every American citizen. It is a very astonishing condition. I am not going to say that this is all due to a high protective tariff. I would not make such a rash statement. I do not know to what extent it is affected by the tariff; but I think we ought to find out.

The distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who has at all times, so far as I know anything about his record, been a high protective-tariff defender, said the other day, "We have discovered that the tariff on agricultural products has not been effective."

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] either yesterday or the day before stated to the Senate that he had given the subject very careful consideration and investigation, and had reached the conclusion that the tariff amounted, I think, to about 8 per cent of the difficulties now suffered by the agricultural interests of the country. It may have been 12 per cent; it was either 8 or 12 per cent, I think.

That was the result of his careful investigation. Of course, I could not agree with him even as to the 8 or 12 per cent. We can speculate as much as we please; but it is my impression that if we did not have prosperity in other sections of the country the condition of the farmer would be very much worse than it is now.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Of course, that is a matter of speculation and opinion, and everyone is entitled to his own opinion about it. I am merely calling the Senator's attention, as shown by the Department of Commerce, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and the Department of Agriculture, to what has happened to agriculture, what has happened to labor, and what has been agriculture's share of this prosperity.

Mr. President, I may say that I find that a former distinguished Senator from Minnesota, Hon. Knute Nelson—far more distinguished than the Senator who has the honor of addressing the Senate to-day—was here when the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act was passed. He said, among other things, in speaking of the tariff on agricultural products:

> I suppose it is to make a big showing for the farmer, to make him believe that he will get all the excess duty in one form or another, and to make it easy for him to swallow the high duties on manufactured goods.

He also said:

> It is evident, it seems to me, that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], in his zeal to put such an immense tariff on agricultural products, higher than we have ever had before, higher than there ever was any necessity for, has done so simply to oil the protection machine for the woolen schedule and some of the other schedules in the bill.

He said:

> I am very sorry that the committee have gone to such extremes as they have. I had hoped, Mr. President, that protection would not run mad as it has done.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, but the Senator has reached the conclusion that the rates in the Fordney-McCumber bill were only 5 per cent higher than those in the Underwood bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is, in the aggregate.

Mr. McLEAN. In the aggregate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not mean to say that they were uniformly that throughout the two bills. My predecessor, the Senator from Minnesota, who was here at the time and whom I was quoting, said that they had gone mad. I take it that he meant on certain schedules, and not in the aggregate.

I do not care what kind of a price level you have in this country, whether you have an inflated one under an inflation of the credit structure and under the high protective tariff, or a low one, provided you have it uniform and maintain it at all times. Then every one is on an equal basis. Every one is on the same price level. But when you have a situation where the dollar of agriculture is down here and the dollar of the manufacturer is up there, you have a maladjustment that affects the distribution of wealth; and, as the Department of Commerce and the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Department of Agriculture showed, when wealth is produced as it has been produced here in the past six years the distribution has been absolutely unjust to agriculture and to labor.

I want to refer again to what the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] said the other day when he said, "We have discovered now that the tariff on agricultural products is not effective."

In my opinion, if an investigation under this resolution should show that some of these schedules are entirely too high, they ought to be reduced. If some schedules are too low, they ought to be raised. If any schedule for agricultural products is to be effective—as the Senator from Indiana admitted and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] this afternoon admitted that they are not, now—some way must be found to make these tariff schedules effective for agriculture.

I do not claim that this resolution embodies any complete remedy at all. I never claimed for the McNary-Haugen bill that it carried a complete and adequate remedy for agricultural relief; but it was at least an attempt to make the tariff effective, and I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that while it might not have been as long a stride in the right direction as could be taken I fail to see where the Senator from Connecticut has pointed out a better way to go in finding a solution.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say a few words about something we have heard a great deal about, and that is the so-called sectional point of view.

We of the Northwest have been charged with having not a national point of view but a sectional point of view. The distinguished Senator from Connecticut this afternoon admitted that, so far as he was concerned—and I want to compliment him for his honesty in that—environment affected the point of view. I think it applies to all men. That is perfectly natural. They are all human. But we of the West in the last few years have been accused of being unduly sectional in our point of view, and the general impression seems to have been carried out in propaganda that that is peculiar to our section of the country.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the Senator will realize that, inasmuch as we have different points of view—and I think we have had expressed here in the Chamber at least three distinct schools of thought on the tariff question since this subject was brought up—we can not all be right; and it is very important that we should avoid adopting a wrong course in this matter. We can not all be right; we may all be wrong; but it seems to me very important that before we disturb the complex and colossal industries of this country by a revision of the tariff we ought to avoid the wrong course if possible.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Before we have a definite point of view, let us get some facts. That is what I am trying to give to the Senator.

Mr. McLEAN. I have not received any yet. I am frank to say that I have listened here for three days, and up to date I have not heard a single fact stated in this body that would warrant the adoption of the resolution under consideration.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator some time ago asked some Senator here to have faith in his Government. I am simply giving him some figures from his Government.

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator will pardon me, I will call his attention to one fact that was brought to the attention of the Senate yesterday by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

His wife bought an aluminum utensil of some kind. She wanted to preserve some fruit. I think he called it a pot. She paid $4.55 for it. The Senator from New York, as a profound student of economics, told the Senate what tax she had to pay on that utensil. Eleven cents a pound on the raw material made 33 cents. He took a dollar off from the price she paid, $4.55, which resulted in $3.55. That, in his opinion, carried an ad valorem tariff of 55 per cent. That made a tax of $1.95. He added the 33 cents to the $1.95, and made a tax of $2.28 as the tax his wife had to pay on that utensil.

Mr. JOHNSON. How much was that, please?

Mr. McLEAN. Two dollars and twenty-eight cents.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that any man who undertakes to discuss the tariff question in this Chamber ought to be sufficiently considerate of his own reputation to avoid such a statement.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. To whom is the Senator referring?

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. I am sorry he is not in the Chamber.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If it is all the same, I will ask that the Senator be given an opportunity to answer the Senator from New York in his own time.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator rather challenged my attempt to inform the Senate as to what fact had been introduced in support of the friends of this resolution.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield a moment, I wish to say that if the distinguished Senator from Connecticut had remained in the Chamber when he knew that certain schedules were being discussed just a few moments ago, he would have had an ample opportunity to ask questions and to answer questions. Now, I should like to hear the distinguished Senator from Connecticut explain the aluminum schedules and defend those aluminum schedules.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator that I have to consume agricultural products; I could not occupy a seat in this Chamber if I did not. I retired from the Chamber a few moments to partake of some pea soup. I do not know what the tariff is on peas; but that was the excuse for my absence from the Chamber. I have tried to be here all the time this matter has been under discussion.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Whatever the tariff is, the Senator from Indiana will inform the Senator that it has not any effect on agricultural products; so it does not make any difference what the tariff on pea soup is.

Mr. McLEAN. But I thought the Senator wanted the tariff raised on agricultural products.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I said we want it made effective.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not know whether it would be effective to raise the tariff on peas or not. Whatever the Senator wants to do, I am with him so far as agricultural products are concerned.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thank the Senator for that.

Mr. McLEAN. To return to aluminum, of course, every Member of this body who knows anything about the subject understands that the ad valorem tariff would be imposed upon the foreign value of this utensil about which the Senator from New York spoke, which, as near as I can ascertain, would be less than $1 on the imported similar article.

So, if you take 55 per cent of $1, you will get the ad valorem duty on this article. The Senator from New York was only about 66⅔ per cent wrong. That is doing pretty well for anybody on the other side of the Chamber who undertakes to discuss the tariff question.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, wisdom and honesty both dwell on the Republican side.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut has said that he is ready to raise the tariff rates upon agricultural products.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWELL. How can we do it unless we get at tariff legislation?

Mr. McLEAN. We can not do it by lowering the rates on other articles.

Mr. HOWELL. Yes; but this resolution proposes to provide more nearly a parity for agricultural products. A parity can be secured by lowering the rates on nonagricultural products, or raising the rates on agricultural products, in the cases where it would be effective.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWELL. How are we going to do this unless we get at the matter and act as this pending resolution suggests?

Mr. McLEAN. Go right to the Tariff Commission and ask for a 50 per cent raise. You have had it on two articles already. Go down and ask for a raise on the other product, the tariff on which you want increased. Do not come here and complain that you can not do anything until you try the remedy that is already in your hands.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, blackstrap molasses, upon which there is a tariff of one-sixth of a cent a gallon, has put out of annual consumption in the production of alcohol about 50,000,000 bushels of corn in this country. Suppose you raise the tariff one-half of one-sixth of a cent. Would that aid in bringing about parity?

Mr. McLEAN. I do not know, but we tried to raise it when we revised the law in 1922, and the agricultural bloc insisted that they were using blackstrap molasses to put into cattle feed, and they would not stand for it. That is the reason why we did not give them an adequate rate on blackstrap molasses.

Mr. HOWELL. Did the Finance Committee investigate the uses of this molasses?

Mr. McLEAN. No. As to agricultural products we largely took the say-so of the gentlemen who represented the agricultural bloc, I will admit, and gave them all they asked for.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it is well recognized that blackstrap molasses, which was imported into this country last year to the extent of nearly 300,000,000 gallons, is used by distillers for the production of alcohol, and the distillers were interested in this rate and secured the low-tariff rate of one-sixth of 1 cent a gallon on this product.

It is a further fact that it takes 5.6 gallons of blackstrap molasses to equal one bushel of corn in the production of alcohol. In other words, on that basis there was less than one cent protection on a bushel of corn, and it put out of use 50,000,000 bushels annually in this country for the production of alcohol. It is true we produced about 2,700,000,000 bushels of corn last year, and only about 10 per cent of that goes into the market and is dealt in as cash corn, or about 270,000,000 bushels. But 50,000,000 bushels of corn taken out of that demand is of tremendous moment, and undoubtedly affected the price of corn in this country. If you will look at the price index number of corn you will find that for most of the time during the last six and a half years corn has brought about the same price as in 1913. It is one of the aims of the pending resolution to nonagricultural products have averaged 64 per cent higher than in 1913. It is one of the aims of the pending resolution to correct such tariff injustices to agriculture as this.

Mr. McLEAN. I have no controversy with any Senator who is advocating an increase in the tariff rates.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If I have the floor, I shall ask the Chair's protection that I may have a few minutes in order that I may conclude my remarks. I am very thankful for the information that has been furnished by the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Connecticut.

I want to return to the subject on which I started to make some observations a few minutes ago—that is, the charge that all in the Northwest are afflicted with what is looked upon as an undesirable complex, a local or sectional political point of view, because we have been charged with that, and I want to present some evidence to show that that disease, if it be a disease, is not peculiar to the Northwest.

I have here a manuscript sent out by an organization that calls itself the New England Council, which sent a questionnaire to the Members of Congress in the House and Senate from New England asking them what they could look for from Congress for New England this year. I have here the answer of the New England bloc to the New England Council. I find that one Member of Congress said, in answer to the questionnaire:

> I would say that the one thing in Congress to which New England should give special attention is the matter of so-called farm relief. Practically all the proposals seriously urged by the western farm organizations mean a higher price of food in the industrial communities of New England.

He was speaking, of course, of the McNary-Haugen bill in particular. He was opposed to it, because, he said, it would raise the price of food in the industrial sections.

Mr. McLEAN. Did I understand the Senator to say that the author of that article was in favor of the McNary-Haugen bill?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; opposed to it.

Mr. McLEAN. As usual, coming from New England, he was a very sensible man.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. He was looking out for New England; and when we try to do something for the Northwest we are accused of lacking in national point of view and being local-minded. I am simply bringing this to the attention of the Senate to show that if that is an undesirable complex it is not peculiar to the Northwest.

Here is the reply of another member of the New England bloc to the New England Council. He says:

> I think New England is interested in maintaining adequate customs duties and in the elimination of the estate tax.

I found that one member of the New England bloc expressed great concern about very many things. I quote from the reply of one. He said:

> There will be countless items in the appropriation bills that are important for particular New England communities, such as those having to do with river and harbor improvements, public buildings, navy yards, etc., but I think that you can count upon the representatives of the communities concerned to look after them and to enlist help from home should it prove necessary.

Nearly every one starts out with the statement that New England must be wide awake and look after its own interests. One man stated that it was very important that they should organize and cooperate. He said:

> With a little organized cooperation on the part of the various industries whose products are on the free list and of the commercial organizations of the regions affected, I believe that the Ways and Means Committee could be induced to take up this question—

Of raising tariff schedules.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator has used several times the expression "the New England bloc."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator explain what he means by that? That is a new idea to me. I had never heard that there was one. In fact, I have several times wished that there was one. The trouble with most people from New England is that they are all individuals and can not be forced into the confines of a bloc. Will the Senator be so good as to explain?

Mr. McMASTER. I will suggest to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, if he wants to ascertain something about the New England bloc, that he examine practically every roll call in the Senate, it would not make any difference whether on the election of a page or on the adoption of a tariff system, an important thing or an insignificant thing, and he will find that all New England Senators are always voting alike, with very rare exceptions.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish that were true, Mr. President.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am sure the Senator from Connecticut will agree with me when I say that it is not necessary for the Senator to ask me about anything concerning New England, the part of the country that has been dedicated to the bean and the cod—

> Where the Lowells speak only to Cabots,
> And the Cabots speak only to God.

Here is the reply of another distinguished Member of Congress from New England, writing to the New England Council, which seems to be the central body. He said:

> A hostile feeling toward New England is more or less prevalent in Congress. For the past 50 years New England has played a most important part and secured many advantages.

I want to say that I admit that New England has played an important part, and in most respects every American is proud of New England. When we come to discuss the economic situation affecting the tariff, the condition of agriculture, and the distribution of wealth as reflected in the reports of the Government, in some things we have to differ from New England and on this occasion I am attempting to show that while we have been accused of trying to do a little something for our own people, and that to some seems to be an undesirable point of view, I am trying to show that New England has been trying to follow that course for a long time and they admit it.

He said:

> I do not intend to introduce politics into your deliberations.

Of course not. They only want to see what they can get out of Congress this year, but they do not like to bring politics into their deliberations.

> But merely state the fact that it is of paramount importance that we should have in the White House and in other offices men of ability to defend New England's interests and the power to secure and retain legislation of a helpful nature.

I do not find any fault with that. New England wants to look out for itself, but when New England is feeding her industrial population at our boarding house and refuses to pay the cost of production, I think we have a right to complain. The only thing we ask them to do is to pay us for what they eat. Here we find a distinguished Member of the New England bloc in Congress writing to the New England Council and saying that he is opposed to farm legislation that would increase the cost of food to the industrial sections of New England. I have been in communities where if a man did not pay his board bill they called him various names.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator explain before he gets through why he objects to the action taken by the New England Council in asking the Representatives from the New England States what they think of important measures before the Congress affecting that section of the country, and their frank answers? Why does he object to that?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I am not objecting at all. I am simply stating it as a fact. I said I did not blame New England. I am only pointing out that they are doing and have been doing for a long time what we have been accused of doing, but when we tried to do it in our humble way we were accused of lacking patriotism, lacking a national viewpoint, being provincial. We are simply beginning to follow in the footsteps of New England, which have made New England so prosperous at the expense of the country. We want some of the wealth we have produced. We want to be paid for the food we send to you to feed your people. All we ask is to be paid the cost of production, to be put on an economic level with the people of New England. Is there anything wrong about that?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President; only the Senator's remark that that is something which has been going on in New England for a long time and that he had learned it from New England, does not seem to me to be borne out by the fact that the recent meeting of the New England Council from which he is quoting is quite a new thing, and that New England is apparently acting in self-defense and has been driven into that position by the fact that she is not so prosperous as the Senator thinks she is.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If this is a new organization, I take it that it has been formed recently, because they have never been in danger yet of paying their board bill. There is a feeling now that the agricultural sections of the country are going to collect and I assume that if, as the Senator said, this is an organization of self-defense, he means it is an organization to protect them against this new demand that they shall pay for the cost of production of the food which they eat.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh no; that was not the object of the origin of that organization. The object of the origin was the fact that they found there was unemployment and they were being called upon to meet competition, that the mills were being closed because tariff rates were not high enough to afford the protection against the rejuvenation in Germany, that many mills manufacturing woolen goods were being put out of business by causes over which no one has any control, namely, the decrees of Dame Fashion that people should wear silks instead of woolens. We have had our troubles and we are trying to work them out in our own way. But the Senator's intimation that the origin of this get-together project in New England was aimed at his part of the country in an effort to withstand the demands of his part of the country I think is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If my remarks carried any such insinuation I am perfectly willing to assure the Senator that they were made more facetiously than seriously.

Now just a word in conclusion. I wanted to get some of these suggestions before the Senate to direct its attention, if I could, to the economic situation which we have here now and the unequal distribution of wealth in the last six years at a time when we have produced more wealth in the United States than ever before in the history of the country. How far the tariff affects this unequal distribution of wealth I think would be well for Congress to find out. To what extent the fluctuation and inflation of the currency and the credit situation affects it, I think the Congress could well spend some time to find out. There are so many factors that enter into the situation that if we can get an investigation into the tariff schedule, and the various other factors which affect the situation, such as freight rates, we can have some facts upon which to base a remedy. As I said, I do not claim that a complete remedy is in the pending resolution, neither do I believe a complete remedy was in the McNary-Haugen bill. The causes are many and come from various sources. The remedy must come in various measures that Congress can devise. This, I think, is a step in the right direction, so I shall vote for the pending resolution.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent out of order to submit a unanimous report from the Committee on Commerce for the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLAINE in the chair). The report will be received.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 789) to amend the merchant marine act, 1920, approved June 5, 1920, by insuring the exemption from income taxes during the 10-year period there provided of profits on the sale of certain vessels when the proceeds of such sales are invested in new American vessels approved by the Shipping Board, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 74) thereon.

FLOOD CONTROL FOR THE LOWER MISSISSIPPI

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 90, agreed to January 4, 1928, the first report of the Mississippi River Commission, submitted under date of September 28, 1927, relative to flood control of the lower Mississippi River, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR & RAILWAY CO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from Hamilton & Hamilton, attorneys, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co. for the year ended December 31, 1927, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of papers and documents on the files of the Treasury Department which are not needed or useful in the transaction of the current business of the department and have no permanent value or historical interest, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. SMOOT and Mr. SIMMONS members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

COMPETITION AND PROFITS IN BREAD AND FLOUR

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 163, agreed to February 16, 1924, a report of the commission on "competition and profits in bread and flour," which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the report of the Federal Trade Commission just laid before the Senate is of very special importance. It is the concluding report upon an investigation ordered by the Senate upon a resolution introduced by former Senator La Follette, of the State of Wisconsin, directing that commission to inquire into an alleged combine or merger of the baking companies in the country and the effect of the combines and mergers upon the price of bread. Two prior reports have been handed down, both of which have been published. I am advised that the Federal Trade Commission has no funds with which to publish the report. I ask unanimous consent for the printing of the report as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator let that request go over until to-morrow? Another Senator asked me to state that he is interested in the matter and that he would like to be here when the request was preferred.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S DEMOCRATIC LAW ENFORCEMENT LEAGUE

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Mrs. Jesse W. Nicholson, of Maryland, at the first convention of the National Woman's Democratic Law Enforcement League. It is not very long.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF MRS. JESSE W. NICHOLSON

My friends and fellow citizens, it is a pleasure to welcome you here to-day at what will be an epoch-making meeting of earnest Democrats who have the best interests of the Democratic Party at heart.

You have imposed upon the president and officers of this organization certain responsibilities when you unanimously elected us last May and we are here to render an accounting of our stewardship.

Seven years have passed since women were enfranchised after a struggle of more than half a century. How often is the question asked, "What effect, if any, has the woman's vote had upon politics?" a question not so easy to answer as at first might be supposed, for many have not taken into consideration that we had to begin at the very bottom and work our way up; yet we are under indictment by the best known political writers over the country, who have said:

"The women have not changed any political situation or altered the political complexion of any locality. Not a boss has been unseated. Not a convention has broken away from the familiar towing ropes. Nothing has been changed except that the number of docile ballot droppers has been approximately doubled."

As a matter of fact, we have not voted as men expected us to vote, because we would not vote for what they offered us to vote for.

This is our opportunity now. We must show the good people of the Nation that the Democratic women of the country propose to emphasize their independence and influence by prevailing upon the leaders of our party to select a "dry" for President and Vice President.

There are certain types of women, mostly office seekers that are blindly following the politicians, willing to do their bidding, who are being used as tools to undermine this and any other organization of women who have the courage to come out and stand for something that will protect their homes and their children.

The National Woman's Democratic Law Enforcement League is to be congratulated upon having as our officers and followers strong and capable women, women who, as mothers and wives, know how to stand for a cause which they believe will protect the great race they have created; women who have put everything on the altar of faith, believing in justice, and who have put their country above personal gain; women who have put everything in with no thought of taking anything out. With such women in our organization we can not fail to accomplish the purpose for which it came into existence.

The purpose of this organization is to unite the efforts of women Democrats throughout the Nation who believe in the enforcement of all laws, especially the upholding of the Federal Constitution, to the end that more effective support can be given to those candidates, both for the nomination and the election, who will best advance these principles.

Our organizers and officers have gone before the country to organize leagues upon the following platform:

"That the Constitution of the United States and every article and clause in it is a part of the law of every State in the Union and is the paramount law; that any attempt to revise or modify the same in any manner than that provided in the Constitution for so doing is extra-constitutional and revolutionary; and that the letter and the spirit of our organic laws are binding on and must be observed by the officers of each State in the Union who have taken the oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

"While we declare our firm allegiance to the preservation of every right of individual liberty under the law, we declare that public peace and public order are absolute and essential conditions of free government, and we, therefore, will oppose with our utmost power the forces of disorder and lawlessness, from whatever source they may emanate.

"The supremacy of the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof are the best and wisest guaranties of the rights, liberty, and happiness of all the people, and all movements seeking by deception, political manipulations, threats, or organized popular clamor to overthrow or supplant these guaranties are attempts to destroy the American system of representative government organized and established by the Constitution."

We have been asked many times if we would put forth any candidates; to all such inquires we have answered, Not yet; we are quite willing that those in authority who have been elected or appointed to official positions within the Democratic Party should not be handicapped and hampered in the selection of a President and Vice President, but we feel we would not be doing our duty as citizens if we sat still, without letting these officials know in no uncertain terms the kind of candidates we want and the kind we will vote for, and if after making our wants known to them far in advance and they do not heed our advice or admonition, we have another course we expect to pursue.

There are certain disqualified wet candidates seeking the nomination for President on the Democratic ticket, and there is a concerted effort by the Republican wet press to back these candidates to the limit, and it has been alleged that Republicans have already spent over $4,000,000 to further the interests and help the nomination of one of the wet Democratic candidates, knowing how easily they could defeat this candidate. And you will recall only recently of what purported to be spontaneous meetings here and there for this particular candidate, with the press giving much publicity, and some wet Democrats have joined in the chorus.

We dry Democrats must speak now, before it is too late. It is interesting how some of these wet candidates are trying to befuddle the minds of the women and the public by certain carefully worded planks for their platform, trying to deceive us into believing that they would enforce the eighteenth amendment if we would put them into office. Let us not be trapped or betrayed by any such high-sounding phrases as State rights. Let us ask, Is it State rights or State wrong? And when you hear one of them pleading with the Government to let down the bars that more aliens should be permitted into our country, pleading tolerance for the foreigner, who in many cases has proven to be our worst lawbreaker, you know that that candidate does not have your interest and my interest at heart, and that all he wishes or desires is to get elected to office by any means, catering to the lowest elements within our country.

Another candidate says he does not approve of the eighteenth amendment, but will enforce it as long as it is a law. That candidate, as Governor of the Empire State, threw the weight of his great office in helping to repeal the enforcement act, which now makes it impossible to enforce the prohibitory law. And when murder after murder has been committed, because it was easy to obtain liquor, and when that candidate himself openly violates the prohibition law, he has the audacity to ask the law-abiding women of this country who uphold the laws to vote for him for President; but he is honest enough to say in advance, if he is elected he will use his great office to help bring about the repeal, nationally, of the eighteenth amendment as he did in his own State, and judging from his official State acts he would endeavor to carry out such a program to the letter.

Another of these candidates comes before us with a plea of excessive campaign expenditures, slush funds, intolerance, lambasting the Republicans for their commissions and omissions, saying that prohibition has no place in a political campaign.

Let us not be deceived by these tactics. Let us not forget how this same candidate fought woman suffrage, insulting and deriding us; how he fought the greatest leader the democracy has ever known, giving aid and comfort to our enemies in the time of war; and how he fought the League of Nations, the only instrument of peace; his bitter opposition to the Sheppard-Towner birth hygiene bill, which would bring to the mothers and babies of the country Federal and State cooperation for better and healthier citizens; and his cutting and sneering opposition to the great army of law-abiding women who stormed the Capitol in defense of the eighteenth amendment at the Senate hearings some months ago.

The time has come when we must decide for ourselves what we shall expect of our candidate. Let us determine how we can elect our candidate and then let us go from this convention determined to put over such a program, remembering that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

My friends, let us hesitate long before we vote for a "wet" candidate, now that we have outlawed the liquor traffic. Don't trust such a candidate, as we know that the liquor interests are powerful, aggressive, and universal in their attacks. Because to-night it enters an humble home to strike the roses from a woman's cheek, and to-morrow it challenges this Republic in the Halls of Congress. To-day it strikes a crust from the lips of a starving child, and to-morrow levies tribute from the Government itself.

There is no cottage in this Nation humble enough to escape it, no palace strong enough to shut it out. It defies the law when it can not coerce suffrage. It is flexible to cajole but merciless in victory. It is the mortal enemy of peace and order, the despoiler of men, the terror of women, the cloud that shadows the face of children, the demon that has dug more graves and sent more souls unshrived to judgment than all the pestilence that have wasted life since God sent the plagues to Egypt, and all the wars since Joshua stood beyond Jericho.

Oh, my countrymen and women, loving God and humanity, let us not bring this grand old country again under the domination of that power. It can profit no man by its return. It can uplift no industry, revive no interest, remedy no wrong. You know, and I know, that it can not.

It comes to destroy, and it shall profit mainly by the ruin of your sons and mine. It comes to mislead human souls and crush human hearts under its rumbling wheels. It comes to bring gray-haired mothers down in shame and sorrow to their graves. It comes to turn the wife's love into despair and her pride into shame. It comes to still the laughter on the lips of little children. It comes to stifle all the music of the home and fill it with silence and desolation. It comes to ruin your body and mind, to wreck your home, and it knows that it must measure its prosperity by the swiftness and certainty with which it wrecks this work. Trust no candidate labeled "Wet."

Now, for a moment let me review a few unquestioned facts that we may clearly see just what is necessary if the Democratic Party is to be victorious in 1928. We certainly can not win with a wet candidate.

Don't lose sight of the fact that money plays a prominent part in any campaign. In the Republican Party, through its Republican convention, which is really nothing more than a ratifying body of less than 20 representatives of the various trusts of the Nation who hold the money bags, and while large numbers of delegates and alternates are chosen to go to the convention these 20 have the ruling power and say what shall be done and what shall not be done, and they know what they want and how to get what they want, and the convention meekly falls right into line. It is an invisible government that rules this Nation.

Will Hays, who was President Harding's campaign manager, said at a banquet given for his successful efforts, when the cheering had died away, "Now, boys, the thing I want you all to remember is that it did not just happen; it was planned far in advance."

Now, those of us who have long memories wonder if the oil steals and the rest of the tactics of the invisible government were planned far in advance.

You are all familiar with what occurred in 1924 when our Democratic delegates and alternates went to the New York National Democratic Convention under the leadership of CORDELL HULL in perfect peace and harmony, were thrown into almost complete disorganization and confusion by these same powers of the invisible government where they reign supreme. There the sober counsels of the Democratic leaders, thrown together from 48 States and torn by a struggle over mere candidates, were led into a jumble of confused voices praising and denouncing candidates.

As we approach the election of 1928, again the American press is filled with articles urging the Democratic Party to pose as a "wet" party and urging the Democratic Party not to go astray on account of religion. I agree with that great Democratic leader, Senator Robert L. Owen, and say it is only a smoke screen of this invisible government hiding itself from view.

The attitude of the Democratic Party for law enforcement, including prohibition, was precisely right in 1924. The prohibition leaders asked nothing more and they wish nothing else now.

There is but one great issue upon which the Democratic Party can reasonably hope to win, and that is by defending America against the stand-pat Republican policy of illicit secret alliance with corrupt business men who are using the governing powers of the people and rule by proxy.

On the issue shall America be free and a government by the people and for the people, or shall America be enslaved by an invisible government of self-seeking moneycrats, the liberal and progressive forces of America can be aroused and united. If so united they could probably control three-fourths of the total vote.

As it is, the Progressive Republicans are usually coerced by the Republican machine organizations, and the Democrats do not cohere all of the progressives and liberals under one banner and are beaten. The stand-pat strategy is to "divide and conquer." The Democratic and Progressive strategy should be to "unite and conquer."

The invisible government, through their innumerable agencies, will resist any union of the liberal forces and will charge them with hostility to wealth.

The Democracy, the progressive and independent Republican is not the enemy of wealth. American wealth owes its very existence to the opportunities and protection afforded under a free, benign, and just democracy. Vast personal wealth has its limitations. It has great commercial and political power, but not supernatural intelligence, and when it is used to corrupt and control the Government itself for personal privileges and private profit at public expense the people must arise and defend themselves or pass into serfdom and industrial servitude.

In selecting a candidate as the standard bearer of our party the National Woman's Democratic Law Enforcement League ask our leaders, who will meet in a day or two with these facts before them, to choose a man whose private life as well as his political life be above reproach if they wish the support of the women of the party, because we are determined to support only such candidates as can bear close inspection both morally and politically.

In closing let me say the "wet" candidates must recognize that victory is impossible without harmony and that as long as they remain in the race the people will think only of their wet records.

It is our belief that if they would immediately withdraw, accompanied by a ringing call to harmony, it would receive nation-wide approval and result in sending a progressive constitutional Democrat to the White House. And if they have the interests of the party at heart rather than their own personal aggrandizement, they will heed the will of the majority.

"THE IMPERIAL RUSSIAN CONSPIRACY"

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the American Monthly commenting on a book written by former Senator Owen, entitled "The Imperial Russian Conspiracy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLAINE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

INCENDIARISM ON THE NEVA—SENATOR OWEN'S THOUGHT-EVOKING BOOK, "THE IMPERIAL RUSSIAN CONSPIRACY," CONTINUES TO STIR THE COUNTRY

The American Monthly, in its issue of August, 1927, dwelt briefly on United States Senator Robert L. Owen's penetrating book, "The Imperial Russian Conspiracy." Naturally so astounding and courageous a book must arouse lively interest here and abroad. It is remarkable to notice that the metropolitan press did not give as much space, comparatively speaking, to reviews of the Owen book as did the middle western papers. Among the latter, two voices stand out especially that should echo and reecho throughout the world.

The first of these articles, a searching study of Owen's book, was written by Cyril Arthur Player. It appeared in the Detroit (Mich.) News on August 28, under the heading:

RUSSO-FRENCH PACT CAUSED WORLD WAR

A conspiracy so gigantic in its scope, so appalling in its effect that all recorded history has not the like to offer, plunged the peoples of the world into the World War.

The millions for whom we still mourn, the millions whose wounds refuse to heal, the millions whose grief weeps lonely forever and forever, these were the innocent sacrifice to the cynical ambitions of a handful of imperial-minded statesmen.

Idealism was a catch phrase to hide the lies from credulous peoples marked for slaughter. There was no war to end war. Not war for democracy.

The World War was a selfish plot against the peace of the world for which the common peoples paid in blood and suffering and wretchedness whose sum and duration is not yet computed.

The weapon with which little greed struck at the heart of civilization was secret diplomacy. By this means a few men controlling one great nation were able to conspire with a few men controlling another. The weapon has been blunted but not destroyed. What was possible then is possible now. The world must face the truth and forbid it.

Robert L. Owen, former United Senator from Oklahoma, offers the proof of these things. Moved "alone by my love for the people of the United States" he sets the awful case forth in his book, The Russian Imperial Conspiracy, 1892–1914 (Alfred & Charles Boni). Obviously it is a sensational indictment. Unfortunately for history and its myths, the main case as Senator Owen presents it, with his evidence, is incontrovertible. There was such a conspiracy. It cost the lives of millions. It all but wrecked civilization.

SUPPORTED BY PROOF

This is a story which, supported by proof which is indubitable, commands the attention of every human being capable of sharing the sorrows of civilization, past or future. It transcends all prejudice of nationality. For no people, neither German nor French, neither Russian nor English, neither Austrian nor Italian, was guilty of willing this war. They paid for it, are paying for and will continue to pay for it.

Mr. Owen himself says that the common people everywhere "were patriotic, brave, and determined to defend their own homes, but they did not have the will to invade their neighbors' territory for profit."

But a group of Russian imperialists and a few French leaders did plan for 20 years to make war on Germany. The roots of the war are to be found in the spirit of "excessive nationalism, militarism, and imperialism built up through the centuries." But the precipitating cause was cold-bloodedly arranged as the results of the secret treaty between Russia and France in 1892–1894.

It was part of the plot that hypocrisy should baffle the common intelligence with lies and fix the moral guilt on the German people. So a gigantic falsehood was written into the treaty of Versailles.

Beyond these things, Senator Owen essays to establish that during the years in which the conspiracy was matured, the French press was subsidized with Russian money, borrowed from the French people and expended under the French minister of foreign affairs, whereby the French people were induced to buy $7,000,000,000 of Russian bonds, which were employed in building up a huge Russian army, to manufacture supplies of heavy and light artillery and munitions of war, to double track their railways to the German border, for the purpose of carrying out the military conventions of making offensive war on Germany.

ENCIRCLED BY TREATIES

To make certain the success of this gigantic conspiracy, the author continues, Germany was encircled with a series of treaties or understandings between Russia and France, between Russia and Rumania, Russia and Bulgaria, Russia and Italy, Russia and Great Britain, France and Great Britain, France and Belgium, so that Germany was completely surrounded on land and sea.

He then asserts that Sir Edward Grey's secret commitments to France made Britain an accessory to the war; hence the eve of war found the British fleet in possession of the North Sea and the French fleet already withdrawn into the Mediterranean.

As part of the strategy to throw the moral influence of the world against Germany, Germany was made to appear as guilty of having started the war. This was done by mobilizing the troops of Russia through a general mobilization order (the military equivalent of a declaration of war by Russia, but not so understood by the public), which called to the Russian colors 14,000,000 men and concentrated such masses of Russian troops against the German border that the military leaders of Germany, as a military necessity, had no option whatever except to recognize what was a fact, "a state of war existing." This was only done on August 1, 1914, at 7 p. m., after the Russian mobilization had been in progress for approximately eight days.

Immediately Germany took this official step, desired by the conspirators, Mr. Owen continues, Germany was blockaded by land and sea and the most gigantic propaganda the world has ever known was begun by the Entente Allies to prove to the world that the German leaders were solely responsible for the war; that the German purpose was to conquer Europe and to become the military dictator of the world; that the Germans were waging war with fiendish cruelty.

The conspiracy of the Russian and French leaders succeeded completely. Most of the world believed Germany guilty, even over the unceasing protests of Germany, and when the treaty of Versailles was written in June, 1919, the German Government was compelled by military force to confess that Germany had imposed war on the Allies.

"Such a confession," remarks the author, "so extorted, has in history no equal in the magnitude of its injustice. This confession of guilt should be removed and the world brought back to understanding, truth, and good will."

For, he adds, "the reconciliation of the French heartfelt moral disarmament is essential to physical disarmament; their mutual respect and good will are vital to their future peace and the future peace of Europe and the world."

In this narrative Senator Owen is following the trail blazed conspicuously by Harry Elmer Barnes, who, in turn, owed much to the researches of Sidney P. Fay. The English historian, G. P. Gooch, and the Canadian jurist, John S. Ewart, also have made illuminating contributions; and many others have helped. The source material of all of them, now combined and digested by Senator Owen, comprises the secret archives of all the nations concerned, excepting only those of the Republic of France, whose story, however, is revealed by the documents exposed by the other nations, particularly in the contents of the Russian archives.

The value of Senator Owen's contribution is that he is not a professional historian; he ignores, even at the cost of superficial error, the technical dialogue of the textbook analyst, and even yields occasionally to the treacherous rhetoric of indignation and its inevitably unsound conclusions. But he is an American citizen, looking with undisguised horror at something that has shocked him. His anger is that of every man. His voice is the voice of the public. The terms he employs are in the common tongue. The fundamentals, he declares, are those cherished most dearly by humanity. He is of those who were deceived and who paid.

The conspiracy which plunged the world into carnage was this: During the year 1892 the governing group of Russian imperialists and a few men at the head of the French Government discussed a secret treaty. The chief clause provided that in the event any member of the triple alliance mobilized France and Russia would consider that the same is a declaration of war and would immediately mobilize against Germany. The treaty was concluded in 1894.

Gradually the shadow of the balance of power began to fall across Europe until in each great country of Europe jealous and suspicious leaders stood guard, hatching rumors into crises.

In 1908 there had happened something too remote for the purposes of Senator Owen's exposure, but nevertheless essential to the complete story.

Austria took from Turkish rule the Slav Provinces of Bosnia and Horzegovina and annexed them to the dual monarchy. How did that come about? Isvolsky, the "damned soul" of the great conspiracy, then Russia's foreign minister, suggested it. Why did Isvolsky, a Russian minister, suggest this change of ownership for Slav peoples, presumably entitled to protection from the Great Slav Empire? Isvolsky believed that he could buy therewith Europe's acquiescence in Russia's age-long ambition for the straits and at the same time would be weakening Turkey, the power holding the coveted territory.

RUSSIA BLOCKED

As it happened the powers (chiefly Great Britain) blocked Russian ambition in that direction, and Russia felt chagrined. Russian leaders also expressed resentment that Russia had failed to protect the lesser Slav peoples. These leaders were ignorant of the part Isvolsky had played. This crafty man fanned the indignation of his coimperialists. Austria thus became the "oppressor of Slav peoples"; the subject Slav peoples became the necessary pot to stir into the fumes of disorder, rebellion, assassination.

Isvolsky found Raymond Poincare in power, and Poincare could say: "I have not been able to see any other reason for my generation living except the hope of recovering our lost Provinces."

The twin spirits reassured each other that the treaty of 1892–1894 was a valid instrument, and a secret one. The two groups drew together and planned the event which should fulfill the dreams of two nationalisms.

Russia had imperialistic and Pan-Salvic ambitions. She desired to dominate the Near East, to control the straits leading from the Black Sea to the Ægean, and to draw under her diplomatic ægis the lesser Slavic peoples of Europe. These aspirations cut directly across the major ambitions and policies of the polyglot dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary, whose very existence depended upon repressing or debating the Slavic nationalism on a large portion of her population. It is scarcely necessary to argue whether Austria-Hungary should have continued to exist. As Professor Barnes has pointed out, the Austrian and German authorities are to be forgiven for thinking that it should.

Then began the task of building up understandings with all the neighbors of the Central Powers, notably with Great Britain, whose foreign minister, wittingly or unwittingly, was to make himself and his country the servant of Franco-Russian imperialism.

STIR UP UNREST

The same Isvolsky whose counsel gave the Slavs to Austria now employed those Slavs as the excuse for the war at which the conspiracy now aimed. Constant and violent unrest produced assassinations; finally that of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife. It was a moment when the tension of Europe had built itself up to the breaking point. The diplomatic background constructed by secret diplomacy made a conflict inevitable once an important crucial issue arose between the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente.

The conspirators, all their military plans carefully arranged in a series of conferences, some of the minutes of which Senator Owen cites, produced the crucial issue. Ferdinand was assassinated.

The days between that event and the beginning of hositilities brought into open position all the arrangements so meticulously perfected through 20 years. England made good Grey's secret entanglements and went to war against Germany and beside France. Colonel House, a few months earlier, had said: "The moment England consents, France and Russia will close in on Germany." England had consented.

Italy, only a member of the Triple Alliance, out of pique at French annexation of Tunis, marched against her "natural" enemy, Austria, in quest of Italia Irredenta.

Nothing had been left to chance—not even the blame for it.

There are grave things involved in the discussion of those last prewar days. Great names are brought in question. Through what glasses of prejudice or imperial need did Grey survey the situation? Where did Henry Morgenthau get his account of the "decisive" Potsdam Conference? What was the notorious Potsdam Conference? The documents now show this: On July 5, as William II prepared to leave for his northern cruise, Chancellor Bethmann Hollweg sent this message to Vienna: "Austria may judge what is to be done to clear up her relations with Serbia; whatever Austria's decision may turn out to be, Austria can count with certainty upon it that Germany will stand behind her as an ally and friend."

REGRETS TOO LATE

Three weeks later, when events had brought the Kaiser back to Berlin, and it became apparent that tragedy was near, William II bitterly repented the message and the effect of it. The evidence bears out the claim that he made every effort to moderate and restrain Austria. It was too late, but it would not have been if Russia and France had not determined to force war upon Germany.

These talks of William II with Hollweg, Falkenhayn, and Zimmermann constitute the "Potsdam conference." The papers show that William II conceived only of Austria administering punishment to Serbia. They show that he accepted Serbia's reply to Austria's ultimatum as wholly gratifying to Austria. They show him frantically apprehensive when it became positive that peace was at an end.

Unquestionably Austria's conduct was perverse, determined, and arbitrary. However, to the Dual Monarchy the issue was a life and death proposition. That is obvious. Isvolsky, with less reason, urged that the upholding of the Slavs by Russia also was a life and death matter. The actualities of the time support Austria, without justifying either.

Finally, Senator Owen quotes sufficient from the archives to show that French and Russian mobilization was hurried in advance of declaration of war, so that, as outlined earlier, Germany found herself faced by a fact, and so in self-defense was forced to take up the challenge.

It goes for the saying that in each country, not least in Germany, there was a group of war spirits to welcome a war. The spirit of militarism existed everywhere; and raw nerves; long-sustained apprehensions; and the deadly and precarious balance of power.

Nevertheless, it is established by these documents that the Russian imperialists and a group of French statesmen did plan to control this nervous tension of Europe and direct it so that it would annihilate a nation for their own imperial aggrandisement. An analysis of each country involved shows little but sordid motive at bottom. Neither in Russia, France, nor Britain was it necessary for a government to reveal to parliament its secret treaties. That is true in France and Britain to-day. The fatally mischievous influence of Isvolski and the cold-blooded calculation of a few French leaders and of the unscrupulous group around the Czar are placed beyond question. Secret diplomacy delivered the millions into their hands.

EXPLODES "ATROCITIES"

As for the war lies, the "atrocities," and the like, Senator Owen takes the trouble to explode some of the more notorious, although the American public has been miserably conscious for a long time that the hysteria of war has to be fed by an unspeakable diet of mendacity and exaggeration.

Not the least disheartening phase of the story is the apparently easy corruption of the French press. In one letter Isvolsky asks his government to provide 3,000,000 francs ($600,000) to hand the papers controlled by radical Socialists. His letter—written in July, 1912—begins: "From this interview I was convinced that M. Poincare—then premier—is in every respect in accord with us, considers the moment has finally arrived to realize the century-old aims of our traditional policy—seizure of Constantinople and the Straits—and therewith restore the European balance of power by the return of the stolen Provinces of Alsace-Lorraine. In order to control the newspaper mouthpieces of prominent Socialists, Poincare shares my opinion that a very large sacrifice on our part is necessary for this purpose.

He hesitates to name the sum—3,000,000 francs—but reminds the Czar's advisers that "the Turkish Government has spent 5,000,000 francs to influence the French press and bought even one of their most prominent authors, Pierre Loti. * * * I propose that the subsidy be paid in monthly installments as heretofore in order to be sure every minute of the zeal of the newspapers."

Sazonoff replies from St. Petersburg that the plan is approved, to which Isvolski sends an acknowledgment, adding concerning the distribution of the money: "It is very important not to undertake anything without consulting Poincare. French statesmen are practiced in such matters and possess incredible adroitness."

Raffalowitch, the Russian distributor of newspaper graft in Paris, duly sent in his expense account, November 7, 1913, as follows:

	Francs
La Lanterne (Millerand's paper)	42,000
L'Aurore (Clemenceau's paper)	17,000
L'Evenement	11,000
L'Action	9,000
La France	11,000
Le Rappel	7,000
Le Gil Blas	2,000
Le Journal	1,000

Two weeks later the agent's report showed that the cost of journalistic zeal had mounted:

Millerand's paper is credited with 85,000 francs.

Clemenceau's with 45,000.

Le Radical gets 120,000.

Le Figaro, 25,000.

Le Temps, 50,000.

La Libre Parole, 80,000.

Le Gaulois, 25,000.

La Liberty, 30,000.

Raffalowitch also reminds Isvolsky: I have already informed your excellency that Lenoir, at the instigation of Klotz, who herein is Poincare's mouthpiece, has pledged himself firmly toward the journals L'Aurore, La Lanterne, Le Radical, etc., as well as to certain directors of journals having but small editions, but great influence in politics."

AROUSE PEOPLE

Senator Owens sums up: "It was under these subsidies of the French press that the French people were worked up by special writers to believe that it was to the interest of France to support Russia in defending Serbia on the pretense of maintaining the 'balance of power' in the Balkans, while Russian money in Serbia had excited the intrigues of Serbia, which led to the assassination of numerous Austrian officials (finally of the Archduke Ferdinand) and compelled Austria to mobilize against Serbia in self-protection. This local act of war of Austria against Serbia was used then as a pretext for Russian general mobilization, which really meant a secret declaration of war by Russia and France against Germany, as shown by the contract of 1892–1894, the military conferences, and the secret dispatches already published."

Senator Owen, having marshaled his documents, places the moral responsibility for the war on Sazonoff, Nicholas II, Grand Duke Nicholas, Isvolsky, and Poincare. "But," he remarks, "it would be a grave mistake to permit a discussion of this great question to generate into stigmatizing leaders, however much they erred." He insists, however, that "the official proof is overwhelming that the Germans did not will the World War; that the Austrians did not will the World War; that the leaders of Serbia, of Russia, and a very, very few French leaders, controlling nevertheless French foreign affairs, did will the World War."

SECRET DIPLOMACY

Translating this into terms of philosophy, he suggests the spirit of excessive nationalism, militarism, and imperialism, cultivated by the leaders in Europe, as mainly responsible, and adds: "If the democracies or peoples of the world continue to permit secret diplomacy, with its ambitious intrigue, militarism, commercial imperialism, this World War will not be the last." In another place, remarking that the Russian conspiracy has greatly advanced government by the people, he adds that "the greatest need of the world now is that government by the people should be strenuously supplemented by education of the people."

In the end there comes the disturbing reflection that if Senator Owen's case were only half true, if there existed nothing more than the cold-blooded conspiracy to war, plotted by a few Russian and French leaders, then the author is correct in asserting that the theory that the war was waged in defense of American ideals was untrue. He is even more convincingly correct when he indicts the treaty of Versailles with its betrayal of President Wilson's pledges (in the 14 points) to the German people.

Senator Owen believes that "the establishment of the truth as to the origin of the World War is vital to a reconciliation of the people of Europe." He thinks that just as the American people were gravely deceived by European propaganda as to the origin and the purposes of the World War, so they are now being subjected to a similar propaganda for the cancellation of the war debts. He thinks that all the common peoples, German as well as others, are indistinguishable in honest purpose and are equally worthy of American interest and sympathy.

Senator Owen, a fair-minded man, powerfully moved, his earlier convictions overturned, sets forth impressively this colossal story of the world's betrayal. During recent years men's minds have been revolving uneasily the theme to which he now brings, condensed and assembled, the truth. It has been a long time coming. But, declared Schopenhauer, "the truth can wait. It has a long life before it."

The second article reprinted here is an editorial, also from the Detroit (Mich.) News, published on August 29, and entitled:

THE WORST COLOSSAL CRIME OF ALL TIMES

"No question is ever settled until it is settled right."

The most devastating tragedy of all time is not settled right, and on the conscience of every honest man and woman must rest the burden of a colossal betrayal.

The revelation of the stupendous conspiracy by a handful of Russian and French statesmen, categorically established by Senator Robert L. Owen, is not the work of a pamphleteer. It is the voice of an indignant world which has just discovered that its finest emotions have been employed to set the common people everywhere to butchering each other, not for those splendid ideals for which men and women, through all time, have sought glorious martyrdom, but to fulfill the coldly calculating ambitions of a few powerful and wicked men.

Is it possible that the memories of that appalling war already are buried under the tinsel of prosperity? Are there no homes in this land, as in others, whence youth has gone forever, or else has returned to drag its crippled symbol miserably through life? For what was this sublimest of sacrifices, this utter renunciation of life and health and opportunity and the sweet things which bloom in the hearts of the happy and well? Was it the world's grandest gesture of heroism in defense of man's priceless liberties? That were a fight, indeed! The widow and the orphan could be glad for it. The stricken home could be forever an altar consecrated to the hopes of humanity. For this very threshold, for this hearth, for this cradle, to protect all this precious sum of dear life, youth marched to war and died.

The evidence says, cruelly, no.

The glory is no less bright, for the lives were generously given in faith. Only the background grows dark and murky. These cold and crafty men, all powerful, sitting quietly in their council room and watching; whispering secret things one to another; plotting craftily the ruin of the world; dropping the poison of distrust and hatred; thrusting weapons into the nervous, ready hands of patriot-assassins; setting the time clock of destiny so that in the end the explosion might flame and tear itself across the earth, at least to destroy one people. And when this very thing came dreadfully to pass, the little group still sitting at their table, smiling, congratulating each other, tracing, and verifying the new lines on the map.

A terrible story. Humanity has nothing to set beside it; only its tears. A story that rises above nationality and commands the scrutiny and judgment of every human being capable of suffering, past or future. A story that can not be ignored, that demands refutation syllable for syllable—and can not be refuted.

It is true. Men could make this plot. Neither in France nor in Russia, nor for that matter in England, could Parliament demand those secrets. A few men, ruling, could conspire against hundreds of millions of innocent people, and molding passions to their need by the expenditure of untold millions with a venal French press, precipitate a carnage incomparable and a hatred which still harasses the world.

"No question is ever settled until it is settled right."

No people, German, or French, or Russian, or Austrian, or English, willed that war. Neither did the German Government will it. When Colonel Picquard told General Gonse that an error had been committed in the Dreyfus case, Gonse replied: "If you hold your tongue no one will know anything about it." But the innocence of Dreyfus became apparent by the collapse of the proofs upon which he was condemned. It is the same with Germany to-day. The archives of the world, excepting those of France, have not held their tongue.

The future peace of the world, the happiness of those boys and girls who even now are preparing to enter another year of school in preparation for a useful, happy, and prosperous life, demands that the American people face these facts, regardless of origin or birth, of any prejudice or conviction. The peace of the world must no longer rest with conspirators. The people sometimes blundering but always in the last analysis honest and friendly, must hold the power over their own lives and happiness which secret diplomacy robbed away. This most colossal crime in all history must not be repeated.

"No question is ever settled until it is settled right."

IMPORTATION OF BROKEN RICE

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) to define broken rice. Its consideration will take but a moment. If it leads to any debate, I shall not press it.

Mr. JONES. Was the concurrent resolution reported from the Committee on Finance?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; it was reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but the chairman of the Committee on Finance said that its adoption is entirely satisfactory to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "only," to strike out "the class 'Brewers Milled Rice' as specified in the united standards for milled rice" and to insert in lieu thereof "rice which falls within the class 'Brewers Milled Rice' as defined in the United States standards for milled rice as promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That for the purpose of interpreting the meaning of the tariff act of 1922, with respect to imported broken rice, "broken rice" shall include only rice which falls within the class "Brewers Milled Rice" as defined in the United States standards for milled rice as promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, January 13, 1928, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, January 12, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We approach Thee now, O Soul of our souls. As we have in ourselves the power to love and the longing to do, how much more shall we find in Thee the same love and power! Oh, the pity of it when we fail to bow to our higher natures and neglect to live out the divine life. Help us to check the minor strain that often runs low and sound the note of the ministry of our best manhood. We beseech Thee to always help us carry it up to spiritual culture and beauty. We acknowledge our responsibility of our time and place, and ask for full power to transform all fruitless wastes into gardens of promise and gladness. Lord God of nations, bless our entire country and all institutions that make for a better national life. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

House Resolution 88

Resolved, That the following Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to wit:

Phil D. Swing, California; Guy E. Campbell, Pennsylvania; Harry E. Rowbottom, Indiana; to rank with the other majority members on said committee in the following order:

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 55. Joint resolution for the relief of Henry A. Bellows;

S. 3. An act for the relief of Kate Mathews;

S. 120. An act to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Clara E. Nichols;

S. 342. An act for the relief of George B. Booker Co.;

S. 434. An act for the relief of Sadie Klauber;

S. 440. An act for the relief of Charles H. Send; and

S. 672. An act for the purpose of rehabilitating farm lands in the flood areas.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9136) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes. Pending that I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] whether or not it will be agreeable to him to let the general debate run along to-day and fix the limitation later after matters have developed?

Mr. HASTINGS. That will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, pending the motion I have made, I ask unanimous consent that the control of the time in general debate be divided equally between the gentleman from Oklahoma and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill, and pending that asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be not fixed at this time and that the control of the time in general debate be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill, with Mr. CHINDBLOM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule of the House the time for general debate will be equally controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS]. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us for the Interior Department is one of the most interesting bills that goes through the Committee on Appropriations, and to some sections of the country it is of the greatest importance. The problems of the West, the protection and the development of public-land areas, the care of the Indians, the development of the national parks, a great part of the work of the Geological Survey, are of particular importance to a large section of the country.

It has been my fortune to present this bill as chairman of this subcommittee for six years preceding this. In all of that work during that time, and in the preparation of the bill this year, I have been most fortunate in having with me on my subcommittee colleagues most delightful in association, and whose knowledge of the subject before us was such as to relieve me very greatly of responsibility. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] and myself are the tenderfeet on the subcommittee, but we have been fortunate in having with us for a long time Mr. TAYLOR, of Colorado, and Mr. FRENCH, of Idaho. We have been glad this year to welcome to this subcommittee, and have found of great assistance, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS]. [Applause.] If the work of this subcommittee finds any merit in your eyes I am very frank to say that these four colleagues are entitled to the credit.

For the Interior Department we appropriated for the current year, including the deficiency bill that recently passed the Congress, $311,176,821.

The Budget recommends for 1929, $273,118,589. The amount in the bill before you, as recommended by the committee, is $272,430,789, which is $38,746,032 less than the appropriation for the current year and $687,800 less than the amount submitted in the estimates.

It is $38,746,032 less than the 1928 appropriations and $687,800 less than the amount requested in the estimates.

The decrease in the total appropriations recommended for 1929 under the amount appropriated for 1928 is accounted for in the main by the decrease of $37,078,000 under the Pension Office and $2,706,977 under the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Other decreases are $219,735 under the National Park Service, $159,500 under the General Land Office, $49,800 under the Geological Survey, $21,000 under Government in the Territories, and so forth, and $15,400 in the Secretary's office. The increases recommended for 1929 over the amounts appropriated for 1928 are $775,200 under the Reclamation Service, $20,080 under the Bureau of Education, $384,000 for St. Elizabeths Hospital, $16,600 for Columbia Institution for the Deaf, $22,000 for Howard University, and $286,500 for Freedmen's Hospital.

Comparing the appropriations proposed by the committee with the estimates proposed in the Budget, increases are $117,500 under the Bureau of Indian Affairs, $94,700 under the National Park Service, $40,000 under the Geological Survey, $26,500 under the Bureau of Education, and $10,000 under the Freedmen's Hospital. The decreases are $976,000 under the Reclamation Service and $500 under the General Land Office.

To that is to be added, however, a decrease of the burden on the Federal Treasury which does not show in the figures I have mentioned, amounting to $247,000 in the case of the Freedmen's Hospital, which I shall discuss later in my remarks. There is also covered back to the Treasury $61,082.12 of appropriations made in 1904, 1909, 1910, 1913, 1914, 1916, 1921, and 1922, and available until expended, but not longer required.

I will insert for the information of the House a tabulation which I am sure you would not want me to read at this time. It is an analysis of the expenditures of this department, beginning with the year 1922, the beginning of the Budget period, and continuing up to date, by bureaus, giving the total expenditure for the department, the total expenditure for the department outside of pensions, and the total expenditure outside of the payment of pensions and reclamation expenditures.

[3] Increase of compensation.
[4] Does not include $19,950,000 appropriated to the civil-service retirement fund.

I am sure the House will be interested in that tabulation, and I am sure the House will be satisfied that in this department—a great constructive department, handling many important problems, and a department in which the expenditures were not increased materially, if at all, during the World War, and hence did not have that inflation to overcome in these days of economy—I am sure you will be satisfied that there is a real economy in the conduct of that department.

The opening of the report of the Secretary reads:

THE YEAR'S WORK IN BRIEF

The department has had a productive year in work performed. After four years of effort in consolidating and coordinating activities, reducing the personnel to a point more nearly commensurate with the needs of the service, and discontinuing unnecessary activities, the department has become a more compact, efficient organization than theretofore. During this period of reconstruction many offshoots of bureaucratic control have been abandoned. These were characterized by the magnified importance of nonessential activities and in cumbersome methods of transacting the legitimate work of the department.

The accomplishments in these directions are represented in dollars and cents by the saving of $131,331,871.61 in operation expenditures for the four years, but further by the reduction in force of 2,722 permanent employees and an increased output in the specific functions delegated to the department by law.

I fear possibly that some of you, if you read the report of the Secretary, might not understand just what the Secretary means in the beginning of that report. I have not been quite able to understand it myself. It says that the accomplishments in the direction of discontinuing unnecessary activities, and so forth, are represented in dollars and cents by the saving of $131,000,000 in operation expenses for the four years.

A study of the above table will show that expenditures of the department outside of the payment of pensions do not much exceed $40,000,000 a year, and have not during the period of four years stated, and this alleged decrease of $131,000,000 in those expenses, which is stated to be "in the operating expenses of the department," I do not quite understand. No doubt there is an explanation, but I am not able to give it. I would not consider that the reduction in the fund for the payment of pensions was a reduction in the operating cost of the department, and perhaps someone, not understanding that, might not appreciate the real showing of economy which the department makes, as you will do if you study the table I have given.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE

There is one bureau in the department to which I think I should call special attention in this connection, because we get the idea that an expenditure once entered upon is never ended. Furthermore, that there is no branch of the Government that is really reducing its expenditures. Many of the bureaus have an expanding work, which means increased expenditures. There are some that have a practically stationary program. But there are others that ought to pinch out, but they do not do it.

Let me call your attention to a notable exception, the General Land Office, under the administration of a splendid type of western manhood, a former Governor of Utah, Mr. Spry. The expenses of the bureau, with the economies carried forth by Governor Spry, with the complete support and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, show a reduction in the expenditures of the General Land Office from $3,125,015 in 1925 to $2,138,050 in 1929. [Applause.] There is a reduction of practically a million dollars, fully 30 per cent, in the operating cost of that bureau.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

The Indian Service is one of the most difficult branches of the Government service. I think the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has the hardest, most thankless job in the whole Federal service. He must meet, on the one hand, the criticism of those who are in contact with the Indian, in a position to exploit the Indian and having the desire to do so. I do not want to be understood as saying that all who are in contact have that desire, but I am speaking of that element of those who are in contact who do have that desire and who are ready to raise any kind of a cry, true or not, whenever their fingers are pinched when they are reaching in to get something from the Indians for themselves.

There is another element that makes more trouble for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and for the Government in carrying on a sane and progressive policy of rehabilitation for the Indian, and that is the many, many people throughout the country whose only knowledge of the Indian is as they have read about him, who have pictured romantic ideas of him, and who cherish an altruistic desire to see this Government do everything for the Indian; splendid people, many of them in high positions in social, political, and industrial life and who, having this desire, are frequently exploited, I may say, by men who, to make jobs for themselves or to make trouble for the Government, are constantly parading before the country alleged shortcomings of the Government.

Now, I have in mind one such organization that is perhaps the most active and the most destructive of those organizations, and that is the American Indian Defense Association. On its letterhead are the names of many splendid men and women whose only fault is that they have permitted their names to be exploited in a mistaken cause, playing into the hands of the secretary of the association, one John Collier.

John Collier is fundamentally a sensationalist and opponent of the Government. He does not, apparently, have any desire to do constructive things for the solution of the problem—certainly does not attempt them—and there are many such opportunities for such an organization, backed by such splendid men and women as he has back of him. No. He simply tears down. I say he is fundamentally against the Government, one of those who always is sure the Government of the United States is wrong and is doing wrong. He recently put out this pamphlet, The Sacco and Vanzetti Horror, by John Collier, under date of August 10, 1927. Whatever may have been its effect on public sentiment—possibly it had none—that was less destructive than this constant parading of propaganda in order to bring the Government into disfavor and disrepute in its handling of Indian affairs. [Applause.]

I am not an apologist for the Indian Bureau. I know very well that they must inevitably make mistakes from time to time in handling their widespread responsibilities. There are approximately 250,000 Indians, outside of the Five Civilized Tribes, with a total of property, tribal and individual, of $1,716,815,000, of which $920,000,000 is tribal and $796,000,000 individual. Their individual property and tribal property have each increased constantly and is now at its highest figure. They live in dissimilar conditions, some of them in the hot desert wastes of the Southwest and some of them in the coldest winters of the Northwest. Some of them have much more money than it is good for them to have or good for anyone to have without earning it; many of them are destitute. Some of them are well advanced and others are in the lowest condition of civilization. With all of their reservations scattered over the great West it is inevitable that, through human agencies, occasional mistakes of administration will occur.

There was a time, I have read, in the earlier days, when we had just subdued the Indians, when the West was not as well developed as it is now, and when those regions were most remote from the seat of government, that the Indian Service was notoriously corrupt; and I think in the public mind the Indian Service of to-day has the disadvantage of some of that ancient aroma still clinging around it.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Hon. Charles H. Burke, has had long experience with Indian affairs, through his life in the West and through his former connection with Indian affairs as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, and is a man of capacity, integrity, and of practical and sane idealism. He has associated with him, as assistant commissioner, Mr. Edgar B. Meritt, who has been in that bureau for some 30 years. I do not believe there is in the Government service a man who works harder and who is more sincerely devoted to the carrying out of the responsibilities of his position than Mr. Meritt. It was his vigilance that saved the San Carlos Reservoir site, and he is most zealous and devoted to the real welfare of the Indians. I do not believe there is a man more loyal in the discharge of his duties. The organization headed by Burke and Meritt is the organization that is under daily attack; and that attack is destructive and in some degree nullifies their constructive efforts.

A few months ago one of my colleagues, who is now sitting here before me, brought to my attention a circular issued by this Indian Defense organization. It was a circular prepared by its president, a physician in New York City, with reference to the death rate among the Indians. That circular, under date of January 28, 1927, stated, in so many words, that the death rate among the Indians has increased 48 per cent in four years. He purports to quote census statistics. I have not checked up those figures at the source, but I am one who will not accept tabulated figures when they go contrary to my own personal knowledge. There are many men in this House, every man who has been in contact with the Indian problem, who know that that statement is not true.

The gentleman in New York who put that forth, whether prepared by himself or by the secretary, John Collier, either knew it was giving the country a misunderstanding or else he did not know anything about the problem and should not have put out anything.

I have been on many reservations. I know of the effort the Government has been making during that very four years to increase and make more effective our health work among the Indians. I know that no such statement is true and that it has in it no element of truth.

The chief aim of the Indian Service in its health work is not only to more effectively care for and cure the sick, but also the establishment of a high standard of physical well-being and the raising of the vitality of the Indian race. Progress has been and is being made in this respect through application of preventive medicine and the teaching by precept and example of personal hygiene and home sanitation through the physicians, nurses, field matrons, hospital employees, and, in fact, all field employees, whether engaged in health, school, or agency work. By the raising of the standard of living, the problems of morbidity and mortality may be made less formidable.

In 1873 the first recognized steps were taken toward furnishing organized educational and medical facilities for the Indians. In this year an educational and medical division was established in the Indian Bureau. It could not be expected that the Indians would accept and take to scientific medical services in the same manner they accepted the white man's "fire water" and other vices. For generation upon generation they had relied upon their medicine men, with their weird incantations and practical knowledge gained by experience in the use of herbs, and so forth. But these white doctors were able at times of gatherings of the Indians at the agencies and trading post to extract teeth, lance boils, and perform other minor surgery, or perhaps render relief to old and infected wounds or illnesses which had defied the efforts of the medicine men. These small services gradually won favor among the Indians and gained their confidence, and a few Indians began calling upon the physicians. Little by little the services of the doctor came to be regarded more favorably. The medicine man and tribal custom still hold sway in some of the more remote sections, but are gradually losing favor.

With the increasing recognition of the value of the physicians' services, hospital facilities were found necessary, and attention to the provision of these facilities was made. In 1900 there were but five hospitals. There are now 100 hospitals and infirmaries, including those under construction or authorized in this bill. Now all but a few of the smaller reservations have hospital facilities, and efforts are being made to provide each of these with hospital facilities as rapidly as funds are available. The interest of the bureau in the expansion of this work is well emphasized in the report of the survey of medical needs in the Southwest by Mr. Meritt, which appears in our hearings.

The first specific appropriation for health work of any amount was made by the act of February 20, 1909, and provided $12,000 for the investigation, treatment, and prevention of trachoma. This sum was followed by an appropriation of $40,000 for the relief of distress and conservation of health which became available July 1, 1910. From this small beginning there has been waged an unceasing warfare against the two great scourges of this primitive people—trachoma and tuberculosis—and Congress has seen fit from time to time to increase the sum available for health work until in this bill for the fiscal year 1929 there is provided the sum of $1,434,500 for "conservation of health," with $113,000 of tribal funds added for the same purpose.

To-day there are 13 special physicians traveling constantly through the West treating the Indians for trachoma, and progress is being made in its eradication. Other items were used, but the specific appropriation which began in 1909 at $12,000 is in the bill that is before you—$1,434,500 from the Treasury of the United States—in addition to a trifling sum from the tribal funds.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman about how many Indians there are now?

Mr. CRAMTON. There are about 250,000; that is, outside of the Five Civilized Tribes, and there are 100,000 of those, making 353,000, as I recall.

Recently, and within the last two years, under the administration of Commissioner Burke, the medical service has been reorganized and a detail from the Public Health Service has come in, at its head Doctor Guthrie. So not only are we giving them more money but they are using it better and more effectively. If there is any item of grief in the Indian Service, and anything to which uplift organizations might well consecrate themselves for the purpose of getting some returns, it is the inadequacy of salaries in the Indian Service. That has been helped somewhat of late and we are now getting the benefit of it, but more is needed, especially in the positions of greatest responsibility.

Since I am on the subject, I came in contact while in the Southwest last fall with a man who had been nearly 40 years in the Indian Service, Mr. Charles L. Davis, the head of the White River Indian Agency for the Apaches. These Indians have a large reservation, 1,680,000 acres, or 2,625 square miles, $4,000,000 of timber in their forests, some undeveloped coal and iron mines and asbestos, large grazing areas, a tribal herd of 2,300 cattle, with a probable income of $10,000 from that herd for this year, as well as herds of permittees from which they get an income of over $30,000 for 15,000 cattle and 30,000 sheep. They derived $156,000 from timber last year. There are many individual Indians having substantial property interests, 500 individual Indians having a total of 21,650 head of stock from which their income this year is $55,000.

I met an interesting delegation of them. When the Government made up the Apache roll, after the days of Geronimo, they put them into bands and lettered the bands and numbered the individual members, and they still go by that designation. A–1 was a scout under General Crook and is now the chief of the tribe.

His brother is the medicine man of the tribe and is A–2. I met R–14, a most interesting character. When the war was on the agent suggested to R–14 that he ought to buy some Liberty bonds. He said, "How many do you think I ought to buy?" The agent said, "I think you ought to buy $10,000 worth." He came around in a day or two and said, "I will take $25,000 of them." The bonds were bought and they are in the safe of the agent. It is interesting to note that the bank in which his money had been deposited broke after that and he was fortunate to have Liberty bonds instead of that deposit.

This will give you some idea of the responsibilities, the financial responsibilities, of such an agent. Joined to this is the tactfulness required in handling 2,000 or 3,000 temperamental individuals and taking care of them. There is an order of executive ability that is required; and what do you suppose such a man with all this responsibility upon him gets after 40 years in the service, a man who has discharged his duties in a most highly commendable fashion and in a way that would have brought him a very substantial income in private employment? As I recall, he was getting $3,300 at the time of his retirement a few weeks ago.

You can not expect to get the highest type of service unless you are willing to pay somewhat nearly what it is worth; and these uplift organizations, if they would devote themselves to some such constructive effort as this, could get somewhere, whereas now with this program of calumny and propaganda they are nothing but obstructionists and destroyers.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Would the gentleman mind telling the House the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs for carrying on this great work?

Mr. CRAMTON. Seven thousand five hundred dollars for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and $5,400 for the assistant.

In connection with this matter of health, I have stated we have increased the appropriation. We have increased the facilities most wonderfully. It has been the policy of this subcommittee, in which we have had the support thoroughly of the House, to each year have a material increase in this appropriation. New hospitals are constructed each year, and this requires an addition for their support; and then the next year more new hospitals and more for their support.

The birth rate—and I quote now from the hearings a statement presented by Doctor Guthrie, an official of the Public Health Service, and a gentleman of reliability and who has the contact and familiarity with this subject—you know the trouble with figures and statistics, when you come to the Indian question, it is very hard to take a census among the Indians, either those that are sick or well, particularly such tribes as the Navajos, who inhabit great, arid wastes and who are hidden away among the brush, more or less; and so I suppose, if I went out to get some figures to make a bad case, I could find them, but here is a gentleman who is right in contact with them, who says that his figures are always somewhat incomplete, but he gives the best information he can:

> The general table of medical statistics is a consolidation of data from the various jurisdictions as tabulated from their annual reports. This table has to do principally with births and deaths and the incidence of the two main diseases, tuberculosis and trachoma. The first part of the table dealing with births and deaths shows a general birth rate for the Indian population throughout the country of 25.1 per thousand and a general death rate of 21.8, these being deaths from all causes.
> The birth rate for the period covered by this report is the lowest for any year since 1911, the highest birth rate for any fiscal year during this period being 38.8 per thousand population for 1914. The birth rate has shown a gradual but fairly constant decline.
> The death rate for the period 1911 to 1927, inclusive, has shown a downward trend, the rate for the fiscal year 1927 being the lowest with the exception of 1926, which was 18.2, and the same as 1923, when the death rate was 21.8. The highest death rate during the period 1911 to 1927, inclusive, was 35.6 for the year 1911. This excludes the fiscal year 1919, when the general death rate was influenced by deaths from influenza during the pandemic at this time.
> As stated in a footnote at the bottom of this table, the births and deaths for a given agency are often not inclusive, but are only for those cases with which the Government officials have come in contact. There are still a considerable number of births and deaths which are not brought to the knowledge of agency officials, and deaths still occur in which there has been no medical attendance and the information has come to light too late to obtain informative data thereon. The figures are considered to be indicative of trends and have a distinct value with reference to the Indian population as a whole.

The death rate for 1927 is the lowest it has been any year since 1911, except the one mentioned, and this entirely contrary to the statement submitted by these organizations.

Now, in addition to this propaganda which creates suspicion of the Government in the minds of many who make many good people believe their Government is acting unworthily, whereas, as a matter of fact, it is acting most generously and worthily, in addition to that, there is an active interference with the work of the Government.

I remember last year we had paraded before us the story of a poor Indian up in Wisconsin who was manacled and chained. He had broken prison several times on the reservation and the superintendent chained him. His offense then was a most hideous one, the abuse of three Indian girls. He broke prison several times, and we were almost led to tears at his desperate strait because he was chained up there. The appeal was made that he ought to be tried in the courts of the State instead of before an Indian judge or a superintendent.

It is interesting to bring this little incident up to date. That Indian, Paul Moore, thereafter was party to a murder, when a druggist was killed by burglars at Ashland, Wis., was this time tried in the courts of the State, and is now serving a life sentence. There will be no more occasion to worry about his being manacled on an Indian reservation.

Another organization is the Mission Indian Federation of California. A man named Jonathan Tibbetts is the head of that organization. It is in the records that up to 1922 he had collected $80,000 from these pitifully poor Indians of California, leading them to think he was getting this money so as to be able to induce the Government to do them justice.

The net result is that he secured $80,000 up to 1922, and I do not know how much since. He has organized "police" who are on the reservation, and the federation that appoints them states that their duties are "to preserve order on their respective reservations, to guard and protect the interests of the people."

The effrontery of a private organization to police a Government reservation and take over the functions of the Government! That could only culminate as it did last summer when, the officials of the Federal Government and the officials of the State and counties endeavoring to prevent some smuggling of liquor, armed interference by these unauthorized "police" resulted in the death of two or three Indians and the arrest of some of these police charged with the deaths, and they are now awaiting trial in the United States court. The hearings carry the full story.

You can see how much trouble it makes for those who have the responsibility of government among them to have such an organization thwart their efforts as I have indicated.

Sometimes you are given to understand that nearly all the money that the Government appropriates for the Indians is wasted in administration. What we spend there seems to be necessary. Each year the committee scrutinizes that, and each year we cut it down a little—what goes for administration and support. A little over $13,000,000 is proposed in this bill out of the Treasury of the United States, and out of that there is for education $7,297,000—over half of the total appropriation goes for education. That I can say, from a good deal of study of the question here and in the field, is being expended wisely and we are getting good results.

Now, the total number of children eligible for school attendance is 76,843. The number who are in Indian schools is 68,067. The number of eligible children not in school is 8,776. It is not strange that there should be several thousand children out of school, because of the conditions under which they live and their attitude in many cases as to school advantages, but we are reducing the number.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. Has the gentleman any information as to the number that attend the public schools and the number that attend the Indian schools?

Mr. CRAMTON. In the Government schools we have 25,622. On the nonreservation boarding schools we have 9,616, on the reservation boarding schools 11,616, and at the day schools 4,390. Then there are the mission schools—contract boarding 2,030, noncontract boarding 2,327, and day schools 1,266. The number in the private schools is 35,124.

So the work of the Indian Bureau proceeds along safe and sane lines, with special emphasis upon three things: First, education; second, health; and, third, industrial assistance.

Mr. KNUTSON. In your hearings did you discover whether or not the tendency is to increase or to decrease the cost of the administration of Indians?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say this, to be explicit in answer to the gentleman without evasion: The appropriation for the Indian Bureau increases, due to the increased appropriations that go exclusively and directly for health and education. The cost of administration is less—administration of Indian property and administration of the bureau; it decreases, not rapidly, but it does decrease.

Mr. KNUTSON. I notice that the item for the Minnesota Chippewas is practically the same, although a small increase is made for roads.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did the committee inquire of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to the proposal advanced by Secretary Work to transfer to the States for expenditure the money that is now being spent in education and health work among the Indians?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have never really seen the proposal of Secretary Work on that.

Mr. KNUTSON. You did not inquire about it?

Mr. CRAMTON. We did not go into it, but my inquiry and study of this subject for the last seven years has satisfied me that it would be folly to consider the decentralization of our health and educational work among the Indians. The States have a responsibility in handling their Indians, and if they fail to discharge their responsibility the result will be disastrous. The proposition is sometimes advanced that the United States should turn loose the Indians and their property. But see what happened in North Dakota, in one county up there, the Turtle Mountain Band, the county has been obliged to spend $12,000 a year for indigent Indians who are unrestricted and have been given their lands and have been turned loose. That is what would happen, and effort is being made to have us ration them generally if we turned them loose.

Now the policy of the Government is to utilize State schools wherever possible. Wherever there is a public school and they will admit the Indian children, we are ready to pay for their admission, wherever it is possible to turn the funds over and let the localities administer the schools. But to turn over all our Indian health work and educational work to the individual States would mean disorganization. In many cases it might result in the diversion of funds to purposes which the Federal Government did not contemplate. That has been illustrated by the diversion of funds in connection with the maternity act, now on the statute books, where the States, with money turned over to them for one purpose, have used it for different purposes.

I may say that something of this kind did come to my attention in connection with some resolutions the other day. While we want the States to do their share as to the health of the Indian—and I think the States in many respects have a financial responsibility—wherever possible we will cooperate, but to have the work turned over to the States entirely would destroy the organization.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman does not mean to say that the States are concerned when the Indians are still the wards of the Government and do not pay taxes and do not contribute to the support of the States?

Mr. CRAMTON. The States do not now limit their facilities for health and education to those who pay taxes. It is of the highest importance to the States that the Indian be made a useful member of society. I do not think the gentleman and I disagree as to that. The Federal Government has a responsibility which we perform generously, and I should say also that the States do have a responsibility. If the Indians should be turned loose and turned over to the States and own their property and their property made taxable, inside of three years those States would have a terrific burden placed upon them of maintaining people no longer wards of the Government and who would be no more fit to handle their property than they are now, and would soon be destitute and dependent.

PENSION BUREAU

The Bureau of Pensions bill before us carries materially less than last year. Just a word as to that. The expenditure under the appropriation for pensions for the fiscal year 1927 was $230,000,000. The appropriation had been $192,000,000, but because of new legislation affecting the Civil War and the Indian wars and the Spanish war the burden was increased. So instead of $192,000,000, the real burden was $230,000,000. There was an item in the deficiency bill last June, and because of the failure of that bill the Bureau of Pensions found that there was danger that they might not be able to pay the pensions for May and June. You can imagine the tragedy that would have happened in that case to old men and women, where it was so necessary for prompt payment. The Comptroller General was equal to the occasion; he cut the Gordian knot and gave a wrench to the law which I think everyone would approve of, because he adopted a construction that permitted every pensioner to get his pension when due.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I fully agree with what the gentleman says about what would have occurred if that order had not been made. Did the gentleman's committee investigate the 6, 8, and 12 months' delay at the present time in the Pension Bureau in handling the claims of Spanish War veterans? I have cases called to my attention where the men appeared before the examining board 6 or 8 or 10 months ago, and the decision of the commissioner has not yet been rendered, simply because the cases have not been reached. It is my understanding that the personnel of the Pension Bureau has not been increased, despite the fact that the Congress has time and again increased the work of the bureau by passing laws bringing in additional veterans under the general pension act.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the general burdens of the bureau are not so materially increased except for a period. The committee last year took the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions as to how many employees he would need under the policy of the department, and we gave him that number. Then the item went to the Senate, and the commissioner by that time thought it over and went before that body with a somewhat different showing from what he had made to us. That is not said in the way of criticism. He thought he had further information. I took some of the statements made in that hearing and tried to follow them up, and I got possibly a third and a fourth explanation. I simply mention that to point out the difficulty that we have of getting exact and positive and concise information from that bureau. I know that they have stated to other Members of Congress, and they possibly have to my friend, that they could not act more promptly because of the lack of employees. I suggested in the course of our hearings the possibility of some survey of the bureau to determine the real facts, but that suggestion did not meet with enthusiasm. You will find that in the hearings we did discuss with them the number of employees that they want, and the commissioner urged that the policy then followed of not filling vacancies caused by retirement or death or resignation should not be followed further. From the statement made before us the amount recommended by the committee, which is the amount proposed by the Budget, is very substantially what the commissioner says that he will need for the next year. If my recollection serves me, his figure was perhaps $10,000 more, on an item of something like $1,000,000, as I remember. The difference between the figure recommended by the committee and the statement made by the commissioner, as I give it from recollection, is not sufficient to justify any material delay in handling the cases; and the gentleman must remember that when Congress puts more burden upon such a service, and possibly several thousand new claims are filed quickly, it is not feasible to immediately increase that organization so as to handle that great crush of new business without delay.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. At the same time, I do not feel that there should be a delay until the 1st of July in giving them the help they need to take care of the claims of Spanish War veterans, who are in need of financial assistance by reason of their disability at the present time, and whose examinations by the Pension Bureau physicians show that they are entitled to a pension under the act.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman please tell us where the Treasury found the money to meet these claims?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is what I was just about to come to. There was an appropriation of $192,000,000 for 1927, and added responsibilities were $38,000,000. The ruling of the comptroller, which you will find in the hearings, permitted the use of the 1928 appropriation for pensions, to pay the 1927 pensions. The only difference was, if they had been held over until the 1st of July, we would have had to pay them then, just the same out of the 1928 pensions. The only effect of his ruling was that these old men and women had their money when due, instead of waiting one or two months. There was the $38,000,000 added responsibilities from 1927, and then the commissioner came before the deficiency appropriation committee last December and said that he needed $8,000,000 more for 1928—$46,000,000 of a deficiency this year, to take care of that burden brought over from another year and the increased burden for 1928. The total expenditures for 1927 amounts to $230,000,000 and for 1928 it is now anticipated will be $229,000,000. For 1929 the estimate of the Budget is $210,000,000. There are so many things entering into this a year and a half in the future, through the death of pensioners and the presenting of new applications and their disposition that it can not be forecast absolutely. In our hearings the Commissioner of Pensions, on our insistence, expressed belief that about $217,500,000 will be necessary instead of $210,000,000, with a fluctuation between $213,000,000 to $220,000,000—something like that. My own judgment is that the $210,000,000 is a little short of what will be our obligations.

This fund is a fund in the use of which the bureau has no discretion. It can not be used for anything except the payment of pensions, and for those who have been found entitled to the pension. Therefore, the committee recommended in this language the addition of the words "immediately available," with the idea that hereafter we shall carry that language each year. So that each year the difficulty that was faced last May, if there should be a deficiency, will not again occur and the appropriation of the following year may be used.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the committee made any provision for paying the expenses of contact officers from the Pension Bureau for the service they do in the different encampments?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. We have heard the gentlemen in touch with that question. We have concluded to give authority to the Secretary to allow them to attend the meetings.

RETIREMENT FUND

An important question coming under the bill under the Bureau of Pensions has to do with the retirement act. This bill carries for the first time $19,950,000 to refund or pay the Federal contribution for going on with the retirement act.

If I may be permitted to make this statement without interruption, I shall be glad, and then if I can answer questions I shall be glad to do that. The subject is one that I think is complicated for most Members of the House; it certainly is for me. I think possibly, if I can make a continuous statement with the information I have been able to get, you will get a better idea about it than if I were interrupted. As to this matter of the obligation of the Government in connection with the civil-service retirement and disability fund, I do not think that there is anything in the bill that is more important. It is the beginning of a policy to provide for financing our obligations under the retirement law. There are many propositions to extend the responsibility of the Government with reference to retirement of civil-service employees. An editorial appeared in the Post this morning which commented on one, a very important proposition, it seems to me, by which the employees will pay less and get more and pay for a shorter period, and so forth, and thereby the Federal Government relieved entirely from any financial responsibility. Probably I do not fully understand the editorial, but that is the understanding I got from it. But we have many propositions to shorten the period before the employee can be retired. I can not feel any enthusiasm about that. I think there is no greater tragedy in life than when a man is interested in his work and reaches a period when he still can perform that work, to be told that he must retire.

That is a tragedy, and I hope I never get into a position where they will tell me I have got to quit. Of course, all Members of Congress face that possibility. The questions that naturally arise in connection with this item are—

Why should an appropriation be made at this time when there is already in the fund over $68,000,000, and the fund is rapidly increasing from the contributions made by the employees? and,

If an appropriation is necessary, why is the amount to be appropriated fixed at $19,950,000?

It is a sound principle of government that in times of peace the Government should pay its way as it goes. Our Government can not do this with respect to the civil-service retirement and disability fund unless it begins to appropriate at once. Pensions are merely deferred pay and should be provided for as they are earned.

If, when the retirement act took effect in 1920, (1) every one of the 400,000 and more employees had just entered the service, and (2) if the Government had exacted thereafter from each of those employees a contribution that would have been sufficient, with compound interest, to provide in full for his own retirement, if those two conditions had existed, then there would be no necessity now nor at any time in the future of appropriating a dollar. But the situation was entirely different.

It has been my impression that many Government employees have the impression that their contributions pay the full cost of what they are to get, and I think many Members of Congress have that understanding. However, I hope this may bring the matter to their attention in such a way as to largely disabuse their minds of that impression. The day the retirement act took effect about 7,000 employees were eligible for retirement who had not contributed a penny to the retirement fund and they, under the law, share just the same as if they had contributed during all the required period of the law.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Then the appropriations provided for by law take care of the accrued obligations——

Mr. CRAMTON (interposing). If the gentleman will permit I am sure I will get to that. There have been no appropriations by law heretofore. This is the first appropriation to meet the Government's obligation and that obligation of the Government comes from two sources: First, that those who were in the service when the act took effect, whether they retired one month after the act took effect or 50 years after it took effect, will get the rates provided in the law, regardless of their own contributions; and, second, that the rate provided in the law to pay the annuities provided in the law is insufficient to meet those annuities.

As I say, the day the retirement act took effect about 7,000 employees were eligible for retirement who had not contributed a penny to the retirement fund; and, in addition to these 7,000, there were also in the service about 400,000 employees with periods of service to their credit ranging all the way from one day to 50 or more years who had contributed nothing in the past and whose pensions could not be provided for in full by contributions during the remainder of their services.

In order to pay the pensions of those who retired at once without contributing anything, and those who were approaching retirement age, whose contributions would be insufficient, and to make up the deficiencies in the contributions of those who would retire in the future the act required (sec. 8, par. 1, act 1920) that the contributions of all employees should be placed in a common fund which could be drawn upon immediately for pension payments.

It is obvious that this arrangement was merely a temporary expedient to provide the necessary capital to pay the pensions. It in no way relieved the Government of the necessity of making appropriations in the future. The act goes on to provide (sec. 11)— > that in the case an employee is separated from the service before retirement on annuity, the total amount of his deductions with interest shall * * * be returned to him—and (sec. 5, par. 4) that—> in all cases where the annuity is discontinued * * * before the annuitant has received a sum equal to the total amount of his contributions with interest, the difference shall be paid to the employee or to his estate.

In other words, the law provides that the minimum that an employee shall receive in any event is the amount that he has paid, with compound interest thereon at 4 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied one hour.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the minimum he can receive. If he resigns before his retirement age, then what he puts in is paid back to him; if he is retired and dies before he has received as much as he has contributed, plus the compound interest, his estate gets the balance. On the other hand, if he retires and lives a long period so that he exhausts an amount equal to his contribution, plus the compound interest, and then continues to draw money, somebody has got to pay that, and as no employee is to receive any less under any circumstances than he has contributed, plus the compound interest, naturally no one employee can be called upon to pay the annuity of another, and that leaves the Government to do the job.

It is obvious from these two provisions that not one penny of the deficiency in the contributions of one employee could be made up from the contributions of another employee, but that ultimately every penny taken from the fund to pay an employee a benefit which he had not provided for himself would sooner or later have to be returned to the fund out of the Treasury of the United States with compound interest at 4 per cent.

That this was recognized by the framers of the act may logically be inferred from the reports of the committees which accompanied the bills both in the House and the Senate, and the debates on the floors of both Houses, and also the provision carried in section 15 of the act which reads as follows:

> The Secretary of the Interior shall submit annually to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates of appropriations necessary to continue this act in full force and effect.

Under this arrangement no estimate was ever submitted by the Secretary of the Interior until last year, and that estimate was not included in the Budget for the current year.

According to the records of the Bureau of Pensions more than $40,000,000 had been paid out of the fund in annuities under this arrangement prior to July 1, 1927. The first year the annuity payments amounted, in round figures, to $2,600,000; the second year to $4,200,000; the third year to $5,000,000; the fourth year to $5,700,000; the fifth year to $6,200,000; the sixth year to $6,800,000; and the seventh year to $9,600,000.

It will be seen that the annuity payments have increased every year since the act was passed, and I believe they will continue to increase for many years to come. The employees that went on pension in 1920 were the survivors of the active force of 30 years prior to that time; those who went on pension last year were likewise the survivors of the active force of 30 years ago. We may, therefore, fairly assume that the number of persons that will retire from year to year in the future will increase at about the same rate that the active force has increased from year to year in the past. This means that pension payments will probably increase within the next 10 years to a point where they will finally exceed the employees' net annual contributions; that is, after making deductions for refunds to those dying or withdrawing from the service. Such net annual contributions of employees now amount to approximately $20,500,000 ($24,358,882—$3,862,288=$20,493,594). When that time is reached the amount in the fund will begin to diminish rapidly and in the course of 10 years more the fund will be exhausted and thereafter the Government will have to provide each year the difference between the amount of the employees' net contributions and the total pension payments.

It is fair to assume that within the next 30 or 40 years the total pension payments and refunds will have increased to about $40,000,000 a year.

The board of actuaries tell us that, according to the valuation which they made as of July 1, 1927, the obligation which the Government assumed when the retirement act became law in 1920, plus that which it has incurred between that date and July 1, 1927, amounts to $393,000,000. This is generally referred to as the "accrued liability." This debt might be held indefinitely at its present amount by simply appropriating interest on it at 4 per cent, which would amount to $15,720,000 a year. The pay roll of the employees covered under the act amounted on July 1, 1927, to $798,000,000. This appropriation of $15,720,000 amounts to 1.97 per cent of the pay roll. Therefore if the Government were to appropriate 1.97 per cent of the pay roll, the accrued liability could be held at its present amount of $393,000,000. Such an appropriation would not, however, fully meet the obligation of the Government, for the contributions made by the employees at the rate of 3.5 per cent of their salaries have been found by actuarial determination to fall short of the amount required to pay the benefits by 0.48 of 1 per cent of the annual pay roll. Forty-eight hundredths of 1 per cent of the pay roll amounts to $3,851,794. Therefore if the Government were to appropriate 2.45 (1.97+0.48) per cent of the pay roll, or $19,572,729, it would hold the accrued liability at its present level and would provide its share of the accruing liability during the coming year.

When I say that to appropriate 2.45 per cent of the pay roll it will hold the accrued liability at its present amount and pay the Government's accruing liability, I mean provided the pay roll remains at its present level of $798,000,000. If the pay roll increases beyond this amount the contribution corresponding to the increase would tend to liquidate some part of the liability of $393,000,000.

In considering this question of the amount which the Government might properly appropriate for account of the retirement fund, the Budget Bureau decided to recommend an appropriation of an even 2.5 per cent of the pay roll, or a total of $19,950,000. This would mean that the difference between 2.45 per cent and 2.50 per cent of the pay roll, or, roughly, $400,000, the Government would apply to the liquidation of this accrued liability of $393,000,000.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Will the gentleman please explain how the employees' contributions are invested by the Government?

Mr. CRAMTON. I had hoped to cover that, but I do not have that information fully at hand. However, it is in the buying of bonds which are set aside in a separate fund and on which interest is paid. I think they are Government bonds.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think they are largely farm-loan bonds.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Will the gentleman tell us what the average yield is?

Mr. CRAMTON. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury gives information as to the various retirement funds. The gentleman will understand that there are other retirement funds in operation—the State Department, the Army, the Navy, and so forth. On pages 136 and 137 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year ending June 30, 1927, is a statement with reference to this, and I will insert at this point the tabulation which appears on page 136:

Assets:		Principal cost
$22,695,050	face amount fourth Liberty loan 4¼ per cent bonds	$22,399,454.01
31,200,000	face amount 4 per cent special Treasury notes, payable June 30, 1931	31,200,000.00
14,400,000	face amount 4 per cent special Treasury notes, payable June 30, 1932	14,400,000.00
68,295,050			$67,999,454.01
Unexpended balances June 30, 1927			424,831.17
Total fund assets			68,424,285.18

Mr. BRIGHAM. It is probable that some of the securities are actually earning in excess of 4 per cent.

Mr. CRAMTON. Probably some of them do. I think the gentleman will find that section of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of interest.

The question may be asked, How many years will the Government be required to appropriate this $19,950,000? Fifteen million seven hundred and twenty thousand dollars of that amount is interest on the accrued liabilities of $393,000,000. The length of time that the Government will have to appropriate the interest on this amount will depend entirely upon the rapidity with which the debt is liquidated. If it is not liquidated at all, the Government will have to appropriate it in perpetuity.

The question is whether the Government shall begin now to meet its obligations to the retirement fund as they are incurred from year to year, pay the interest on the accrued liabilities of $393,000,000, and create a small sinking fund starting with approximately one-half million dollars a year, or shall it allow its obligations to the fund to remain unpaid and to accumulate at compound interest until ultimately it will be called upon to appropriate about $40,000,000 a year. If it begins to appropriate 2.5 per cent of the pay roll now, the Government will be meeting its entire accruing liability from year to year and will be gradually liquidating the debt of $393,000,000 which it originally assumed. When this original liability has been wiped out, the Government's contributions will be reduced to less than one-half of 1 per cent of the pay roll, or approximately $4,000,000 a year. This amount is what is referred to in the report of the board of actuaries as "the Government's normal contributions," and is stated as forty-eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the pay roll.

The question therefore comes down to a practical one of whether the Government shall adopt a program involving an annual contribution of 2.5 per cent of the pay roll or approximately $20,000,000 a year, which will ultimately be reduced to forty-eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the pay roll, or approximately $4,000,000 a year; or shall it postpone appropriations for 20 years until the fund is exhausted and then be required to provide increasing amounts annually until in 40 years from now it must appropriate nearly $40,000,000 a year in perpetuity.

At that time the fund will be exhausted and the Government will owe the employees, in round figures, $875,000,000 on account of money borrowed from the fund to pay pensions. The pensions will then amount to about $35,000,000 and refunds to $32,000,000, making a total annual expenditure of $67,000,000. This expenditure will be met by the interest of $35,000,000 on the floating debt of $875,000,000, plus the Government's normal contribution of $4,000,000, represented by forty-eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the pay roll, plus the employees' contributions of $28,000,000. The fund will then stand as follows:

Income:
Interest at 4 per cent on the floating debt of $875,000,000 to employees	$35,000,000
Normal contributions by the Government of forty-eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent of pay roll	4,000,000
Contributions by employees of 3.5 per cent of pay roll	28,000,000
Total	67,000,000
Expenditures:
Pensions	35,000,000
Refunds	32,000,000

At that time the Government will, in fact, be paying the entire cost of the pensions and in addition the excess of refunds over the contributions amounting to about $4,000,000 a year, and to that extent will be worse off than if no contributions were exacted from the employees. This situation would be the direct outcome of the Government's failure to meet its current obligations for pensions at the time the obligations are incurred.

In the hearings you will find quite a presentation of this matter and quite a showing of what was in the minds of various ones connected with the legislation at the time it passed Congress in 1920 and in 1926. I will only quote this extract from the report of the Committee on the Civil Service, which I think was presented by the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. LEHLBACH. This report accompanied the bills which became law July 3, 1926, and in that report it is said:

> Generally the sum contributed by the employee is less than the cost of the annuity, and the difference is paid by the Government.
> The resources of the fund comprise the contributions of the employees with their interest accumulations and such appropriations as the Government must needs make to meet the liabilities, comprised of annuity payments and refunds.
> While contributions to the retirement fund have only been made since August, 1920, the benefits of retirement were made fully available to all employees within the system at that time. Those who were immediately retired when the law came into operation had contributed nothing toward their annuity and consequently the proportion of contribution by the Government to meet the cost of the annuity was 100 per cent. With each year the proportion the Government must pay will diminish, but will not completely reach the normal cost while there exists annuitants who were in the service prior to August, 1920.

On the other hand, a policy that ignores all Government liability and continues to meet all obligations of the fund out of the contributions of the employees and their earnings will have this result. Eventually the outgo will exceed the income and the cash balance in the fund will be gone. Thereafter it will be incumbent on the Government to appropriate annually to pay all annuities and to return all refunds with accumulated interest, less only the contributions for that year. To saddle upon future generations such an unwarranted expenditure is unconscionable.

Hence, I take it, the recommendation of the Budget and of the committee will have the indorsement of the gentleman from New Jersey, who was chairman of the committee which legislated on this question.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It most emphatically has.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I am sure the gentleman from New Jersey knows a great deal more about this subject than I can ever hope to know.

Have I reached the points the gentleman from Illinois had in mind?

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. I think the gentleman has answered the question.

Mr. CRAMTON. I must not trespass much more on the time of the committee. I will just touch on one or two other features of the bill in a briefer fashion.

Mr. MURPHY. May I refresh the gentleman's memory at this point for the sake of making the record complete?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. I think the facts brought out on page 756 of the hearings, when the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] asked Mr. McCoy some questions, should appear here:

Mr. FRENCH. Let us put into the record at this point a statement that will show the total deficit as of June 30, 1927.

Mr. MCCOY. $440,558,433 would be the appropriation required by the Government as of June 30, 1927, to balance the total liabilities.

Mr. TAYLOR. Assuming that there is a legal liability under the law?

Mr. MCCOY. Well, we will leave the Government out. That is the amount necessary to balance the liability.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, according to the figures of Mr. McCoy, on June 30, 1927, the Government owed $440,558,433 to this retirement fund.

Mr. CRAMTON. And this appropriation is the first step toward meeting the obligations of the Government.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Four hundred and forty million dollars is not actually owed to the retirement fund on June 30, 1927, or any other time. Four hundred and forty million dollars is the present value of the payments to be made by the Government from August 22, 1920, until the last person who was in the employ of the Government in 1920 shall have died; that is, it is what it will owe over a course of possibly 40 or 50 years. It is the present value of what they will owe for half a century.

Mr. CRAMTON. Manifestly, that must be so.

Mr. MURPHY. The Government is doing the same thing with respect to this $440,000,000 that any great life insurance company would be required to do.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is an obligation which, when it accrues, will amount to that. Of course, if it were not as the gentleman from New Jersey has said, then this appropriation we have would not suffice to meet it in any appreciable degree. Of course, as soon as we make this appropriation it begins to bear the compounding of interest, and so forth.

RECLAMATION SERVICE

As to the reclamation fund carried in this bill, there is an appropriation of $12,614,000.

I will put in the RECORD a statement of the resources of that fund and from what the income is expected to be derived. I will not take your time now further than to say that they anticipate they will have on hand at the beginning of this next fiscal year $15,229,700, and an appropriation of $12,614,000 is as close to the amount that it is expected the fund will have available as we ought to go when we remember that the moneys are somewhat problematical as to returns.

Estimate of reclamation funds available, fiscal year 1929

Item	Actual			Estimated
	1925	1926	1927	1928	1929
Sale of public lands and town lots	$761,580	$510,600	$596,200	$700,000	$700,000

Total available	18,217,390	18,148,300	17,925,500	19,358,400	15,229,700

There is one thing in connection with this that I would like to call to the attention of the committee, and that is the proposed expansion of the Reclamation Service, to the South particularly, using appropriations out of the Federal Treasury. The reclamation fund, as operated in the West, in the public-land States, is operated out of money received in that fund from the public resources of those States. In other words, the reclamation has been carried on largely by money derived from sale of oil and minerals and public lands in the public-land States.

Now, we are about to meet a proposition to extend the work of reclamation in the Southern States to what is called cut-over lands and swamp lands.

In the discussions the matter has been broad enough to cover my State; in fact, there is an organization, the National Drainage League, or something of the kind, that is circularizing the country and wrote to the county drainage commissioner of one county in my district, a prosperous county where they spend thousands and thousands of money for drains. This National Drainage Association sent a circular to that county drainage commissioner—as it probably has to thousands of others—leading him to believe they had under way a program that would relieve the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, from further expenditures for drainage and let the Federal Government take it over.

Of course, the program that actually will be presented to us will not be as far-reaching as that. Such a program would fall of its own weight; but the program is in certain States that have been most active in it—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, all of the States that are developed and have quite abundant resources—that in these States the Reclamation Service shall enter on a work of development, as set forth in the following resolutions set forth in the recent conference in Washington:

Whereas reclamation as now defined is a movement for better homes in directed country life centers for diversified farming, for education based upon the natural endowments of our people, for full use of all modern transportation and market facilities, and for the fullest application of available scientific knowledge.

Whereas successful demonstration of such a program is essential to our economic, social, and political life; and

Whereas the opportunities and needs of the South make it an appropriate field for these demonstrations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we recommend as the general plan of development that approved by the Chief of the Bureau of Reclamation, which is based upon the report to the Secretary of the Interior, of an able and impartial advisory committee appointed by him, and further upon the detailed reports of the bureau experts made as the result of recent surveys authorized by Congress.

Second. That the Congress be asked to pass at this session such legislation as will authorize the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior to carry out this program as rapidly as practicable.

Third. That an appropriation of $14,000,000 be requested, of which $2,000,000 shall be available for one project in each of the following States: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee, in which States expert investigation already has been made; the exact amounts required and used to be determined within these limits by the Bureau of Reclamation.

Sufficient data has been gathered in South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Tennessee to enable plans and estimates of reclamation and farm development to be made and to forecast what benefits could be anticipated from such development.

In North Carolina, Florida, and Alabama these investigations have not been completed. The appropriation of $15,000 requested will be sufficient to accomplish this result and complete a final report on the work in all seven States. No further appropriations for investigations of this character seem to be necessary unless some constructive action is decided upon and legislation fixing the extent of the Federal Government's participation is enacted by Congress.

At a conference held in Washington December 14 and 15 this view was explained and a plan of future action outlined which contemplated the creation from private sources of a fund for financing certain features of the development and legislation by Congress to provide for planning and supervision only. The conference did not approve of this plan, but decided to ask Congress to finance this development.

The recommendation of the department has been that the Federal Government should not do more than give its services, and that the expenditures should come from the States and communities. But those resolutions urge that the total appropriation should come from the Federal Treasury. I do not know what the doctrine of State rights will come to in some sections of the country unless the desire for spending Federal funds is lessened in some way. I believe it is a serious matter—this desire to have the Government enter on a large improvement program out of the Federal Treasury in communities that are organized and have resources and that I believe can more economically and wisely handle their own problems. It was different in the West in the case of Nevada, Wyoming, and New Mexico, where there was a large amount of public land and the Federal Government felt that it was responsible for developing its own land. In cases like Alabama, Tennessee, and Georgia they have their own resources, their own organization in communities where they can very well carry on the work themselves.

Mr. WINTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. WINTER. It should also be noted that in cases of the West in these large areas there was only 5 or 8 per cent of agricultural land and the balance was nonagricultural.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is true. Now, the proposed legislation provides that the money shall be returned to the Government in 28 years with interest. We started the reclamation projects with the statement that the money was to come back in 10 years without interest; without interest because they always urged that it was their money and resources, and it was urged that 90 per cent would be used on public lands and come back in 10 years. That was extended to 20 years, and now it is 40 years without interest. This proposition says that the money will come back in 28 years. I wonder if we came back 20 years from now what the thing would be like; that is, if it once is started. As to the Geological Survey there is an apparent decrease in the appropriation, but an actual increase, due to an item the committee have recommended exceeding the Budget figure by $50,000 on the work of gauging streams in order that we may cooperate more fully with the States.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

As to construction of roads in the national parks, the bill appropriates two and one-half million dollars, of which a million and a half dollars is to pay prior obligations, some for new work.

The Budget recommended authority to contract obligations to the amount of a million and a half dollars, but the committee have recommended authority to contract additional obligations to the extent of $4,000,000 based upon this theory: First, that the increased attendance in the national parks, the increase of automobile travel in them is such as to make imperative the construction of additional roads and a more rapid development of roads than we have had heretofore. For instance, in the Yosemite Park the attendance was 490,000 for the year ending October 1 last, nearly treble the attendance two or three years ago, and in the other parks there is also an increase, though not as rapid, but on the whole 20 per cent per annum.

The roads program does not mean that the full $4,000,000 would come into the fiscal year of 1929; it means that there would be appropriated next December perhaps $2,500,000, certainly not more, if we adopt this authorization. Our purpose is to go along on a program of $5,000,000 a year. Further, this authorization will save money. For instance, if the road to be constructed is a job that takes more than one year, as the Mount Carmel Road in the Mount Zion Park, Utah—this year they contracted $605,000 for part of the road. Next year they will let the contract for the other portion of it. The contractor who is in there with his equipment will have an advantage over others when the next contract is let, which he will keep for himself rather than give to the Government.

If we had let the contract for the full million dollars' worth of work to be done in two years, then the Government would have gotten the advantage of that, and whoever bid would have known that in turning in their equipment and their organization, they would have had two years' work before them.

Some day I would like to talk to the House about the situation with reference to roads in the Yosemite National Park and the failure of the city of San Francisco to perform its obligations under the Hetch Hetchy act that passed years ago. But I am not going to take the time to do that now, but will do it at some future time when I have not tired you as much as I have to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman leaves the national parks, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Is the appropriation for roads and trails throughout the national parks which was allowed this year, sufficient to take care of the program that the park service has in mind for the year 1928, or approximately that?

Mr. CRAMTON. For the year 1928?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. For the actual construction they intend to undertake in 1928.

Mr. CRAMTON. This bill is to provide for next year, although it is true that the funds are made immediately available to be used for the construction season of 1928.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That is my understanding of it, from the language of the bill. What I am trying to get at is whether or not the amount actually appropriated for roads and trails throughout the national parks will be sufficient to carry out the program outlined by the park service.

Mr. CRAMTON. Here is the situation: $50,000,000 worth of roads are to be built. I do not say they are all going to be built out of this appropriation or that it is all that the park service would like to build this year, but this amount will cover the proposed $5,000,000 program which I think the gentleman has in mind.

EDUCATION OF NATIVES OF ALASKA

The $26,500 for the Bureau of Education in Alaska is due to the feeling of the committee that we have an obligation there to perform in extending the work among the natives of Alaska. I think I speak for the members of the committee when I say that. I know of the interest which the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] has shown particularly, and I think probably we would like to go further than we have in this bill. The $26,500 permits a school to be established at Kanakanak, where the canneries are donating the building, and we provide the equipment and maintenance. Then there is $9,000 for a school at Egegik, which is a most desolate place along the shores, the item being brought to our attention by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and we are satisfied that it is highly important that it should be established. Back of this is this situation: Several years ago it had been the policy to bring the children from Alaska to the Indian school at Chemawa, Oreg., for education. We stopped that policy several years ago, and each year there is a provision in the bill which prevents it. That is for two reasons. In the first place, Chemawa is needed for the Indian children of this country, and secondly we felt that the natives of Alaska were not getting the training that they should have away from their own environment. So, several years ago, we started in to build up the industrial schools among the natives of Alaska, and, as a matter of fact, that work ought to progress more rapidly than it has. The budget before us had nothing for new construction and expansion. We have only provided those two schools. We would like to provide more for industrial training. Personally, I think we ought to expend from $50,000 to $100,000 each year, spreading that work up there.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I would ask in respect about the period over which this industrial education has extended.

Mr. CRAMTON. I should say four or five years.

Mr. FRENCH. Since that policy has been inaugurated.

Mr. CRAMTON. And the gentleman will find that it is bringing in very good results. There are very good reports upon it. The gentleman understands how the natives of Alaska are. They are on the shore, scattered in that immense line up, say, into the Arctic regions, remote from everything, and their old-time industry of fishing is disappearing. We think this work is being carried on in a practical way.

Mr. HUDSON. To really reach them there must be a number of schools rather than to try and gather them into large schools.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Probably the chairman of the committee should say that we are caring for some 4,000 children, but those children mostly are in the lower grades, and the ones to which the chairman has referred now are for the most part more advanced pupils, where we are trying to care for them in three industrial schools.

Mr. HUDSON. I would apprehend that the chairman of the committee means that the industrial work would have to apply to the higher grades.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. The other education, as Mr. FRENCH suggests, has been going on for a long time. I am sure that my colleague from Michigan will be much interested in the facts brought out by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], who is very much interested in this work in connection with Alaska.

PROSPECTORS IN M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK

I want now to call the attention of the House to the McKinley National Park, which is a wonderful reservation for game and a wonderful scenic area. When the law passed it contained authority to prospect for minerals in the park area. I suppose that was necessary in order to get the legislation through. At the present time I am advised that there is no active prospecting for minerals in the park area. There is one area that has been somewhat developed, the Copper River, or some such name. There was joined with that privilege of prospecting in the park area the privilege to the prospector of killing game for food, not to be taken out of the park.

Now, of course, anybody that you find in the park now killing game is a "prospector," and he was killing it for food. In the first place, if it is to be a national park it should be preserved without mining operations other than those heretofore authorized. I think the prospecting privilege should be eliminated; certainly with the building of the railroad and the development of other roads and the availability of other food supplies. If we are not willing to drop out prospecting, we should withdraw the right of prospectors to kill game in that wonderful domain. At present the game is frightened by hunters, and the visitors to the park lose the pleasure they would otherwise have in seeing the wild life in its natural state.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Washington, January 5, 1928.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CRAMTON: I have your letter of January 3 in regard to the law and the regulations pertaining to prospecting and killing of game in Mount McKinley National Park, Alaska. Following are extracts from the organic law establishing the park and rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior. The act of February 26, 1917 (39 Stat. 939, U. S. C. p. 410, sec. 352), provides that—

"The said park is established as a game refuge, and no person shall kill any game in said park except under an order from the Secretary of the Interior for the protection of persons or to protect or prevent the extermination of other animals or birds. Prospectors and miners engaged in prospecting or mining in said park may take and kill therein so much game or birds as may be needed for their actual necessities when short of food; but in no case shall animals or birds be killed in said park for sale or removal therefrom, or wantonly."

Under authority of the above law the Secretary of the Interior promulgated the following regulations in regard to hunting in the park:

"The park is a sanctuary for wild life of every sort, and hunting, killing, wounding, or capturing any bird or wild animal in the park, except dangerous animals when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying life or inflicting injury, is prohibited.

"Prospectors and miners actually engaged in prospecting or mining within the limits of the park may kill park game or birds needed for their actual necessities when short of food; but in no case shall animals or birds be killed in the park for sale or for removal therefrom or wantonly. Each prospector or miner killing animals or birds under these regulations must keep a detailed record in writing of animals and birds killed, open to the inspection of the superintendent, which shall at the first opportunity be sent to the superintendent after the prospecting or mining is ended. No animals shall be killed within the park limits primarily for the purpose of dog food, except with the prior permission in writing from the superintendent, but when animals are killed for food by prospectors or miners the excess portions may be fed dogs without such prior permission.

"The outfits, including guns, traps, horses, or means of transportation used by persons illegally engaged in hunting, killing, trapping, and snaring or capturing birds or wild animals, or in possession of game killed on the park lands under circumstances other than prescribed above shall be taken up by the superintendent and held subject to the order of the Director of the National Park Service. Firearms, carried by others than legitimate miners and prospectors, are prohibited in the park except on written permission of the superintendent."

With regard to the rights of prospectors within the park the following is an excerpt from the act of establishment, section 4, "Nothing in this act shall in any way modify or affect the mineral land laws applicable to the lands in the said park." In other words these lands were not withdrawn from location for the purposes of prospecting for minerals within the boundaries of the said park. By the act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), it is provided that—

"All valuable mineral deposits in lands belonging to the United States, both surveyed and unsurveyed, shall be free and open to exploration and purchase, and the lands in which they are found to occupation and purchase, by citizens of the United States and those who have declared their intention to become such, under regulations prescribed by law, and according to the local customs or rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with the laws of the United States."

Under this law all citizens of the United States have the right to enter the park lands for the purposes of prospecting for mineral deposits. Prospecting permits for coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas are not obtainable in Mount McKinley.

The following is an extract from the superintendent's monthly report for the month of February, 1927:

"From a general observation made during last month, Chief Ranger Nyberg states he is fully convinced that the trappers, plying their profession outside the park boundaries, have increased at least 100 per cent over last year's quota. The rehabilitation of the park's wild life and its subsequent overflow to the neighboring localities is without doubt the cause of this, and incidentally proves that which has always been contended that leave the park animals alone and by unrestricted breeding their number will increase so as to force them to turn to those sections of the country outside the park boundaries. Here they would be offered a less crowded domain and possible larger feeding grounds, and would there be the legitimate prey and prize of the hunters and trappers."

It may also be said that even though the park has not suffered from the molestations of trappers as of yore, still there is room for a vast improvement in the attitude of the majority of prospectors in and adjoining the park area.

Nothing stated in the above paragraphs must be construed that there is now small warrant for additional rangers. The demand for an increased personnel is greater than ever.

The following is an extract from the superintendent's monthly report for the month of May, 1927:

"A rather good illustration of the character of one of the so-called prospectors operating within the confines of the park may be gained from a sketch of events occurring lately. Though the exact dates are lacking, the information is authentic and can be corroborated at any time.

"During the past month a Mr. Carlson, prospecting in the park and trapping in its environs, was arrested by the Territorial game warden for trapping beaver out of season. At the same time he had shot a white-skinned cow moose and had endeavored to sell the hide as a novelty. For this latter act he was also indicted for two counts under the Alaskan game law for killing out of season and the shooting of a female, which is prohibited. Upon his trial he was found guilty on six counts, and costs aggregating $1,000, and his pelts confiscated. He had also been in the habit of using from 9 to 12 dogs in his team and was ordered by the game commission to use only five hereafter. The reason for this was the commission concluded that a man of his caliber did not require that many dogs and that such a large team was a bad drain on the wild animal life (which he no doubt killed for dog feed).

"This type of 'prospector' is not wanted in the country, as his operations are detrimental to the wild life and also to the morale of others (though remunerative to the Territorial treasury). It is to be hoped that restrictions may be placed on such individuals while prospecting within the park.

"It may also be said in this case that Superintendent Karstens had visited this man's 'prospecting cabin' in the park about two years ago and therein found stretching boards (for fur), moose horns, and other evidences of illegal hunting and trapping. Chief Ranger Nyberg also kicked up a trap line in 1925, which it was conclusively found to belong to the same Mr. Carlson."

I trust this information is that which you desired.

Sincerely yours,

ARNO B. CAMMERER, Acting Director.

I want to call attention to the fact that the operation deficit of the Alaskan Railroad dropped below $900,000 during the year. It is the first year that it has been below $1,000,000. The operating deficit of the Alaskan Railroad for 1929 is practically one-half what it was in 1925. Quite a lot of expenditures are being carried on for betterments that will further reduce the operating cost. Those betterments are of a permanent character.

FREEDMEN'S HOSPITAL

The only other thing that I desire to mention is the item with reference to Freedmen's Hospital, the last item in the bill. That is an institution that almost exclusively cares for the colored people. It was established by the Federal Government, and has been maintained exclusively by the Federal Government for many years, except occasionally when new construction was necessary. The District government in former years has paid partly for that new construction, but that has been rather an exception to the rule. It is a local institution, and it is the one hospital in the District of Columbia where the colored people generally are sent. There are a few exceptions. Sometimes they are sent to Gallinger. But generally they are sent now to Freedmen's Hospital. Colored patients, with their residence somewhere outside, are occasionally sent to this hospital, but the patients in most cases are resident somewhere in the District of Columbia. Of course, in a city like Detroit when a colored person is taken ill he is taken to a hospital, and every city has the duty of taking care of the stranger within its gates. He may not have a voting residence in Detroit, but if he is in Detroit and is taken ill, Detroit cares for him, just as the city of Chicago would take care of him if he were taken ill in Chicago and had a residence in Detroit. It is not to be believed that of the colored people of the Nation a great number come to Washington for the express purpose of getting treatment in this Freedmen's Hospital. They check up on them as nearly as they can, and establish a place of residence for them outside the District wherever possible, so that the figures they tabulate for us in the hearings may be deemed conservative as to the responsibility of the District. There were 938 patients who are shown to be residents pure and simple of the District out of about 2,800 indigent patients. Those are the ones for whom they could not find any excuse for charging up to the States. Then there is about the same number from Maryland and Virginia. Those are adjacent sections, in most instances just over the boundary line. There were 487 from Virginia and 490 from Maryland. Two thousand then live in the District of Columbia and just over the line, probably. In addition, there are about 19,000 ambulatory cases that the superintendent says are entirely District people.

The District has not provided any institution for the colored. They take some of them into Gallinger, but send most of them to the Freedmen's Hospital. They have been paying a per capita contract price for their indigent, but that does not include any of the overhead of the hospital or the new buildings, and so forth.

Frankly, a good deal may be said in favor of turning the institution over to the District so that they might have a hospital of their own, but the colored people have come to look upon it as being intended for them, and they prefer it as a Federal institution. The staff of the hospital—Superintendent Warfield and his excellent staff—now have a civil-service status which they would lose if they were turned over to the District. We felt that this was almost exclusively a District institution.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BERGER. Is the staff made up of colored people?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it is, entirely.

Mr. FRENCH. I believe so, entirely.

Mr. HUDSON. Does it have any connection with Howard University and its school of medicine, and so forth?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; except that a hospital and a school of medicine need an affiliation. The medical school of the university maintains a connection with the hospital. Both institutions acquire a benefit from that arrangement. But whether it was a Federal or a District institution, both Howard University and the Freedmen's Hospital would find it advantageous to continue that arrangement.

While we felt that this was almost exclusively a proper District responsibility, we felt also that we should be generous and so we are only asking that the District pay half of the cost of maintenance and half of the cost of the buildings, which we are satisfied are urgently needed. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], of our subcommittee, went through the institution very carefully and commended very highly to the committee the value of the work done there, and also emphasized the need of the buildings here provided.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan has been compromising, has he, upon the so-called Cramton proposition?

Mr. CRAMTON. Not yet.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, he has on this particular case gone back to the 50–50 proposition.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice in the press that a very distinguished Senator whom I happen to know owns much property out in the silk-stocking neighborhood of Washington——

Mr. CRAMTON. I am sure the gentleman from Texas does not——

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman interrupts me. This particular Senator with his property, part of which forms a new addition out there that is becoming valuable, and should be taxed—he has come out for the 50-50 proposition.

The press is making a drive now, as it annually does, led by Mr. Theodore Noyes, who partly owns the Associated Press of the United States. He partly owns it, does he not? I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he does not partly own it?

Mr. BERGER. May I answer the gentleman?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know whose speech this is, but it is being improved right along.

Mr. BERGER. He does not own anything except his share in the Star.

Mr. BLANTON. I said partly.

Mr. BERGER. His share in the Star.

Mr. BLANTON. But he helps to conduct it because he is a high official of it. He is making a drive against the people of the United States for the pernicious 50-50 plan or at least the so-called 60-40 plan. Now, is the gentleman from Michigan going to stand hitched on the proposition? That is what I would like to know, because I have been fighting under his banner here and I have been trying to uphold his hands.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to be sure of the gentleman's continued support. If the gentleman from Texas will be so kind as to continue his confidence in me and give me his support, he can be sure there will be no change in the system affecting the fiscal relations between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, if I can help it.

Mr. BLANTON. May I say to my friend from Michigan, and to my colleagues, that there has been no man in the House fairer to the people of the District than the gentleman from Michigan. He has been as fair as he could be. The answer to all of this fuss in the newspapers is that the tax rate here in the District to-day is $1.70 on the hundred, which is all the tax they pay.

Mr. CRAMTON. One dollar and eighty cents.

Mr. BLANTON. One dollar and seventy cents for this tax year. That has been voted. I keep up a little closer than my friend does. It is $1.70 for this year. That is all the tax they pay, and on a 50 per cent assessment, if you please.

I can show you property after property, valuable property in the District, assessed at 50 per cent valuation, and, as I say, the rate is only $1.70. There is not another comparable city in the United States whose people pay as little tax as do the people in the District of Columbia. The people here ought to be ashamed of themselves for continually hounding the gentleman from Michigan because he wants to be fair both to them and to the rest of the people of the United States.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Texas gives me credit, which, I am frank to say, has not always been accorded me, for being fair with the District. I am reminded of the man who was looking for a job. When he asked what pay he would get he was told they would pay him what he was worth, and he said he could not afford to work for that. So, in the District it is not enough to be fair with them. They can not afford that.

The last time the gentleman interrogated me on the floor on this plan I drew a very scathing editorial in a local newspaper, and so it was with some misgivings that I yielded again to-day, but perhaps I shall become acclimated to that. The gentleman has said something about the half-and-half plan with regard to the item that is before us. In what I do in the House I try to be practical and try to avoid setting my stake at a point that I can not come up to. I try to accomplish results, and that has been true in my efforts with reference to the District. What I am trying to do now with regard to this one item seemed to be the thing that could be done and is certainly fully fair to the District. Half of that is what we are assuming for the time being as our Federal responsibility and the other half is the responsibility of the District itself. That half is to be paid as other expenses of the District are paid. The present lump-sum system means that they pay the full amount. If we should return to the 60–40 plan we would have 40 per cent of that other half to pay. However, I have no idea whatever that we will return to the 60–40 plan.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. How does the Freedmen's Hospital compare with other hospitals in the city with reference to the skill of the staff and the treatment given?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will ask my friend from Idaho, who made the investigation of the institution, to answer that, if he cares to.

Mr. FRENCH. I am not a professional man. I think that question is one that I can not answer with any amount of information back of it. I understand, however, as the chairman has stated, that Doctor Warfield is held in high regard and that he is supported by a very able corps of assistants, which includes the nurse corps as well as the medical corps.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I hope, when I get this bill off my hands and have a little relaxation, that one of my diversions will be to make some statement to the House on the subject he has brought up.

Mr. BLANTON. I am simply glad to know the gentleman has not compromised. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I sometimes compromise when I have to, but not otherwise.

There is only one further thought and then I am through. In connection with what my colleague has said, I have felt personally it would be desirable for the institution to have it turned over to the District. It has not seemed wise to do so, for the reason I suggested, but I have thought if it were a District institution then it would be alongside of Gallinger and Congress would expect the District would give to Freedmen equipment equal to Gallinger. It would seem that the same authority should be supervising these different institutions, but that is quite apart from the present bill.

I thank the committee very much for its patience. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, we have under consideration the Interior Department appropriation bill. As its name indicates, it appropriates for all of the bureaus under the supervision of the Interior Department.

This bill, in my judgment, affords a broader opportunity for a study of the internal affairs of our country, perhaps, than any other bill coming before Congress for consideration.

It is a bill that affects more people throughout the entire country and more people are therefore interested in it than any other appropriation bill that will come before Congress. Being a new member on the Committee on Appropriations, I want to confess the very modest part I have played in the preparation of this bill. It is a great pleasure for me to be associated with the other four members of the subcommittee who have performed a great service in the preparation of this bill. All four of my associates on the committee have seen long service in the House, and have been members of this particular subcommittee for a number of years, and they are therefore very familiar with many, if not all, of the details which came up for consideration in the preparation of this measure. I want particularly to commend the chairman of the subcommittee for his judicial temperament, for his fairness, for his thorough knowledge of the various bureaus appropriated for, and for his uniform courtesy and painstaking care which he has exercised in the preparation of every item in this bill.

The other members of the committee, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY], and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] have each been diligent in the performance of their duties, and have rendered efficient service in cooperation with the chairman.

In connection with the consideration of this bill I want to invite attention, in an effort to correct an erroneous impression, particularly with the new Members, as well as some of the older Members of the House, and the people throughout the country generally, how this and other appropriation bills are prepared and recommended to the House for consideration.

This bill carries a total amount recommended for appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, of $272,430,789. Estimates were prepared by the Bureau of the Budget in advance and submitted to the committee for consideration, recommending appropriations for the various bureaus of $273,118,589.

When the hearings were held by the subcommittee the heads of the various bureaus charged with the expenditure of the money appropriated for them were called before the committee and made to justify every item recommended for appropriation in this bill.

Your attention is invited to the fact that there are 1,196 pages of printed hearings. The book containing the hearings is carefully indexed and any member who is not familiar with any item in the bill can turn to the index and find the page in the hearings where the oral and documentary testimony is submitted justifying that item. I am confident the people of the country do not understand the degree of care that is given; first, by the subcommittee, and, second, by the full Committee on Appropriations, and, third, by the Committee of the Whole House in the preparation, consideration, and passage of these appropriation bills. Somehow the erroneous impression has gone forth that Members are able, through favoritism, to secure the insertion of items for their particular districts.

I want to say to the House that this is a nonpartisan bill, that it is a nonsectional bill, and that there is not a single suggestion of favoritism in any line or in any item of appropriation in this bill. It is true there are more items of appropriations for certain States, but this is because the activities over which the Department of the Interior has control are located in those States; but there are no discriminations against States where there are similar activities.

This bill appropriates for the office of the Secretary of the Interior and his clerical force here in Washington, and the amount carried in this bill for that purpose is $850,000, the same amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, and which is $15,400 less than was appropriated for this purpose the current fiscal year.

The next bureau appropriated for is the General Land Office. This includes not only the salaries of the employees of that office here in Washington but for the salaries of employees located throughout the country, and for the most part in the Western States. Two million one hundred and thirty-eight thousand and fifty dollars is carried in the bill for this purpose, this being $500 less than was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget and $159,500 less than was carried for the General Land Office for the current year.

The next item is for the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Indian population of the country, as estimated by the Indian Bureau, aggregates 354,940. In Oklahoma the number of Indians is given as 119,216. There were enrolled as members of the Five Civilized Tribes 101,506 Indians. It is not generally known that there are 33 Indian Tribes in Oklahoma. The State is correctly named "Oklahoma," meaning home of the red man. Approximately one-third of the Indians of the United States reside in Oklahoma. This bill, therefore, is of great importance to the people of that State, Indian and white.

This bill carries an appropriation for the Indian Service of $13,714,509, and is an increase, as compared with the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, of $117,500.

I want to call attention to two items in order to emphasize them: One is for education, exclusive of tribal funds, aggregating $7,297,000, or an increase of $186,000; and, second, under conservation of health, general relief, and hospital, $1,390,000, and this latter sum is $342,000 more than that appropriated for the past year.

The friends of the Indian throughout the country recognize that they can best be advanced through vocational and industrial education, and this is being stressed in all boarding and day schools where Indians are taught, and there has been a notable increase during the past few years. Complaint has been made that trachoma and tuberculosis are too prevalent among the Indians, and that not a sufficient amount has been appropriated for health work, and for that reason a very large increase is carried in this bill. Some few Indians are scattered throughout the Eastern States. There is one Indian reservation in New York State. A remnant of the Seminoles live in Florida, and they are the most primitive Indians in the United States. There are a few Choctaw Indians remaining in Mississippi, for whom a small appropriation is made in this bill. There are a number of Indians in North Carolina who hold their lands in common, and a Government Indian school is maintained there for their benefit. The greatest number of Indians, of course, are scattered throughout the Western States. Next to Oklahoma, Arizona has the largest number, 46,235 Indians. There are 23,000 in South Dakota, and New Mexico, California, Michigan, and Minnesota have a large Indian population.

Oftentimes the question is asked upon the floor of the House why we continue to make appropriations for Indians and why some of these appropriations have been increased. Up to about 25 or 30 years ago the Government dealt with the Indians as tribes. To illustrate, we dealt with the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma collectively as tribes. It cost very little to administer the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes from a governmental standpoint. The commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, commonly known as the Dawes Commission, was authorized under the act of Congress of March 3, 1893. It negotiated agreements with the Five Civilized Tribes looking to the allotment of their lands, the distribution of their money, and the admission of their country to statehood. Agreements were finally made and ratified placing the responsibility upon the Government of the United States to make the rolls, individualize their lands, and distribute their money. Instead of dealing with the Five Civilized Tribes in their tribal capacity we had 101,506 allotments to make, money to distribute, heirships to determine, and innumerable individual matters connected with the affairs of each. By the various acts of Congress a large number of members of the Five Civilized Tribes have been freed from governmental supervision. It is now estimated that there are about 12,000 or less restricted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes. But that does not paint the whole picture. The Indian Office is charged with the responsibility through its office in Washington and its field employees not only of supervising the ten or twelve thousand enrolled restricted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes but the restricted heirs of deceased Indians who are not carried on the rolls, of course, must be supervised and cared for as individuals.

I detain you this long in order to bring to your attention the immense amount of detail that the Indian Bureau must supervise. Referring again to appropriations for schools, we are maintaining a number of industrial schools throughout the country where young men and young women are being educated in such a way as to enable them to go out and face the battles of life. Many of them are giving a good account of themselves and are doing a great deal toward the uplift of their people to whom they return. There has been some criticism as to the Indian employees throughout the country. I confess, and I am sure the other members of the committee will agree with me, that in my judgment practically all Indian employees are underpaid. I think that has been a just criticism for a number of years.

We have a large number of very faithful employees in the Indian Service. Many of them live in out-of-the-way places and away from social centers. They do not hold attractive positions. As one member of the committee, I would like to be able to raise the wages of many of the Indian employees. They are not paid salaries that will compare with other Government employees. I have particular reference to those teaching in Indian schools. The salaries of teachers throughout the country have been greatly increased, and I am sure I am conservative when I state that as a whole the teachers in the municipal and State schools receive on an average double the compensation of teachers in the Indian Service.

The chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], paid a deserved compliment to those in charge of the Indian Service. I would not be fair to myself if I did not join in a word of commendation of the head of the Indian Bureau and of his very efficient assistant. Many of the older Members of the House served in Congress with Mr. Burke. They remember his service on the Indian Affairs Committee. For a number of years he served as chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee. His home is in South Dakota, in an Indian atmosphere, where he has been able to gain much personal knowledge of the Indians. I believe he has made one of the most efficient Commissioners of Indian Affairs we have ever had. We may find occasion to disagree with him on some details, but upon the whole I believe that his office has been sympathetically administered and in the interest of the Indian. He has been ably assisted by Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I do not believe there is a man in the service of our Government who knows more about the details of his particular bureau than does Assistant Commissioner Meritt. He has been in the Indian Service for a quarter of a century. He is not only honest but he is efficient and courteous, and under the present management of the Indian Bureau there has been continued improvement in the service.

The next bureau for which this bill provides is the Pension Office. The appropriation for that office is $231,738,000, the amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget.

It may be of interest to the Members of the House and the country generally to know that on June 30, 1927, there were carried on the pension rolls 489,942 names. Forty-one thousand nine hundred and ninety-four pensioners died during the year 1927, of whom 16,958 were Civil War soldiers and 20,828 were Civil War widows. Seventeen of those carried on the rolls are widows of the War of 1812, and there are six survivors of the War with Mexico. The total number of Civil War pensioners, including the widows of survivors of the Civil War, on June 30, 1927, numbered 302,691. There were 162,638 Spanish-American War pensioners. The present law provides for a minimum pension of $65 per month for all Union soldiers who saw service in the Civil War for 90 days and received an honorable discharge, and $50 per month for all widows of Civil War soldiers who were married to and living with their husbands during the war. It provides $30 per month for all such widows who married their husbands subsequent to the Civil War and prior to June 27, 1905.

The following table shows the total amount paid to pensioners, 1790 to end of fiscal year 1927:

War of the Revolution	$70,000,000.00
War of 1812	46,172,521.05
Indian wars	31,513,894.62
War with Mexico	58,056,020.69
Civil War	6,951,413,812.70
War with Spain	239,227,907.53
Regular Establishment	78,381,522.64
World War	219,966.55
Unclassified	16,513,425.54
Total	7,491,499,071.32

Appropriations are made for the Reclamation Service of $12,729,000, for the Geological Survey of $1,758,080, for the National Park Service of $4,654,950, for the Bureau of Education $941,300, for the government in the Territories and the Alaska Railway $1,599,200, for St. Elizabeths Hospital $1,313,000, for the Columbia Institution for the Deaf $130,000, for Howard University $390,000, for Freedmen's Hospital $474,500, and these various items all aggregate the grand total of $272,430,789.

A study of the various items contained in this bill covers such a wide range that consideration must be given to the expansion and development of the interior of our country.

I am glad to join with the other members of our subcommittee in bringing to the attention of the Members of the House the recommendations as set forth in this bill for the various bureaus of the Interior Department supervised by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I rise to thank my personal friend, the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], whose district joins mine, for paying a deserved and handsome tribute to Mr. Meritt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who is a legal resident of my town in Arkansas, and who, as he says, has been an important factor in the Indian Bureau for the past 25 years.

Permit me also in this connection to say that the membership will recall that daring woman, Mrs. Frances Wilson Grayson, who with her crew took flight from Roosevelt Field, New York, on December 23 last in an endeavor to be the first woman to fly from America to Europe. This brave woman who is supposed to have been lost at sea was born in my district, 25 miles from my home, and was born near the birthplace of my distinguished friend from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS]. In this connection I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma how far from Cherokee City in my district is the place where he was born?

Mr. HASTINGS. Some 10 or 12 miles.

Mr. TILLMAN. In this connection, as a part of my remarks, to appear with them, I ask unanimous consent to insert a brief account of Mrs. Grayson, and a few facts touching on her family and early life.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. In that connection, under unanimous consent, I submit the following:

Though far from the scene of the disappearance of the Dawn, amphibian plane of Mrs. Frances Wilson Grayson, intrepid woman flier and her crew, who took off from Roosevelt Field, N. Y., December 23, much interest in Mrs. Grayson and her disastrous attempt to be first woman to fly to England from America was aroused in Benton County when it was learned that Mrs. Grayson was born in the county and that her parents and early history were known to many residents of the county.

Frances Wilson was the daughter of Andrew J. and Minnie Lewis Grayson, and was born at Cherokee City, near Gentry, June 25, 1887. Andrew J. Wilson and his father, "Billy" Wilson, had a store and managed the post office at Cherokee City in the early days of the village, which resulted largely from a boom in 1881 and 1882, when the springs located there brought a large tourist trade. "Billy" Wilson carried the mail from Springdale to Cherokee City, and it is said that he computed the distance between the two places by tying a rag to a cart wheel and counting its revolutions. The house in which Frances Wilson was born was located about a block from the present post office at Cherokee City and was torn down about two years ago. When she was about a year old the family moved to Oklahoma, where her father farmed and operated a threshing machine for about four years, moving then to Muncie, Ind., where he now is engaged in the grocery business. The mother of Mrs. Grayson has been dead for several years.

RECALLED BY RESIDENT

John Lamphere, aged 64, and a neighbor and friend of the Wilson family during the residence of the family in Cherokee City, when asked about them, said:

"I was well acquainted with Andy Wilson and his wife. Her name was Minnie Lewis. She was a daughter of Preacher Lewis. She was a pretty girl and Andy was a fine looking young man, and they had about the worst case of being struck on each other I ever saw. They were engaged to be married. Andy had his license, and the time for the marriage was set for Christmas. Both their parents approved, but a few days before the wedding Andy and another young fellow went to Siloam Springs and while there they got too much liquor and got tipsy. Andy wasn't in the habit of doing this, but guess he was sorter celebratin' his coming marriage. Preacher Lewis heard of Andy's celebration and called off the wedding and forbid Andy to see the girl again. He kept her home for a few days until Sunday, then she came to Sunday school.

"Andy appeared on the scene to take her with him. Andy was headstrong and nearly always did what he started. Preacher Lewis was high-tempered and not afraid, and told Andy, 'No; you can't have the girl.' Andy said 'Yes,' and then the fight started.

"Several of the elders of the church pitched in to help the preacher, and some of the young bloods took a hand on Andy's side, and pretty soon there was a general fight going on right there in the church. In the mêlée Andy got Minnie away from the church and found Squire Fayette Blair on the street, and stepping upon a platform in front of a store, the justice of the peace married them before Preacher Lewis knew his daughter had left the church. In a few days the preacher's family welcomed their new son-in-law. Yes; I was there and saw them married. A big snow was on the ground at the time."

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to talk upon the subject of the postal air service to South America as well as a highway to the Latin-American countries. The President, in his message to the Seventieth Congress, stated he was interested in extending air mail service to South America as well as building public roads. In a recent interview he informed me it had been his hope for a long while to have a highway built from the State of Maine through Mexico to Central and South America.

Postal air service is now being established in every part of the civilized world, and even in parts of the world not yet civilized. The people of our country are demanding quick transportation of mails. South America is the greatest market in the world; it is a growing one; and it is a country to which in time we must send our surplus commodities. Many of those interested in commerce on the western coast of South America have appealed for an air service from the United States.

It now requires three weeks to carry mail from Santiago, Chile, to New York, three weeks in return, and probably two weeks more are consumed in answering. Millions and millions of American capital are invested along the west coast of South America. It is natural that our country would send exports to the west coast, but on the east, England, France, and Germany have the advantage over us in that part of South America. Millions are invested in railroads, nitrate mines, copper, and in the tin mines of Bolivia. It is important that we should have quick communication in order to increase our exports to South America.

Very few industries are now established in South America, almost all the manufactured commodities consumed there are imported either from the other side of the Atlantic or from the United States. Ninety per cent of the automobiles are of American make, and in all the large cities it is quite as difficult to cross the streets as in New York or Washington.

Great Britain, France, and Italy understand they must have quick communication in order to take advantage of their opportunities for selling commodities in South America. Mr. Van Bouer in 1922 established an air service from Cartagena on the northern coast of Colombia to its capital, Bogota. Formerly it took two weeks to go from the coast to the capital of Colombia. The air service now makes the trip in about two days. In 1922 the stock of the company operating the air line paid 3 per cent; last year it paid 10 per cent. Recently Mr. Van Bouer endeavored to obtain the exclusive franchise for air service along the coast of Colombia to Tumaco in order to prevent an American corporation dominating that part of the coast. Recently Mr. Van Bouer came to America and endeavored to form an American corporation. He was not successful, as it would not be advisable to permit a foreign corporation to sail over the Panama Canal Zone.

Captain Grow, who was formerly in the United States naval service, resigned and has recently established a mail route from Lima to Iquites, the headwaters of the Amazon River. The only American air service in South America. It now requires four weeks for the ordinary mail service to reach the mouth of the Amazon from Lima, the saving of two weeks in the transportation.

We have not fully realized the great market which South America is opening to the world.

The Latacoere Co., a French one, has recently been organized to carry mail from Natal, Brazil, to Daker, Africa. By air service to the island of Fernando Noronha, which is about 300 miles from Natal; thence by special quick steamer service to the eastern coast of Africa, then by air service to Paris by the way of Casablanco, making the trip in about three and a half days from Rio de Janeiro and four and a half days from Buenos Aires. One can readily understand that this short time, as compared with three weeks from Buenos Aires to New York, would be of great commercial advantage to the foreign countries. The people of South America are just waking up.

Since the World War they have done a great deal to develop their country. But all this region [indicating on the map] is yet to be developed. They want agricultural implements, they want rails to build railroads, and they want cars. The United States might as well furnish these commodities as other countries.

I had an interview with President Laguia, of Peru; with President Selis, of Bolivia; and President Ibañez, of Chile. They expressed deep interest in establishing a mail service to South America.

A bill has recently been introduced into the House authorizing the Postmaster General to enter into contracts for the transportation of mails by air to foreign countries. I want to bring the importance of air service to the attention of the House, that we may realize the necessity of quick postal communication in order to hold our commercial relations with South America. We do not want it all, but we want our part, and if we do not wake up to the conditions that now exist Great Britain, France, and Italy will have the advantage. Of course, during the period of the war, when Germany, France, and Italy could not keep their manufactures going, we gained a great deal in exports to South America. I think our total exports to the whole world in 1926 were about $4,800,000,000, and the exports from South America to the United States were about $800,000,000.

I submit the following table of our exports to South American countries:

Domestic exports to South American countries

I read in the paper some time ago that Colonel Lindbergh had arrived at Panama. Perhaps his flight to Central America will do more to bring about stronger social relations and good commercial conditions than the thousand of marines now in Nicaragua. The people in South America live in a different environment from ours, but we must have close communion with them if we wish to increase our commercial relations. We must first gain their confidence, and their confidence once gained, we must keep it in order to develop our commercial interests, and this can only be done by maintaining close relations between North and South America.

The President is very much interested in building a highway to South America. The Department of Commerce has accomplished much in this direction. In accordance with the suggestion of the Department of Commerce, this [indicating on the map] is the route outlined for that highway.

In every country in South America, and I think in every country in Central America, there has been a revelation concerning the building of highways in the various Republics. You will notice on the map that a few miles have been constructed on either side of Mexico City. The great engineering trouble will be through Panama, because this is a swampy country and it is the home of the White Indians, and very few people have ever explored this White Indian district. If a road were built at present, it probably would have to be policed in order to be maintained. But civilization is going forward. Civilization will not stop, and, therefore, it is our duty not to let this opportunity go by but use our efforts to-day so that to-morrow we may find ourselves a step forward in developing the countries in Central and South America.

I wanted to take the time of the House to explain the air service that is now being established in South America—not by the natives of South America, but by foreigners—for the sole purpose of gaining commercial relations in South America.

I have taken all the time I desire to explain air service growing out of my short visit to South America. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, last October I received a letter from Mr. Harlan Wood, a reputable lawyer of Washington, who is an American Legion man, calling my attention to a letter which he had written to Commissioner Taliaferro, of the District of Columbia. Without taking the time to read this letter and the attached letter to the commissioner, I shall ask leave to place them in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert two letters in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 13, 1927.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I trust you will recall our acquaintance. May I send you the inclosed copy of a communication addressed to Commissioner Taliaferro, in which I give him a synopsis of the duties of the United States Bureau of Efficiency and the action of the veteran organizations with reference to it. There are approximately 12,000 ex-service men and women in the Government service in Washington. You can count on your fingers the ones who favor this bureau. They would be indebted to you if you could secure the abolition of this office.

There were 62 delegates at the department convention of the American Legion, only 2 of whom voted against and fought the passage of the inclosed resolution. You will be interested to know that they were William Wolf Smith, of the Veterans' Bureau, and Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor. Notwithstanding their opposition as spokesmen for the resolution, I secured its passage by the majority above stated. I believe I can convince anyone—and I am not egotistical—that this bureau has forfeited all right to further existence.

In our last conversation you also agreed with me that you believed from the standpoint of an economical and efficient administration the other personnel bureaus of the Government, namely, the Personnel Classification Board, United States Employees' Compensation Commission, and the civil service, should be abolished and their duties consolidated either with the Civil Service Commission or into one bureau.

You will get strong support for such a movement, not only from the veteran and labor organizations but many others of a national scope, as well as earn the reward of rendering a distinctive service to the country generally. As far back as 1924 Congressman LEHLBACH, of New Jersey, was working and still is on certain phases of this consolidation, and in his prepared speech of February 12, 1924, on the subject before the House he listed over 12 national organizations who favored this action.

However, the most obnoxious of these bureaus is the United States Bureau of Efficiency. A late press report says that the District has adopted 40 of the 75 recommendations of this bureau. How long and how far can this transgression proceed? I think you can demand of the comptroller by what authority of law he authorizes the payment of salaries for the employees of this bureau engaged in this investigation work. So far as I can ascertain the most liberal construction of the acts of Congress gives it no such power, even for the executive departments of the Government, much less the municipal government of the District of Columbia.

I know you are very busy, but I hope you will take the time to go into the matters outlined in this and the inclosed communication. If I am wrong in anything, I am more than willing to be corrected and to apologize for any injustice done.

I do not know what you intend to do, but don't hesitate to call on me for any service I can render. I am free to speak and have nothing but unselfish ends to serve. If any hearings before committees are had, I shall be available to present the views of veteran organizations supplemented by my knowledge of the bureau based upon my study of it.

I need not add the expression of appreciation we as veterans feel for you in the work you have done in our behalf. Though you may not need it, still, if you should ever, I can gladly furnish you with resolutions of indorsement for your generous treatment of ex-service men. I have a close and personal contact with J. Frank Parrish, of Honey Grove, Tex., one of the most influential legionnaires in Texas. Legionnaires possessing a vote are an influence for good to be reckoned with; the only thing to be considered is that they are not acquainted with the situation as we are here. It would not be presumptuous on your part to indicate a desire for such indorsements for use as you may see fit.

Cordially yours,

HARLAN WOOD.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 29, 1927.

Hon. SIDNEY F. TALIAFERRO,

1801 Sixteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TALIAFERRO: Since 1924 it has fallen my lot on behalf of the American Legion and other veteran organizations of which I am either an active or honorary member to make a study of the United States Bureau of Efficiency for our membership on account of the numerous complaints registered against this bureau because of its alleged departure from the duties prescribed in the organic acts of Congress which created the bureau, which departure the veteran organizations and other individuals believe and feel has resulted to the detriment of a great many ex-service men. As a result of our study and investigations, the American Legion, at its national convention in Omaha, Nebr., in 1925, and again at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1926, and this department of the American Legion—and I believe the national organizations in Paris did indorse the latter's action in 1927—went on record favoring the abolition by Congress of this bureau and the transfer of its functions to the Civil Service Commission, from whence it originated. The numerous investigations which have been conducted in the municipal affairs of the District of Columbia, as well as in the executive departments of the Government, have forcibly convinced us of the justice and merit of our position and has been the subject of considerable discussion among the several posts of the American Legion in the District of Columbia, with the net result that whenever the justification of the action of the United States Bureau of Efficiency is involved that it is practically unanimously condemned.

Personally and members of the organizations to which I belong, in our criticism and fight against the United States Bureau of Efficiency, we believe, and have so expressed it, that the intrusion of this office into the affairs of the District of Columbia should justly cause your resentment and that of the other commissioners, not only because the bureau has gone beyond the scope of its lawful authority but also because of the impracticable, apparently useless, and presumptuous recommendations which it sponsors. I am writing you because of the fact that you are a lawyer and, of course, can analyze from that point of view the statutes which create this office.

The Bureau of Efficiency was originally created as a division of the Civil Service Commission by act of Congress approved August 23, 1912. It is short and I therefore quote it in full:

"The Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted; it shall also provide a rating below which no employee may fall without being demoted; it shall further provide for a rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals shall be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules. Copies of all records of efficiency shall be furnished by the departments and independent establishments to the Civil Service Commission for record in accordance with the provisions of this section: Provided, That in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary. Any person knowingly violating the provisions of this section shall be summarily removed from office and may also upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year." (37 Stat. L. 413.)

In 1916 the Division of Efficiency of the Civil Service Commission was literally picked up out of the Civil Service Commission and established as the present United States Bureau of Efficiency. The language of the act of Congress is quoted in full, as follows:

"Hereafter the Division of Efficiency of the Civil Service Commission shall be an independent establishment and shall be known as the Bureau of Efficiency; and the officers and employees of the said division shall be transferred to the Bureau of Efficiency without reappointment, and the records and papers pertaining to the work of the said division and the furniture, equipment, and supplies that have been purchased for it shall be transferred to the said bureau: And provided further, That the duties relating to efficiency ratings imposed upon the Civil Service Commission by section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved August 23, 1912, and the duty of investigating the administrative needs of the service relating to personnel in the several executive departments and independent establishments imposed on the Civil Service Commission by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved March 4, 1913, are transferred to the Bureau of Efficiency." (39 Stat. L. 15.)

The provision of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, relating to the administrative needs of the service referred to in the immediately preceding act is in full as follows:

"The Civil Service Commission shall investigate and report to the President, with its recommendations, as to the administrative needs of the service relating to personnel in the several executive departments and independent establishments in the District of Columbia, and report to Congress details of expenditure and of progress of work hereunder at the beginning of each regular session." (32 Stat. L. 750.)

You will note that the above act of Congress creating the Bureau of Efficiency (39 Stat. L. 15) is tacked on to the deficiencies appropriation act of February 28, 1916, chapter 37. In other words, it is not an independent act of Congress but an appendix to an appropriation act.

The only other statute with which I am familiar, and I have challenged the bureau's defenders for correction, that has any bearing on the United States Bureau of Efficiency is that recorded in Forty-first Statutes at Large, page 343, approved November 4, 1919. It is quoted in full as follows:

"That the Bureau of Efficiency is directed to investigate the scope and character of statistics needed by the Government, and the methods of collecting, compiling, and presenting statistical information by the several executive departments and independent Government establishments and submit to Congress a report of its findings together with such recommendations as it deems proper." (41 Stat. L. 343.)

It is barely possible that some subsequent appropriation act may carry language which could be interpreted to give authority to the Bureau of Efficiency for its present apparent undertakings. I have challenged the supporters of the bureau for such authority and the challenge remains unanswered. Hence, I think it is fair to assume that no authority exists covering the duties not prescribed in the organic acts of Congress that created this office, and if there were any language I believe a judicial construction of it would be to the effect that the investigations would relate to the duties as prescribed in the act of Congress rather than those duties that might pertain to investigations conducted by a grand jury, Department of Justice, prohibition agents, or internal-revenue agents.

The duties of the Bureau of Efficiency from the foregoing acts of Congress can be summarized and relate strictly to the "personnel in the executive departments of the District of Columbia"; that is, to establish an efficiency rating system, administrative needs of service relating to personnel, and to collect, compile, and present statistical information for the executive departments. I find no authority or anything relating to business methods, mechanical devices, administrative policies, municipal government of the District of Columbia, or any of its departments. Inasmuch as the duties are prescribed by Congress, I believe that the justification of the bureau in its position that the Gibson committee has requested it to do the things that it is doing is unfounded in fact and law and that the Gibson committee has no authority to require such services. The veteran organizations and the vast majority of individuals who compose them have no complaint whatever to make as to the merit or demerit of any recommendations that may have been made. Their complaint is due to the fact that the Bureau of Efficiency has not established a system of efficiency ratings based upon fact according to the records as kept whereby the protection afforded by the act of Congress of August 23, 1912, is really effective.

The first condition precedent to make the act of Congress of August 23, 1912, effective was to secure the approval of the President to the system established. This was not done until October 24, 1921, by Executive Order No. 3567, and then only at the insistence of the veteran organizations, so that from 1912 to 1921 the first condition precedent prescribed in the act had not been complied with. Our court of appeals has stated the same in the cases of Pershing v. Daniels and Dean v. Burleson (43 App. D. C. 470). At the time of these decisions the Bureau of Efficiency was still a part of the Civil Service Commission, known as the division of efficiency, and this accounts for the language used in the decision of the court of appeals, as follows:

"Under the former laws the courts had no power to review the action of the head of a department in discharging an employee for inefficiency. August 23, 1912, the act of Congress was passed, which is relied on in this case as changing that rule. Passing by the question whether the navy yard in Washington is a part of the executive department of the Navy within the terms of that act, we assume, for the purposes of this case, that it was so intended. It appears, nevertheless, that the Civil Service Commission had never exercised the authority conferred thereby to establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments of the District of Columbia. That this proviso exempted discharged soldiers from discharge or dismissal has no effect. The proviso is a part of the section and is not intended to have an independent operation."

It is the serious contention of the veterans now in the executive departments of the Government that the system which was established and is now in vogue is not based upon fact, and that the administration of it is detrimental to their rights. Hence they have recommended and indorse the action of their organization in requesting Congress to abolish the United States Bureau of Efficiency and transfer its functions back to the Civil Service Commission. As a matter of fact, Congressman GIBSON, at the request of the national organization of the American Legion, introduced at the last session of Congress a joint resolution to abolish the United States Bureau of Efficiency and transfer its functions to the Civil Service Commission, and a similar act will be introduced at the coming session of Congress.

The Bureau of Efficiency has ingratiated itself in the hearts of a number of influential Members of Congress, because it has been at the disposal of these men, particularly Senator SMOOT and Congressman BLANTON. I believe it was virtually sustained in the House by the activity of Congressman BLANTON alone. On February 12, 1924, Congressman LEHLBACH, of New Jersey, delivered a condemnation of its activity that was most severe.

I believe there is going to come a time when you will find that this office will be endeavoring to dictate to you and the other commissioners as to how the District government should be conducted. I believe that you should have the benefit of the study that I have made as outlined above and the acts of Congress, which I believe give the Bureau of Efficiency no authority to meddle in your affairs and those of the District government, even though the President of the United States should request it, because such action transcends its lawful duties and because, as you well know, we are governed by laws and not men. I believe I can appreciate in a measure the possible delicacy of your position, but at the same time I feel that when the conflict comes, which it will ultimately, you and the other commissioners will be perfectly justified in suggesting to the Bureau of Efficiency that it stay in its own back yard and do its own knitting.

So far as I am aware from the United Spanish War Veterans and Veterans of Foreign Wars, Army and Navy Union, and American Legion, no criticism has been directed or urged for or on behalf of the individuals connected with the United States Bureau of Efficiency. At the last department convention of the American Legion I was chairman of the resolutions committee and sponsored for that committee the inclosed resolution, which was passed with only two dissenting votes. I stated in my argument, and I state to you, that what I have written is not based upon any prejudice against the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency or any of its personnel. I do not have his acquaintance and I would not know him should I see him; however, he owes it to himself, and in justification of the conduct of his bureau to satisfy the organizations referred to above, that what he is doing is authorized by law. No individual encourages a conflict with any branch of the Government or any public official, especially when it means nothing to him personally, yet where unselfish and charitable ends are sought one may speak freely. For these reasons and because I am friendly to your administration I trust no undue publicity will be given to this communication, though you are at liberty to show its contents to anyone directly concerned or having your confidence.

That it may reach you personally I am forwarding it to your residence.

Cordially yours,

HARLAN WOOD,

COPY OF RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE CONVENTION OF 1927 OF THE AMERICAN LEGION FOR THE JURISDICTION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Resolution 7

Whereas the American Legion at its national conventions at Omaha, Nebr., in 1925 and in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1926 passed a resolution at the request of the American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia, calling upon Congress to abolish the United States Bureau of Efficiency, United States Personnel Classification Board, and the United States Workmen's Compensation Commission and to transfer their functions to the Civil Service Commission; and

Whereas it is the belief of ex-service men, as expressed by them at the national convention of the American Legion in the aforesaid action, that the United States Bureau of Efficiency has been grossly negligent and utterly indifferent in performing the duties required of it by law in the establishment and maintenance of a system of efficiency ratings based upon fact whereby ex-service men and women may have the protection afforded by law; and

Whereas it is the belief of ex-service men that the United States Bureau of Efficiency particularly has greatly transgressed its lawful duties with great resulting detriment to ex-service men: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Legion of the Department of the District of Columbia again requests the national convention of the American Legion to indorse and do its utmost to secure the passage of acts of Congress to effectuate the foregoing consolidation of the personnel bureaus of the Government; be it further

Resolved, That the delegates of the American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia, to the national convention be, and they are hereby, instructed to use every effort to secure the passage of this resolution by the national convention.

Mr. BLANTON. There is an organization of reputable citizens in Washington which desired to obtain information showing the number of employees and their salaries in the Bureau of Efficiency. One of its officers is Frederick William Wile, who is a distinguished journalist of high character and, in my judgment, one of the ablest in Washington. This information was denied to this organization. Was their request outrageous? They were citizens and taxpayers of this Nation, and it was their money and taxes that paid such salaries. Did they not have the right to know about their own business? But they were denied such information. They applied to the United States Civil Service Commission for such information. When their request was turned down they went into the local courts here and brought action to compel such information to be furnished them. But the courts held it should come through other sources. They were denied that information. The president of such organization appealed to me as a Member of Congress to get this information for him, relating the shameful way these citizens had been treated.

I wrote a letter to the chief of this bureau following that as a Member of Congress. We vote the money that pays their salaries. We are the ones who represent the 110,000,000 people of the United States whose money pays the expense of this bureau. I felt that as one Member of Congress I would have the right to the information and I wrote this letter. I want you to note it. Is there anything unreasonable about it? Is there anything disrespectful about it? Is there anything about it that would keep a bureau chief of the Government from furnishing the information asked for? Let me read it:

Washington, D. C., October 17, 1927—

That is just four days after Judge Harlan Wood wrote me his letter, and on the same day the president of this citizens' organization of the District appealed to me to get the information for them. The people of Washington have no representative in this Congress. Unless we represent them they are without representation, a city of 600,000 people, if you please. Apprised of such facts, I wanted such information for my own use and to put before my committee, and I requested it on their behalf also:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., October 17, 1927.

Hon. HERBERT D. BROWN,
Chief, Bureau of Efficiency, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BROWN: For information to be used before our committee when it meets, I will ask you to please send me the following information:

(1) The names and respective salaries drawn of all officers in your bureau.

(2) The names and respective salaries drawn of all other employees in your bureau.

Please let me have the above information at the earliest date possible and oblige,

Very truly yours, THOMAS L. BLANTON.

Is there anything unreasonable about that? Have not we Members of Congress the right to get such information from bureau chiefs? Are the bureau chiefs bigger than the power that creates them?

He first promised to send me this information, and then I understood on the outside that he found I had been requested by certain organizations to get it, and I understood he then decided he would not let me have it. Then I called on him for the truth as to whether or not he had received $10,000 from a certain big corporation for doing work for them while he was chief of the Bureau of Efficiency. Not answering me directly but through the press, he in effect told me to go to; it was none of my business.

Mr. LARSEN (interposing). May I ask the gentleman whether he had already given his communication to the press that caused him to reply through the press?

Mr. BLANTON. Only after I had sent it to him and could not get the information. I did not give my letter of October 17, 1927, to the press at all. He first answered it on October 18, 1927, promising to give my request attention, and then after waiting an unreasonable time I learned from the press boys that he was going to ignore my request, because he did not want the citizens' associations of Washington to get hold of this information to use in checking up his bureau. And when he refused to give me this information, I then proceeded myself to check up his bureau and find out what it had been doing. And I learned that the du Ponts, of Delaware, had paid him about $10,000 for work he had done for them, since he has been director, and supposed to give all of his time and attention to the Bureau of Efficiency. I then wrote him and asked him some specific questions asking him about the money paid him by the du Ponts, and instead of answering my questions by letter he went into the press and said that "it was none of the business of Congress what he did with his time after hours." I will tell you what one of the big daily newspapers of Houston, Tex., the great city where I was born, and in which the next Democratic National Convention will be held, says about Brown's position.

It says that any Member of Congress has the right to find out what is going on in this Government, and that when a Member of Congress who represents the people of the country calls on one of the bureau chiefs for information concerning the business of his office he should give it.

Brown is telling it around now that the reason he refused to give this information was that I was mad at him because he caused one of my friends to be demoted—Traffic Director Eldridge.

I am no better friend to Traffic Director Eldridge than I am to any other Government official who does his duty. I am the friend of the lowliest policeman and the lowliest fireman of this District who does his duty. I am just as much a friend of the lowliest as I am of Mr. Eldridge or any other honest Government official, but I believe in doing justice to everybody.

Let me read you what one of the Hearst papers said yesterday. Is it coming to pass that the people of the country can place no reliance whatever upon an article they find in one of Hearst's papers? I have never given any of the Hearst papers provocation to dislike me or to attack me or to be unjust toward me. I have been fair with them. I have wasted my time on many an occasion, when I was busy, in stopping and answering questions of their reporters. I have given them everything my office has had when they have called on me for it. Why should they put things in the paper that are not true in behalf of Efficiency Director Brown? Hearst paper said, in substance, that Eldridge and Congressman BLANTON were arranging to attack the Bureau of Efficiency and Mr. Brown because of its action concerning automobile traffic tags being made by one of the agencies of the District government with reference to favoring a certain corporation.

There is not a word of truth in this. Mr. Eldridge never in his life spoke one word to me about that situation. I did not even know that an agency of the District government made these tags. I knew nothing whatever about how the matter was arranged. It is absolutely made out of the whole cloth. There is not a word of truth in it. Not one single word has ever passed between Mr. Eldridge and myself about it.

Is this the kind of reputation Hearst wants to get over the country—that people can not rely on anything they find in his paper? I am a friend of Director Eldridge, because he is honest, fearless, able, efficient, conscientious, and reliable. He has enforced the law, and lawbreakers were influential enough to get his scalp.

Let me mention just two cases of the many which made Traffic Director Eldridge unpopular. On October 25, 1926, he was forced under the law to revoke the permit to drive an automobile of Stephen Paul Murphy, whose police record is as follows: On January 19, 1920, was arrested for speeding and forfeited $5; on September 3, 1920, arrested for passing stop signal and given fine of $15 or 15 days; on October 19, 1920, arrested for disorderly conduct and forfeited $5; on November 6, 1920, was arrested for investigation; on November 28, 1920, arrested for having no District of Columbia tags and forfeited $5; on December 7, 1920, arrested for disorderly conduct and forfeited $5; on February 21, 1921, arrested for breaking glass in street and given fine of $10 or 10 days; on March 3, 1921, arrested for investigation; on April 2, 1921, arrested, charged with fornication, and forfeited $25; on September 10, 1921, arrested for disorderly conduct and forfeited $5; and on the same date was also charged with cutting corner and forfeited $5; also charged with passing on right of car and forfeited $5; also charged with speeding, forfeited $10; also charged with failing to show permit and forfeited $5; and once more in 1921 was arrested for investigation; on January 22, 1922, arrested for assault and forfeited $5; and also on that date was charged by Officer Kelley with disorderly conduct and fined $5 or 5 days; and again charged by Officer Spaulding with disorderly conduct and fined $25 or 25 days; on February 6, 1922, was arrested for assault and forfeited $10; on March 24, 1922, was arrested for using dead tags; on March 31, 1922, was arrested for colliding and fined $15; on June 11, 1922, was arrested for speeding and forfeited $15; on June 26, 1922, was arrested for breaking glass in street; on August 5, 1922, was arrested for assault; on August 7, 1922, was arrested for carrying concealed weapons and also for threats; on February 3, 1923, was arrested for disorderly conduct and forfeited $5, and also for failing to give signal, forfeiting $2; on March 2, 1923, arrested for Maryland authorities; on March 8, 1923, arrested for no permit and also for no tags and fined $40; on June 4, 1923, arrested for affray, forfeited $50; on June 22, 1923, arrested for disorderly conduct, forfeited $5; on February 2, 1924, arrested for assault, forfeited $25, and also on such date was arrested for disorderly conduct, forfeiting $25; arrested for being drunk, forfeiting $25, and for assault on second party, forfeiting $25; on May 30, 1924, arrested for disorderly conduct and forfeited $5; on December 30, 1924, arrested for investigation; on January 6, 1925, arrested for assault and forfeited $25; on March 9, 1925, arrested for reckless driving and for using smoke screen and demanded jury trial; on June 30, 1925, arrested for illegal possession, and also for transporting, and fined $500 or 120 days; on July 12, 1925, arrested for disorderly conduct and forfeited $5; on October 7, 1925, arrested for disorderly conduct and fined $10, also for assault and fined $15; on October 8, 1925, arrested for taking property without consent of owner; on February 10, 1926, arrested for disorderly conduct and fined $10 or 10 days; on April 9, 1926, arrested for speeding 38 miles, fined $25 or 25 days, also for improper lights; on April 15, 1926, arrested for reckless driving; on August 26, 1926, arrested by Officer Helmuth for reckless driving; on August 27, 1926, arrested by Officer Murphy for reckless driving and fined $50 or 30 days, and also for retarding police and fined $25 or 25 days; on August 28, 1926, arrested for violating traffic regulations, and the courts having certified to the traffic department records of conviction requiring under the law the revoking of his permit, Traffic Director Eldridge, on October 25, 1926, revoked such permit. But this Mr. Stephen Paul Murphy, being a prominent and high-hat bootlegger and a citizen of great substance and influence, was able to punish Eldridge by helping to bring him into disfavor and unpopularity through adverse criticism.

Another prominent bootlegger who has helped to make Traffic Director Eldridge unpopular is Arthur Mason, who has been charged with violations of the law in our police courts in 36 different cases; the charges embracing assault, disorderly conduct, being drunk, illegal possession, transporting liquor, operating an auto while drunk, selling whisky, speeding, driving without permit, driving with dazzling lights, colliding, and permitting gambling.

Unfortunately for Traffic Director Eldridge the law and his sense of duty has forced him to bother some of the official family of Hearst's newspapers. Based on an order of court he canceled the permit of Mr. Charles Miller, a pressman of the Washington Times-Herald. And based on a charge, which under the law forced him to do so, he canceled the permit of Mr. Forrest C. Phillips, a route agent of such newspaper. But in all of his actions Eldridge has been actuated by a high sense of conscientious duty.

To become traffic director at $6,000 per year Hon. M. O. Eldridge sacrificed an honorable and desirable position with the American Automobile Association, which was paying him $7,500 per year, he being induced to take this position by prominent citizens who were seeking to better traffic conditions in Washington. And he succeeded in bringing order out of chaos. To show how the members of the American Automobile Association felt about the great injustice done Eldridge I quote the following letter, written by one of its members—a prominent attorney of Washington—Hon. Thomas M. Fields, whose office is in the Woodward Building and whose residence is 2704 Twenty-seventh Street NW.:

APRIL 2, 1927.

AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION,
Mills Building, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Being out of sympathy with the recent demotion of Director of Traffic Eldridge to the position of assistant director of traffic at a salary decrease of $1,200 per annum, and realizing his efficiency and integrity and the great good which he has accomplished in his efforts relative to the regulation and control of local traffic conditions, and recalling what he accomplished while he was connected with the association before he became the director of traffic, I suggest that the members of the association make up the deficiency in his salary by voluntary contributions. In view of the large membership of the association, and the good will of all members toward Mr. Eldridge, quite likely all members will gladly contribute. The amount of each contribution would almost be negligible to make up the $1,200.

Speaking for myself, I am willing to contribute up to $100 if necessary, and my secretary, who is also a member of the association, will contribute up to $10.

Is my suggestion worthy of consideration and adoption?

Yours very respectfully,

T. M. FIELDS.

Here is what happened and this is what Brown is ashamed of. My good friend from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], everyone knows how much I think of him and how I have commended him for the work that he has helped to do for the country, but he has gotten a little off. He has gotten into the byways where the briars are thick and he is not now doing much good in one respect. He deliberately, without any authority of law whatever, had the Bureau of Efficiency of the United States drop its work for the Government and begin to inspect the bureaus of the District of Columbia, which are merely municipal bureaus and are not bureaus of the Government at all, wasting its time on District bureaus when they have no authority whatever to inspect a single one of them. He has had Brown wasting the time of a whole organization down there.

Let me tell you just what he did. The first thing Brown did was to find out that Traffic Director Eldridge was enforcing the law against the big bugs, as well as the little ones here; that he was making the highbrows respect the law, and when the highbrows disobeyed the law, Traffic Director Eldridge was canceling their permits when the law required it, and they did not like it. Brown found out Eldridge was getting unpopular with many of the highbrows, and the commissioners saw these attacks in the papers and they thought they would make themselves popular, and do you know what they did? These commissioners, Mr. Taliaferro and Mr. Dougherty, wrote out a preliminary report for the United States Bureau of Efficiency to execute, calling for Eldridge's demotion and Moller's dismissal. Did they not do this, I will ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON]?

If they did not, I will let the gentleman deny that the commissioners wrote that preliminary report of the Efficiency Bureau and told Brown to sign on the dotted line, and he signed. Did they not do that?

Mr. GIBSON. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I had no personal knowledge as to what was done——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but the gentleman knows who wrote that report.

Mr. GIBSON. Wait; I was not present and have no personal knowledge as to what action the commissioners and the Board of Efficiency took.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman know the commissioners told Brown to sign on the dotted line and he signed?

Mr. GIBSON. No; I do not, but I have been told so.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, that is sufficient. That is an admission against interest. [Laughter.] That is the fact. The commissioners prepared it and they told Brown to sign, and Brown signed.

And what did this report do? It caused them to kick out poor Colonel Moller on March 28, 1927, because of something they found out he had done outside of his office, out of hours, when his office was closed and which had nothing to do with the government of the District of Columbia. It was a social affair. They caused Director Eldridge to be demoted on April 1, 1927, for some complaint they lodged against Moller, and caused Eldridge's salary to be decreased $1,200 annually when they knew there was not a single scintilla of evidence that affected his honesty; and I am going to prove that to you right now, because after months of investigation, here is Mr. Brown's final report filed in May, 1927, signed, "Herbert D. Brown, Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency," respecting Moller and Eldridge and the Crouse-Hinds Co., which was the firm solely involved in their entire investigation. The preliminary report, which the commissioners prepared for the United States Bureau of Efficiency, and which they caused Herbert D. Brown to sign on the dotted line, imputed dishonest and fraudulent transactions respecting the District of Columbia. That was before Brown's bureau fairly started its investigation.

Here is what Brown said in his final report concerning these men whose whole future he had ruined. After investigating he found them all not guilty. Here is the final report over Brown's own signature, from which I quote the following:

There is no evidence to show that either Colonel Moller or Mr. Eldridge was animated by dishonest motives or ever profited in any way from the irregularities or that the Government suffered any loss from such irregularities.

That is from page 1472 of the printed hearings. No evidence, he says, to show dishonesty, and here is what he says about the Crouse-Hinds Co., concerning whose contract all the fuss was raised, and over an item involving $634. I again quote from said Herbert D. Brown's final report filed in May, 1927:

In justice to the Crouse-Hinds Co. it should be suggested that during the course of this investigation nothing was found to cause the slightest suspicion of dishonesty in the transaction on the part of the company. In our opinion that company should be absolved from any criticism in its dealings with the District of Columbia.

That report on May 27, 1927, caused Colonel Moller to be kicked out, and he and his family to have their lives ruined and Eldridge demoted.

Now, Colonel, when you get up to defend Brown and when you go to protect Brown trying to hedge around him where I can not get at the facts, you and I are at the parting of the ways.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not think the gentleman is correct in saying that I am protecting Doctor Brown or doing anything so that the facts can not be ascertained if they should be ascertained.

Mr. BLANTON. Let us see; my colleague knows that I am always fair. I like him even if I can not go with him.

Mr. GIBSON. Perhaps the gentleman will go with me.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I will not. Here is the situation. A member of our committee, known as the Gibson Investigating Committee, is Judge HOUSTON, of Delaware. You will remember that it is a Delaware corporation that has paid Brown $9,000, as Brown says; but I say $10,000. Du Ponts paid it to this chief of the United States Bureau of Efficiency for what? Not working for the Government, but working for the corporation. I imagine it is the influence of my good friend Judge HOUSTON, from Delaware, that is actuating my friend, Colonel GIBSON, from Vermont, in his motive to keep me from getting the facts from Director Brown.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. I have had a resolution of inquiry pending before the gentleman's committee ever since Congress met in December.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman refers to the Committee on the Civil Service?

Mr. BLANTON. Of which the gentleman from Vermont is a member?

Mr. GIBSON. And we gave you a hearing this morning.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; I will tell you what kind of a hearing you gave me. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON. We heard everything the gentleman presented without objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Vermont—where the maple sap runs except next year—will the gentleman deny that the du Ponts paid as much as $9,000 to Director Brown?

Mr. GIBSON. I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the gentleman's information?

Mr. GIBSON. I have been told that covering a period of 13 years the company has paid Mr. Brown for advisory work on its retirement and pension system $9,000.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman gets the information from Judge HOUSTON and Mr. Brown?

Mr. GIBSON. I never passed a word with Mr. HOUSTON about it.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not Brown tell you so?

Mr. GIBSON. I decline to tell the gentleman where I got my information until the Civil Service Committee gets through with the hearings.

Mr. BLANTON. I am surprised to find so valuable a man in this Congress—for he is a valuable man—as Colonel GIBSON—standing up and protecting this man Brown from furnishing the information demanded by a Member of Congress. The du Ponts of Delaware have paid Brown.

Now, here is what happened this morning in the Civil Service Committee as long as the gentleman mentioned it. One member of the committee moved to report my resolution out as to the facts asked for, eliminating the $10,000 proposition. Another member moved a second that the resolution be reported out. And the committee was about to report it. Then Colonel GIBSON stepped in and offered a substitute that they would have another hearing first, and they would let Mr. Brown come up tomorrow and let me come before them again, wasting more of my time—not in the morning before noon, but at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon when the House is in session.

What right has your committee to meet when this House is in session? I ask that of the colonel from Vermont. None. We have never granted his committee the right to meet when this House is in session. It has not the right to do so; and when you meet to-morrow at 2 o'clock you are meeting without any authority of law, against the rules of this House, and you are meeting when Congress has not authorized you to meet, just like you had poor old Brown and his bureau investigate this District municipality, when the law says that bureau must confine its operations to only Government plants.

Mr. GIBSON. May I suggest that I am not the chairman of that committee, and I assume that the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], will take all measures necessary to protect the proceedings of that committee within the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to see how the gentleman acts in the morning, because in the morning the Gibson subcommittee, authorized by the District Committee, is to meet and investigate these various matters. The Gibson committee has met and voted to have a hearing, and it was agreed on that we would have that hearing at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that Brown should be brought before the committee, and I expect to ask him some questions; but the press says, and the press has been saying continually, attempting to quote the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], that the gentleman from Vermont is going to protect Brown in this hearing and not let any questions be asked him.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman refers to these same Hearst papers?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, all of the papers have been saying that, and I am going to find out to-morrow where the gentleman stands.

Mr. GIBSON. Oh, you will find out all right.

Mr. BLANTON. And I shall withhold my criticism until after that meeting, but I am going to tell my friend from Vermont this: I do not care who steps in and seeks to protect Brown, I am going to let the people of this country know who is protecting him when I find out. The people have a right to know how much the du Ponts have been paying him. The people have a right to know whether he has been spending his time for the Government or for private corporations. The people of this country have a right to know, and I am going to see to it that they do know that, and I have got the information all ready. I am not depending on Brown for my information. I have it from several sources in this Government already. I know every one of the facts.

Mr. GIBSON. Then, of course, the gentleman does not need any investigation.

Mr. BLANTON. But I want Brown to answer and give the facts about his office. We have a right to know. After my friend from Vermont, Mr. GIBSON, sleeps on it to-night, I do not think he is going to protect Brown any more. Let me tell him this, that members of the American Legion who have had business with that Bureau of Efficiency condemn it and Brown. You will not find a labor organization in the District of Columbia that will say a good word for Brown, not one. Not a labor organization, and you will find only two men who will defend Brown. You will find Major Donovan, the auditor down here in the District government, whom Brown has taken care of, he and his family, and you find Poker Bill Smith down in the Veterans' Bureau defending him.

Mr. BOYLAN. And who is Poker Bill Smith?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am surprised that my friend from New York does not know him. That proves that my colleague has never played poker. Poker Bill, through politics, is general counsel for the Veterans' Bureau, and has tried to turn down the just insurance and just compensation that is due to widows and orphans of our soldiers time and time again. He has been responsible for it. They have had to take an appeal to McCarl to make him pay, and McCarl has made him pay it.

You should read the record and see how he tried to rob Mrs. Bertie Fenlaw out of her dead husband's insurance, and McCarl made him pay it. Poker Bill Smith never tried a case in a courthouse until after he became general counsel of the Veterans' Bureau. He is another protégé of a distinguished Senator, and that is the reason we can not get rid of him. If he was not a protégé of this distinguished Senator who has so much influence, Director Hines would have kicked him out long ago; but I made him admit in the presence of General Hines and Senator SHEPPARD that he never tried a case in a courthouse in his life until he became the general counsel for the Veterans' Bureau—the chief legal authority for the Veterans' Bureau—that passes on hundreds of millions of dollars for the 4,000,000 men who served, in the matter of insurance for their widows and children and mothers. These are the two protégés of a distinguished Senator—Brown and Poker Bill Smith. At the American Legion convention in 1926, and the one preceding it, a resolution was offered condemning Brown and the Bureau of Efficiency and asking that the bureau be abolished; and I will put it in my remarks.

Mr. GIBSON. You mean the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am talking about the National Convention of the American Legion of the United States. Then in the 1927 convention of the American Legion for the District of Columbia there was the resolution passed condemning the bureau and there were only two men who spoke and voted against it, and they were Donovan and Poker Bill Smith. That resolution passed unanimously in the American Legion district convention except for those two votes. They defended him. You are in bad company, Colonel! [Laughter.] You may be able to protect Brown, but I doubt it. I am going to wait for Brown to come across and give the information himself before I put it into the RECORD, but, Colonel, I am going to get the floor a little later on if you keep Brown from giving it, because we will have another appropriation bill up here, and I can get time, because my colleagues are good to me and they will give me time, and then I am going to come in, if you do keep him from giving the information, and I will give it to you second hand from other departments and bureaus of the Government. I will show the facts from other sources, if you do succeed in keeping Brown from answering questions.

I would rather give it first hand. If I do it I will give the name of every man who protects him. If a Senator protects him, I am going to give the Senator's name, and if a Congressman does it I will give you his name, without fear or favor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, I have taken the floor expecting to consume part of the time I have been allotted in calling your attention to an article and to a picture contained in one of the publications gotten out by the Department of the Interior. I hold in my hand copy of a publication that is issued monthly by the Department of the Interior called The New Reclamation Era. I read on the second page of this publication:

> Issued monthly by the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.; price to other than water users, 75 cents a year.

So I take it that this publication goes free into the hands of all water users on the reclamation projects of the United States, and it also circulates generally throughout the United States on a subscription basis. I am sure that it goes into the offices of thousands and thousands of business men.

The issue that I hold in my hand is dated January, 1928. I want to say parenthetically that I am interested in reclamation. I made an address on the floor of the House about two years ago in which I attempted to outline my position on that subject, and also to commend, as many people in my section of the country do not, the work that is being carried on in the western States reclaiming and making valuable wonderful stretches of land that would be worthless without the reclamation work that is being carried on by our Government.

On page 7 of this particular issue of the New Reclamation Era I find a picture. It is inserted in an article that was written by May A. Schnurr, secretary to the commissioner and associate editor of the New Reclamation Era. I called Miss Schnurr over the telephone and asked her what the picture was intended to represent. Her reply was that their field agent went out and gathered pictures and gathered data relating to the subject matter that her department had under consideration. Her article deals largely with the South. The picture I referred to represents an old ox with very broad horns; he has on a shuck collar, a croker sack back band, and trace chains corresponding to the other equipment, and this is all hitched to one of those old hopper cotton planters; a barefoot colored boy is back of the equipment in an attitude of working, but the whole outfit is standing still. The land where the picture was made is not laid off in rows. No furrows are seen in this land, and no planting is going on, so that you can easily see that the picture is made on a "dress-up" occasion purposely to secure this kind of a picture, for effect and not to represent the truth.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I also noticed that article, and one on the next page showing a southern family of dark complexion. Knowing the connection between this article and the proposed expenditure of Federal funds for farm development, it seemed like a strong showing of the need for such expenditure.

Mr. BUSBY. This picture is entitled "Methods still in use in the South." I want to say, gentlemen, that I am from Mississippi, the very heart of the South, and there are no such methods in that section of the country. So I asked Miss Schnurr if she had ever been in the South, and she answered, "I have not." She seemed to catch the trend of my mind and my object in calling her. She said, "I was absolutely confined in my article and the illustration to the material gathered by our field agent." I said, "What is the purpose in setting forth this picture which does not convey any idea of the real condition?" She replied by saying that that was the material furnished her, and she did not have anything else with which to fill in. I got the point that through the reclamation section of the work by our Government they wanted to make it really impressive on the country that we were in dire need of this assistance, and therefore it would be more agreeable to Congress to make the appropriation. I am not one of those who would come here and present any false cause in Congress that would induce it or prompt it to lend help to us in developing the country. I want to tell you in that connection an incident that happened near where I live.

A missionary school was maintained in that section in the South by a certain northern church, and one of the teachers wrote back to a newspaper in one of the Northern States depicting the horrible conditions in the South where the school was located. Her letter did not have in it any basis of truth. She knew it did not. When she was confronted with a copy of the article by some local people—it had gotten back to that section of the country—she explained in this way:

> Unless we can make it appear awful bad we can not obtain funds that will be sent down here with which to run our school.

I am against conveying false pictures to the country or any part of it in order to make an appeal for funds with which to carry on school work, reclamation, or any other kind of work. The South has suffered much by such false propaganda and deliberate misrepresentation. I emphatically protest against that method.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to say that in my contact, for a long time, with that office I have come to know this young woman, and I am sure any error has been entirely unintentional, because she would not, I am sure, have done anything for the sake of creating a false impression or taking any advantage through a misrepresentation. There may have been a lack of familiarity with this that has led to an error. I think the question the gentleman has brought to the attention of the House emphasizes what I have felt for a long time with reference to this publication. Other Members of Congress, and, I think, other Members of my committee, have not been fully in accord with that view; but I believe there is too much of a tendency toward propaganda in that publication to justify its publication out of the reclamation fund.

I think that whenever a Government publication enters the field of advocating policies that are before Congress or before the country there is a danger of some abuse in that particular.

Mr. BUSBY. I thank the gentleman for his observation. It is not my purpose at this time to cast any reflection whatever on the young lady, because she was very fair in her statement. The only error she committed, perhaps, was in not having some knowledge of the correctness of the impression she was conveying to the outside world by means of the pictures she used in her article. I told her when the conversation was over that it was perfectly all right so far as I was concerned. She curried favor slightly with me by saying this particular picture was taken in Georgia. I said that was up to the fellows from Georgia, and that she might hear from them. She said she was very sorry this had all happened. But too easily we convey a false impression to some other parts of the country, and I think the South has been subjected to that kind of treatment too long and too often.

I was in Chicago not long ago. I went there with a committee of business men to try to interest one of the larger concerns of the country in the establishment of a milk plant in our town. They told us frankly they were much interested in our particular section of the country and in our particular proposition. They told us the matter had been taken up with their board of directors, and when the question was presented to the board of directors and they told them they were contemplating going to Mississippi, the first thing the president of the board did was to throw up his hands and say, "My God, do not take anything to Mississippi." You will see, therefore, why I am talking against this kind of a publication and this kind of a picture being sent out by the Government.

If you are going to establish a business in some section of the country, you do not want to establish it where the kind of condition shown in this picture prevails. I want to tell you that this condition does not prevail in the South, and it is not true as to my State or any of the other Southern States, for I have been all over them.

I want to direct your attention for a moment to the rapid development and organization of capital in my particular State of Mississippi. Within the last few years capital for the purpose of carrying on enterprises which will develop the home and develop the farm has been steadily increasing in my State. I am taking these figures from the State auditor's report of last week. In 1923, $10,617,000 of foreign capital was organized to do business in the State of Mississippi; in 1924, $4,218,000. Note the figures. In 1925, $6,098,000; in 1926, $219,807,000; in 1927, $586,908,000. We are growing by leaps and bounds. That is the way we are growing and not as the picture in the New Reclamation Era suggests.

In Mississippi we have advertised a great deal lately for the purpose of showing the country the advantages of that great State. For four years each year there has been organized a know Mississippi better train, and there hardly exists any section of our country that has not been visited by this train. It is composed of about 200 or 300 people. They have three or four exhibit cars, and this train makes a three or four weeks' tour of the country. Last September they went to the Pacific Coast and visited almost every State in the western part of our country. They made stops at various places, showed the exhibits, and let the country see what is in Mississippi and see the things we have done in the way of capital investment. If we are to be faced by a publication issued by our Government, giving the country any such picture as the one I have called to your attention, a publication going out under the authority of the Department of the Interior, certainly our efforts to show the greatness of our State will be very much minimized by the impression received through this kind of a picture. I for one want you to understand, and the country as generally as it can from my humble words, that this picture is not true to life or true to conditions as they exist in the South. We are as progressive in every way as any other section of the country; we use as modern machinery as any other section of the country; and get as good results in every line as any other section of the country.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee for a moment.

This morning during the course of the gentleman's remarks I asked him a question in reference to the personnel of the Pension Bureau. In looking over the hearings, at page 705, I read from the testimony of Mr. Scott, the Commissioner of the Pension Bureau:

> As will appear from additional statements, to be submitted in this connection, new legislation has materially increased the work of the bureau. While the adjudication of claims and the payment of pensions have been pushed with the utmost diligence, it has been necessary, by reason of a limited personnel, to curtail or suspend other important activities which should be resumed as speedily as possible.

Turning to page 717 of the hearings, I find a table in reference to the average number of employees in the bureau, as follows:

My inquiry is due to the delay in the Pension Bureau in adjudicating claims of war veterans. The applications of the Spanish war veterans came in by the thousands after the Congress made the minimum pension $20 per month. The call is made on the War Department or the Navy Department for a report, which requires about two months. The men are then ordered before a medical board. It takes all the way from 6 months to 12 months to get a final decision on a claim.

Heretofore in the handling of pensions the pension generally commenced from the date the application was filed. It has been the policy recently of the bureau to date the pension from the day the applicant appeared before the examining board. The men entitled to pensions by reason of the law are required to wait all the way from 6 months to 12 months for their money, and it is necessary in most instances for a Member of Congress to get behind the claim before you can secure action in less than six months.

I am not finding fault with the Pension Bureau. I am finding fault now with the committee for not getting at the facts if they know these conditions exist, and I can not see how the members can not know they exist, because they are getting complaints from the Spanish War veterans.

If the Commissioner of Pensions states that he has a limited personnel and the Congress sees fit to increase the work of the bureau, it is beyond me to understand why he is not entitled to more money to carry out the purposes of the act. I would like to know the views of the committee as to why the bureau is going to reduce the force instead of increasing it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman forces a statement that I would not have cared to make, but it is the product of my contact with this bureau. I believe that with the force they have they ought to be able to give the service the gentleman asks for.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Well, they are not giving it. The gentleman will admit that.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, I accept the gentleman's statement and his criticism of the service. I have no personal knowledge of it, but I accept his statement, and I took it the gentleman wanted me to speak at this time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. For that reason I have made this statement. Furthermore, I will state that it is more difficult to get a positive, definite, fixed statement of the needs of this bureau than any other bureau I have anything to do with. As I indicated when I spoke before, one theory is presented to you and then they think it over and it is something different.

I have here the notation I made on my committee print of the bill when the commissioner was before us. The gentleman will find that we went up and down the matter, and the gentleman will find the hearings show the difficulty of getting a right, pointed, positive answer on something they ought to have been thinking about for months, if there is any such necessity as the gentleman speaks of.

The Budget estimate is $1,150,000 for salaries, and I entered a note at the time of the hearing, as a result of our examination of the commissioner, "Wants $1,160,000." This is what our hearing led up to, and that left a difference of $10,000 between the Budget and the commissioner. On an item of $1,150,000 that is not very much.

The gentleman will find, if he goes over these hearings for several pages, that we were given to understand the appropriation for the current year is not enough and that the work requires them to decrease their force more than they think they should decrease it. This was not a problem before my committee. This is a problem that should be before the deficiency committee. We are treating not the current year but next year.

We had trouble finding out from them how many men they would have at the end of this year or at the beginning of the next fiscal year. First they talked like it would be 600, and finally they told me they ought to have 615. Whether they have that many or not is not before my subcommittee. My subcommittee was recommending funds to begin the 1st of next July, and the gentleman will find, after some difficulty, as I say, a statement at the bottom of page 720, as follows:

> Mr. CRAMTON. Is that your statement, Mr. Commissioner, that you should have at the end of this year 615 employees instead of 600?
> Mr. SCOTT. I think we should have 615 employees at the end of the year.
> Mr. CRAMTON. If you have 615 employees the 1st of July, is it your theory that you need to continue that number through the next year?
> Mr. SCOTT. It is.
> Mr. CRAMTON. Have you made a pretty careful study of the situation with reference to the work resulting from new legislation, etc.?
> Mr. SCOTT. We have been behind, you understand, for two years.
> As a matter of fact, when I came to this bureau we had some 900 employees, and we are down now to 635. We are doing more work with the reduced force, and I think I have reduced it just as far as I can.
> Mr. CRAMTON. So, the 615 is your idea of what you ought to have the 1st of July, and you ought to have an average of that the next year?
> Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Now, let me read this again:

> Mr. CRAMTON. So, the 615 is your idea of what you ought to have the 1st of July, and you ought to have an average of that the next year?
> Mr. SCOTT. Yes.
> Mr. CRAMTON. That is what the Budget appropriates. One million one hundred and fifty thousand dollars is sufficient to take care of your needs next year, as approved by the Budget and as stated by you here?
> Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

You will find that the Budget states that the allocation of that fund is for 615 employees which the commissioner told us was what was needed.

You can get from the hearings statements that the funds for current year are slightly inadequate, and which may force him to decrease his force before the 1st of July, but that question was not before our committee.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That will not correct the situation from my standpoint, because the situation exists to-day that existed before.

Mr. CRAMTON. There might be such a thing as inefficiency in administration.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Scott states, "We have been behind, you understand, for two years." That bears out my statement of the situation of the bureau that something ought to be done. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will insist on a survey of the bureau to determine what they do need.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not had the experience the gentleman speaks of, but I know similar complaints had been brought to my attention and hence we brought out in the hearings all we could as to what was needed. Here is a responsible head of a bureau who has been complaining, but he says that instead of reducing the force further he ought to have not below 615, that if he has 615 next July it will be sufficient.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No doubt the commissioner has hanging upon his wall the word we hear so much about, "economy." I am for protecting the taxpayer's money but the taxpayer does not ask for economy at the expense of the ex-service men.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, as long as we are on the topic of the Bureau of Pensions I want to make some observations from my own experience and that of some other Members who I feel certain have had similar experience to my own.

We all have numerous claims for pensions. In some cases it is necessary to go into a great amount of detail and thought and study and advice as to the character of the evidence, in going over the evidence, and then in submitting the claim, and when there is a close question involved of analyzing that evidence in a letter to the Pension Commissioner when the claim is under discussion. It seems to me if a Member of Congress can give all that time and detailed thought and study to a single claim there ought to be some one in the office of Commissioner of Pensions who would give the same thought and study in handling the claim and in the correspondence regarding it.

During the past year while at home there were several claims of that character, and with the claim and in connection with the correspondence I went into considerable detail discussing the evidence and putting it up in detail somewhat like a lawyer would handle a matter in court.

Now, what did I get when the claim was turned down? I am not complaining because they were turned down; it may be that they were right, but I am complaining about the way the claims were and now are handled.

In answer to all the detailed correspondence, there was sent a carbon of the letter sent to the claimant saying that the claim was rejected, and nothing else. In other words, you get a letter, and from that letter you would not know whether anybody ever read the file or understandingly passed on the point that you looked into so carefully in preparing and presenting the case.

I took the matter up with the commissioner and wrote him I thought it was a queer thing that a Member of Congress, after putting that amount of work into a case, could get out of his office nothing but a carbon copy of a letter giving the conclusion, addressed to the claimant. He came back and said that the blame rested on Congress; that he did not have sufficient clerical force to write the letters and so sent a carbon copy. I then wrote him that I did not care so much about its being a carbon copy if he could get some one to intelligently go over the files and answer the correspondence and let me know the situation. He came back and said that he did not have sufficient appropriation to handle correspondence in that way. So I took the matter up with the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee.

As I recall it, I passed on some of the correspondence to him. The chairman of the committee advised me that, in his judgment, the fault was not with the appropriation but with the commissioner. I find now that in the commissioner's appearance before the committee he said he was satisfied with 615 men that have been allotted him by the Budget for the next year, which I think is about 15 more than they have this year. The two statements do not jibe. Either what is written to me is not the case or else he should have frankly told this subcommittee that Congress had been too niggardly and that he could not take care of this situation in a competent way, and he should then have asked for more money.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. Is it not true that the heads of the different bureaus are under instructions not to ask the committees of Congress for more than the Budget states, and that they are under severe penalty if they do that?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is entirely true, but our subcommittee has followed the practice, when they have reason to believe that a situation ought to be developed, of attempting to develop that situation, as we did in this case, because the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] had called the matter to my attention. You will find that I got from the commissioner a statement that they really needed $217,500,000 instead of $210,000,000 for the payment of pensions, and we gave him ample opportunity to respond to our inquiries, because the law that is mentioned does not apply if Congress asks for the information.

Mr. LEAVITT. But they are under the difficulties just the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT] has said, that by reason of a provision of law, which is necessary as such, there is a possibility of a chief of a bureau being embarrassed by coming out and saying frankly what he should have; but after all, if this Budget system is going to work as we want it to work, there ought to be men in charge of these bureaus who would take Congress at its word, and if they feel that they are justified in asking for additional moneys, that they have been unduly cut down, should talk frankly with the Members of Congress and frankly with the subcommittee in charge of the appropriations. I feel in connection with this particular matter that there has not existed that sort of frankness.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does not the gentleman know that if one of these bureau heads was to do that he would be promptly fired from his position by the present authorities in Washington?

Mr. NEWTON. I do not know that, and I do not believe that is the case.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, all of the time that this subcommittee worked on this bill, every year, these bureaus have responded to such invitations from our committee, and in some cases when they made a case increases have been made, and no official has ever experienced any embarrassment or difficulty by reason of responding to such a request from the committee.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does not the gentleman know that it is almost impossible to get these heads of bureaus to express themselves when it is contrary to the President's financial policy?

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course——

Mr. ABERNETHY. Unless the committee wants them to do it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly; the law forbids their asking Congress for more than the Budget has recommended, and it is essential that that should be the law; but when Congress asks for information then that law is not effective, and I find them very generally responding. I have never known of any embarrassment to result to them from it.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if this Budget system is to work, there should be that frankness on the part of the bureau chiefs and a desire upon the part of the Appropriation Committee to really find out as to every substantial item, whether the bureau chief has the money which he feels he ought to have, and I do not feel that in this case that has been carried out by the head of the bureau. It is discouraging when a man puts in the time that a Member does on some of these pension claims because of the appeal that they have to one's sympathy, to find them handled in a perfectly perfunctory manner and when you get through not to know whether anybody has even read what you have put up to them. I hope for a decided change in the Bureau of Pensions in the handling of congressional correspondence. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. No further requests for time being made, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses incidental to the sale of timber, and for the expenses of administration of Indian forest lands from which such timber is sold to the extent that the proceeds of such sales are sufficient for that purpose, $175,000, reimbursable to the United States as provided in the act of February 14, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 415).

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 21, line 14, strike out "$175,000" and insert "$200,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. I would simply state in that connection that from our investigations and the hearings we have had we find that their fund, which is really reimbursable out of sales of timber, is not sufficient to meet the need, and the effect of the smaller item would be that 8 per cent being deducted from the sales to cover expenses we would deduct from the Indians more than we will spend for the purpose, and to avoid that I think the item should be increased at least as much as I have indicated in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flathead irrigation project, Montana: The unexpended balance of the appropriation for continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., contained in the act of May 10, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 464–466), as continued available in the act of January 12, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 945), shall remain available for the fiscal year 1929, subject to the conditions and provisions of said acts: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the $395,000 available for continuation of construction of a power plant may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the construction and operation of a power-distributing system and for purchase of power for said project but shall be available for that purpose only upon execution of an appropriate repayment contract as provided for in said acts: Provided further, That the net revenues derived from the operation of such distributing system shall be used to reimburse the United States in the order provided for in said acts: Provided further, That the Federal Power Commission is authorized, in accordance with the Federal water power act and upon terms satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, to issue a permit or permits or a license or licenses for the use, for the development of power, of power sites on the Flathead Reservation and of water rights reserved or appropriated for the irrigation projects: Provided further, That rentals from such licenses for use of Indian lands shall be paid the Indians of said reservation as a tribe, which money shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent: Provided further, That the public notice provided for in the act of January 12, 1927, shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior upon the 1st day of November, 1930: Provided further, That, in his discretion, the Secretary of the Interior may provide in such repayment contracts for covering into construction costs the operation and maintenance charges for the irrigation season of 1928 and all undistributed operation and maintenance cost, and may extend the time for payment of operation and maintenance charges now due and unpaid for such period as in his judgment may be necessary, not exceeding five years, the charges now due so extended to bear interest payable annually at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid, and to contract for the payment of the construction charges now due and unpaid within such term of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary with interest payable annually at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid: Provided further, That not more than $35,000 of said reappropriated balance of $395,000 shall be immediately available for operation and maintenance, and $75,000 shall be available for construction of laterals near Ronan upon the execution of appropriate repayment contract as provided for in said acts.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I had not expected that this bill would be reached for reading until to-morrow, and as I did not get possession of the bill until to-day, I have not had time to go over it as carefully as I should have liked. I call the chairman's attention to page 56 of the bill, line 22:

South Dakota: Crow Creek Hospital, $9,000.

Is that appropriation of $9,000 to be used to alter some of the school buildings for use as hospitals? Is that the purpose of the appropriation?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the appropriation for the maintenance of that hospital. The hospital has been in operation heretofore and this $9,000 is for its maintenance.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I did not understand that the hospital at Crow Creek was in actual operation. I thought the plan was to reconstruct the school buildings there for hospital purposes, and I was wondering whether the appropriation is for that purpose.

Mr. CRAMTON. There has been an appropriation for the current year for this same hospital. The statement made to the committee was that the increase of $1,500 would provide an additional nurse, so the hospital appears to be in operation and they are providing an additional nurse. That is the reason for the increase in the appropriation, which in the current year was $7,500, while the bill before us carries $9,000. It is a maintenance item.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I ask the chairman to turn to page 79. There he will find the item for the Belle Fourche irrigation project, South Dakota. The amount carried under that item is $250,000, and I want to ask the chairman whether that is for drainage purposes?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is for drainage purposes entirely.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The total amount which will be required there, according to the estimates I have, is approximately $1,000,000. I understand it is the purpose of the committee to commence this drainage work this year, to spend $250,000, and then continue the work from year to year until the drainage is completed.

This $250,000 is not made immediately available.

Mr. CRAMTON. They are all immediately available.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. So the construction of the drainage system can commence next spring? Ordinarily the appropriation would not be available until July 1.

Mr. CRAMTON. But these construction items are immediately available under reclamation, because, for the sake of economy, it is necessary to have the contract cover the construction season rather than a fiscal year.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I looked for the provision making it immediately available, but did not find it.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is in the first paragraph. There is $33,000 for two siphons in the lateral system and $217,000 for drainage construction.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That covers what I desired to know. I wanted to make certain that the drainage work could be commenced next spring and continued until it should be completed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill down to and including line 12, page 54.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9136) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ELECTION OF A MEMBER TO A COMMITTEE

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 89

Resolved, That F. D. LETTS, Iowa, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in case consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill has been completed, that when the House adjourns on Friday, January 13, it adjourn until Monday, January 16 next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

AIRPORT AT GOVERNORS ISLAND, N. Y.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, at the request of my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. COHEN], by printing a letter he has written to Maj. Gen. Hanson E. Ely regarding the airport on Governors Island.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter written by my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COHEN] to Gen. Hanson E. Ely, which is as follows:

JANUARY 7, 1928.

Maj. Gen. HANSON E. ELY,
Governors Island, New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR GENERAL ELY: I have read the newspaper accounts of your statements before the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York on Governors Island as a military necessity versus its use as an express airport station, and I desire to call your attention to a number of inaccuracies which, though perhaps not intentional, might give the public an erroneous impression of the suitability and advisability of Governors Island as an airport.

In the introduction to your speech you state that the subject will be "the pros and cons as to whether or not Governors Island, in whole or in part, should be used as an airport." Yet you fail to give one item favorable to Governors Island as an airport, confining yourself to the negative side entirely. Your speech seems to be merely a repetition of the arguments set forth by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York as to their objections to Governors Island as an airport, and it seems to me that the competent staff that assisted you in writing your speech took the greater part of it from the records of the chamber of commerce. All in all the speech seems clearly designed to meet the views of your hearers and to please them, and is not based on true facts and existing conditions.

Among your inaccuracies are the ones regarding Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's flights; the possibilities of planes hitting skyscrapers; the number of clear days at the island; fog and smoke; size of the island; and cost of conversion. None of these are borne out by facts.

You probably are not aware that thorough and extensive investigations made by a committee of the Sixty-eighth Congress, the Merchants' Association of the city of New York, the Hoover location committee, and the mayor's committee have all resulted in recommendations by these bodies for the use of Governors Island as an express airport to serve lower Manhattan and Brooklyn. These committees are all totally unbiased and are only concerned with the ultimate greatest benefit to the city and to the country.

If, as you state, the reason for the retention of Governors Island by the War Department is to house troops for the protection of the financial district, the following will prove conclusively that this need does not exist.

According to figures supplied by your predecessor, Maj. Gen. James H. McRae, Governors Island houses 112 officers and 1,055 men. A statement made by Representative LAGUARDIA, printed in the New York Times of August 7, 1927, is to the effect that according to data obtained from the office of The Adjutant General there were only 591 troops stationed on Governors Island.

You state that it would be advisable to protect with Government troops in times of domestic disturbances the subtreasury, customhouse, Federal reserve bank, and other Federal agencies, and that troops stationed on Governors Island could reach lower Manhattan with a minimum loss of time.

In refutation of this contention I cite the Wall Street explosion on September 16, 1920. The following is an extract from a letter received from Maj. Gen. J. H. McRae:

"Call for troops was received at Fort Jay at 12.10 p. m., September 16, 1920. A detachment of 2 officers and 57 men left Governors Island in trucks by ferry, arriving at the subtreasury at 12.45 p. m., same day. A second detachment of 4 officers and 48 men arrived at the subtreasury at 1.30 p. m. At 2.50 p. m. the detachments left the subtreasury and returned to Governors Island, arriving by the ferry leaving the Battery at 3.15 p. m."

Thus the entire detachment consisted of 6 officers and 105 men, and it took 1 hour and 20 minutes for 4 officers and 48 men to reach the scene of action. This will speak for itself as to the time necessary for troops to be moved to reach and to protect the financial district.

While on this subject may I state that, to my knowledge, this is the only time in 50 years that a call was made for Federal troops for the city of New York. I also call your attention to the following extract from a letter from Police Commissioner Joseph A. Warren:

"Please be advised that a survey of the department shows that 400 policemen could be brought into the financial district within half an hour. Of course, in the event of a serious outbreak this number could be almost indefinitely increased."

Also to extract from a letter written by Fire Commissioner John J. Dorman, as follows:

"We can assemble 100 men in the financial district in 15 minutes. Two engine companies can be operating with streams of water, which I understand are quite effective in dispersing rioters, in five minutes."

Also to extract from letter written by Gerhard M. Dahl, chairman of the board of directors of the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Corporation:

"It will take about 21 minutes for a train to go from the station nearest Fort Hamilton (which is Ninety-fifth Street) to Wall Street, and I am reliably informed that if this train skips stations it will take 17 minutes."

Therefore, if the financial district needs protection, the police and fire departments are able to give five times the amount of protection given by the soldiers on Governors Island in less than one-third the time, and troops can be brought from Fort Hamilton in less time than the same number of troops can be brought from Governors Island. In view of this, I see no reason why the troops stationed on Governors Island should not be removed and the island left available for an express landing field or airport, which is so necessary to the progress of New York City and of the United States.

I would ask you to send me duplicates of the maps that you used to illustrate your speech when you mentioned the airports Croydon, Le Bourget, and Tempelhof; also the map of Governors Island and the illustration you used to show the direction of the wind to confirm your statement that the wind for 11 months of the year is across the narrowest part of the island. I would also like a copy of the chart showing the enlargement of the island to an area 1,000 meters square, and also to an area 1 mile square, so as to compare it with the map of the harbor now in my possession.

You state that Governors Island is too small to be classed as a class A field. My bill to be introduced in Congress is for the use of Governors Island as a landing field or airport in conjunction with other fields located in the suburbs of New York, and that it will not rate as a class A field; it will rate as a class B field.

According to competent engineers, Governors Island contains 198 acres, and not 172 acres as you state. It is subject to an extension on both sides of the island's filled-in ground, which would give a width of approximately 1,000 feet at its narrowest point, a maximum width of 2,575 feet, and a maximum length of 4,500 feet, making it as large as Mitchel Field and larger than Roosevelt Field, Curtiss Field, and Miller Field. This can be further extended on both sides of the narrowest part of the island. The widening of the field on any part of the island will in no way obstruct the channel between Bedlows Island and Governors Island, but as a landing or express station in conjunction with other airports, no great extension of Governors Island is needed.

Such seasoned and eminent aviators as Commander Richard F. Byrd, Clarence Chamberlin, and Casey Jones have stated that there is nothing objectionable to Governors Island as a landing field. Clarence Chamberlin, in a speech at the National Republican Club, stated that Governors Island is large enough and is absolutely suitable for an airport. The experience and record of these men certainly gives their opinion more weight than the palpably biased statements of the military men and the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York.

The prevailing winds northwest and southwest are distinctly favorable to the use of Governors Island as an express airport and not unfavorable, as stated in your speech. I call your attention to the fact that if the winds from the southwest are in the direction of the island's greatest length, the winds from the northwest could not be directly across the narrowest part of the island.

Your statement regarding the velocity of winds on Governors Island is not borne out by official meteorological reports. According to these reports and surveys, the wind conditions at Governors Island are practically the same as at all airports situated around New York City.

Referring to your statement that New York Bay is unsuitable for seaplanes because of ice, the conditions there are no different than in the East River, Hudson River, Harlem River, or Jamaica Bay.

Fog conditions are 1 per cent better at Governors Island than at Jamaica Bay or even Sandy Hook. Hadley Field could not be used as a landing field for three successive days during the month of October because of fog. Commander Byrd was unable to find Le Bourget because of fog. So you see, all fields have the fog problem, and no one ever considered discontinuing the use of any existing fields because of this.

On December 31, 1927, fog conditions over lower Manhattan and Governors Island were very bad. I telephoned from my office at 120 Broadway to the Bronx fire headquarters and asked about the fog there, and received the report that the condition was very bad. I telephoned to the Queens fire headquarters and inquired about the fog conditions at Fort Tilden, and was told they were very bad. I telephoned to Curtiss Field, and the party who answered said there was no visibility and that the fog was very bad. I was not able to get a telephone connection with Hadley Field. This merely proves that the fog conditions in the Bronx, Jamaica Bay, and Curtiss Field are practically the same as on Governors Island.

You state that an airport should be provided with water, electric power, and good roads. As an express landing station Governors Island would not require any roads other than now on the island, and facilities for the transportation of passengers, mail, and small packages to the mainland could be readily improved, and at very little expense.

I would like you to send me a copy of map 5, which shows the proximity of high buildings to Governors Island. The nearest high building to Governors Island is 1 mile distant from the shore line of the island, and an experienced aviator does not need 1 mile to make a landing.

The unsatisfactory features which you outline regarding size, weather, fog, wind, etc., were existent during the war. Why, then, did the Government use Governors Island as a training station for aviators during the war? I never heard of an inexperienced flyer crashing into any buildings on lower Manhattan or having any accident because of any other of the factors you bring forth against the use of Governors Island as an airport. If Governors Island was entirely suitable for the training of novices, why is it unsuitable for use by experienced flyers and up-to-date machines?

In your desire to retain Governors Island for a military station you entirely ignore—or overlook—the fact that all other airports are so far distant from the financial and business sections of the city of New York that it takes from 45 minutes to 1½ hours to bring the mail and packages to and from the field, whereas mail and passengers could be landed on Manhattan Island in 15 minutes after arriving on Governors Island.

This very important factor received no consideration from you, but the selfish desires of the War Department to maintain Governors Island as a home for officers on duty in the headquarters of the Department of the East are being allowed to deliberately supersede the advantages of the entire country of airport facilities that will prove of inestimable value to the future of the country.

I take strong exception to your statement calling for the elimination of Governors Island from future consideration as an airport, because the statement is actuated by ulterior motives, and is opposed to the opinions of a committee of Representatives of the United States, the Hoover location committee, the Merchants' Association of New York, the mayor's committee, and by all the prominent and distinguished aviators of the day.

I trust that this letter will convince you of the suitability of Governors Island as an express airport station, and of its greater value to the United States for this purpose than for a military post, and that you will be willing to recommend to the War Department that it release the island in favor of its use as an airport.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM W. COHEN,
Member of Congress.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

By Mr. CRAIL: A bill (H. R. 9221) granting a pension to Leonora M. Knox; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9222) for the relief of Charles G. Johnson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 9223) granting a pension to Polly Ann Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9224) granting a pension to Celia Enright; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 9225) for the relief of Frank Baglione; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. EDWARDS: A bill (H. R. 9226) to authorize the reappointment of George F. Seyle as second lieutenant in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ENGLAND: A bill (H. R. 9227) granting relief to the trustees of Allegheny College, Blue Sulphur, Greenbrier County, W. Va.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FULBRIGHT: A bill (H. R. 9228) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Griggs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9229) granting an increase of pension to Christopher S. Alvord; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9230) granting a pension to Eliza Ward; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9231) granting a pension to Charles Dulaney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. GARDNER of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 9232) granting an increase of pension to Wilhelmina H. Schwallier; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 9233) granting an increase of pension to Ettie C. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HANCOCK: A bill (H. R. 9234) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOPE: A bill (H. R. 9235) granting an increase of pension to Cynthia C. Eaton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES: A bill (H. R. 9236) granting a pension to Eliza E. Adkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9237) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Maxwell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 9238) for the relief of the widow of Ephriam E. Page; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mrs. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 9239) for the relief of the Shipowners & Merchants Tugboat Co. of San Francisco, Calif.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KENDALL: A bill (H. R. 9240) granting an increase of pension to Margaret E. Gunter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEATHERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 9241) granting a pension to Myrtle Grantham; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEECH: A bill (H. R. 9242) granting an increase of pension to Hannah L. Hollen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9243) granting an increase of pension to Dillie Shuman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 9244) granting an increase of pension to Lydia Reese; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKEOWN: A bill (H. R. 9245) granting a pension to Mary A. Moore; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9246) granting an increase of pension to Malinda Stevens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MacGREGOR: A bill (H. R. 9247) granting a pension to Julia H. Nichols; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MEAD: A bill (H. R. 9248) granting an increase of pension to John D. Sullivan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NIEDRINGHAUS: A bill (H. R. 9249) granting retirement pay to Christ Roesch; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RAINEY: A bill (H. R. 9250) granting a pension to Florence Lewis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RANSLEY: A bill (H. R. 9251) for the relief of Joseph M. McAleer; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9252) for the relief of E. K. Lamont & Son; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 9253) granting an increase of pension to Bridget D. Boland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9254) granting a pension to Belle Bailey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9255) granting a pension to Lillie Mueller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

REFUND OF PASSPORT FEES ERRONEOUSLY COLLECTED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, requesting that section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the issue and validity of passports, and for other purposes," Sixty-ninth Congress, session 1, approved July 3, 1926, Public No. 493, be amended so as to authorize the refund of passport fees erroneously collected otherwise than under the existing authority contained in that section.

I concur in the view of the Secretary of State, and I therefore request of the Congress legislation amending section 3 of the act of July 3, 1926, in the sense suggested.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 13, 1928.

SECOND INTERNATIONAL EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION CONFERENCE (S. DOC. NO. 40)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, requesting that legislation be enacted to provide funds to cover the expense of this Government's participation in the Second International Emigration and Immigration Conference to be held at Habana commencing March 31, 1928. The Secretary of State sets forth in his letter the reasons why it is considered advisable that the United States be represented at this conference.

I concur in the view of the Secretary of State that this Government should participate in the Second International Emigration and Immigration Conference, and therefore request of the Congress legislation appropriating $5,000 for each and every expense connected with the representation of the United States at that conference, including travel, subsistence, or per diem in lieu thereof in amounts authorized in the discretion of the Secretary of State (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), and compensation of employees as the Secretary of State shall consider necessary and authorize in his discretion.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 13, 1928.

ELECTRIC-POWER INDUSTRY—SUPPLY OF ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENT AND COMPETITIVE CONDITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 329, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session (agreed to February 9, 1925), a report of the commission on the electric-power industry, Volume II, entitled "Supply of Electrical Equipment and Competitive Conditions."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This is the second volume of the report made in obedience to a resolution of the Senate. The first volume has been printed and is available to Senators. I think the report ought to go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. That is where the other went, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

THE MIDDLE RIO GRANDE CONSERVANCY PROJECT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the chief engineer of the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, also signed by a board of consulting engineers, and accompanied by a report by the board, together with a letter by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs briefly explaining the situation, which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORT OF THE CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the company for the year 1927, with the operations for the month of December only estimated, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I send to the desk telegrams and letters in the nature of petitions, together with copy of a response I have made relative to an increased tariff duty on onions. I ask that my letter be printed in the RECORD and that the names of the petitioners and the various organizations be noted, but not necessarily that the papers be printed in full. I ask that the telegrams and letters be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PHIPPS presented telegrams and letters in the nature of petitions from the Montrose County Chamber of Commerce, R. L. Loesch, secretary; H. A. Stevens, president; and H. B. Coffman, secretary, of a meeting of onion growers and dealers, held in Olathe; the Uncompaghre Valley Water Users' Association, by B. S. Tobin, acting secretary, and the Montrose Lions Club, by Walter P. Crose, president, all in the State of Colorado, praying for an increased tariff duty on onions, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

The letter of response of Mr. PHIPPS on the subject is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
January 12, 1928.

Hon. JOHN F. BETHUNE,
Secretary United States Tariff Commission,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Thanking you for your letter of January 11, transmitting notice of a public hearing next month on the production costs of onions, your records will show that I have earnestly urged an increased tariff duty on this important farm commodity. On August 15 last I presented letters and resolutions from citizens of Olathe, Colo., and later took up this matter with the commission in person, calling attention to the serious situation in Montrose County, and to telegrams from the chamber of commerce, the Olathe Onion Growers and Dealers' Association, the Uncompahgre Valley Water Users' Association, the Montrose Lions' Club, and others interested.

In view of the pending tariff resolution I am now calling such messages to the attention of my colleagues in the Senate, and the extreme necessity for a more adequate protective duty on onions has also been presented personally to the President of the United States.

I desire to impress upon your commission the gravity of the existing situation, especially in the West, as well as the need for raising a higher tariff wall against excessive importations of this important farm commodity. I deeply regret that the commission has found it impossible to recommend an increased duty on onions prior to this time, and sincerely trust that definite action will be expedited in every proper way. Farmers in my State, especially on the western slope, are deeply interested. Will you be so kind, therefore, as to consider this letter as their formal request for early and favorable action on the pending application, and to include their views in the hearings to be held early next month.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A joint resolution memorializing Congress to amend the river and harbor act so as to provide for maintenance of a uniform stage of water in the headwaters of the Mississippi River throughout the year

Whereas the river and harbor act passed by Congress in 1880 provided for the creation of storage reservoirs to impound the high waters of the Mississippi River during the spring and early summer, and to release them during the late summer and fall, so as to produce a greater flow in said river during the low-water season in the interests of navigation, and disregarding the conservation and propagation of fish life in the headwaters of the Mississippi; and

Whereas the raising and lowering of the water in the storage reservoirs created by the War Department under said act has resulted in destroying much of the natural feeding, resting, and breeding grounds of migratory birds, and has affected the value of the property of riparian owners, and interfered with the natural propagation of game fish, and has resulted in the freezing of many thousands of game fishes in shallow bays during the winter months: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the Senate concurring), That Congress be, and it hereby is, memorialized to so amend said river and harbor act that the wild life of the State of Minnesota may be protected and propagated, and that said act be amended so as to provide for the maintenance of a uniform stage of water or a definite, fixed, and permanent low-water level in said headwaters throughout the year; be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Speaker of the House and the Vice President of the United States and to each Representative in Congress from the State of Minnesota.

JOHN A. JOHNSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

W. I. NOLAN,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house of representatives the 9th day of March, 1927.

JOHN I. LEVIN,
Chief Clerk House of Representatives.

Passed the senate the 10th day of March, 1927.

GEO. W. PEACHEY,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved March 11, 1927.

THEODORE CHRISTIANSON, Governor.

Filed March 11, 1927.

MIKE HOLM, Secretary of State.

I, Mike Holm, secretary of state of the State of Minnesota and keeper of the great seal, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of the resolution filed in my office March 11, 1927.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented the following concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Concurrent Resolution 11

Whereas the people of the Nation are not unmindful of the service rendered by the valiant men and women of the country who served in the various branches of the national defense during the World War; and

Whereas it is the universal expectation and desire of all right-thinking people of the Nation that those men and women who sustained disabilities during their service either at home or abroad shall be properly compensated for their injuries and handicaps they sustained; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has created the United States Veterans' Bureau, charged with administrative duty of awarding and paying compensation to the Nation's defenders who sustained handicaps, nervous, physical, and mental disabilities, resulting from their military service; and

Whereas millions of citizens of the States and Territories of the Union were accepted or called by draft by the Federal Government into military service for the defense of the Nation and its ideals; and

Whereas upon receiving honorable discharge from the military service, said men and women automatically reverted to their prior status as citizens of their respective States and Territories; and

Whereas the United States Veterans' Bureau is depriving thousands of disabled ex-service men and women and their dependents and beneficiaries of the benefits which Congress has provided for them and is, in contravention of the Bill of Rights of our Federal and State Constitutions, "adjudicating" numerous veterans who are suffering from nervous disabilities, insane, and mentally incompetent who are not incompetent, without granting them a "day in court" to defend their liberties and civil rights for the obvious purpose of enabling petty officials of the bureau to dictate the appointment of their own nominee as guardians, curators, and conservators to receive the compensation award to which such veterans are entitled through the promulgation of erroneous legal decisions and to intricate and insurmountable rules and regulations and requirements: Be it therefore

Resolved (the senate concurring herein)—

SECTION 1. That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be petitioned to use their best efforts in an endeavor to bring about a change in the laws of the United States as necessary to adequately protect the liberty and civil rights of all disabled World War veterans who are suffering from nervous disabilities and who may hereafter apply to the United States Veterans' Bureau for the relief which has been provided for them by the Congress responsive to the desires of the people of this Nation.

SEC. 2. That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be petitioned to use their best efforts in an endeavor to bring about a change in conditions in the United States Veterans' Bureau to the end that those former service men and women of the World War having service-incurred or service-aggravated disabilities may be promptly compensated.

SEC. 3. That a copy of this concurrent resolution be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to Gen. Frank T. Hines, and Hon. William Wolf Smith, director and general council, respectively, of the United States Veterans' Bureau, Washington, D. C.; to Mr. William J. Winn, department commander of the Arkansas Department, American Legion; to Mr. Thomas M. Kirby, chairman national rehabilitation committee, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.; to Mr. Watson B. Miller, chairman national rehabilitation committee, the American Legion, Bond Building, Washington, D. C.; and to Mr. Edwin S. Bettleheim, chairman Veterans of Foreign Wars, Metropolitan Bank Building, Washington, D. C.

February 25. Read and approved.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Hugh W. Wicker, adjutant, the American Legion, of Little Rock, Ark., praying for the making of a small appropriation from which funds may be drawn for cigarettes and necessary clothing for veterans who are hospitalized and who are not drawing compensation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 1285) to provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 75) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2277) relating to giving false information regarding the commission of crime in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 76) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. EDGE:

A bill (S. 2524) for the relief of Josephine Doxey; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2525) granting the consent of Congress for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Delaware River from the city of Philadelphia, Pa., to Gloucester County, N. J.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 2526) for the relief of Sheldon R. Purdy; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 2527) granting an increase of pension to Julia A. Huston; and

A bill (S. 2528) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Scott (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2529) for the relief of Mrs. L. E. Burton; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 2530) for the relief of W. O. Whipps (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 2531) granting a pension to Charles L. Heintz (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2532) to provide for the designation of clerks or employees of the Department of the Interior to serve as registers and receivers in the land offices in Alaska; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A bill (S. 2533) to repeal the United States grain standards act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2534) authorizing the appropriation of $65,000 to be expended by the American Section, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, for the purpose of making a survey to fix the boundary between the United States and Mexico, between El Paso, Tex., and Fort Quitman, Tex., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. BRATTON:

A bill (S. 2535) granting to the State of New Mexico certain lands for reimbursement of the counties of Grant, Luna, Hidalgo, and Santa Fe for interest paid on railroad aid bonds, and for the payment of the principal of railroad aid bonds issued by the town of Silver City, and to reimburse said town for interest paid on said bonds, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. BINGHAM:

A bill (S. 2536) to extend the time for which appropriations are authorized under the act entitled "An act to authorize the collection and editing of official papers of the Territories of the United States now in the national archives," approved March 3, 1925; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 2537) to amend section 110, national defense act, so as to provide better administrative procedure in the disbursements for pay of National Guard officers and enlisted men; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 2538) for the construction of a road across the Makah Reservation to Neah Bay, Wash.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas:

A bill (S. 2539) granting a pension to Pleasant R. W. Harris; and

A bill (S. 2540) granting an increase of pension to Margaret J. Webb (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMOOT. I introduce a bill to amend an act authorizing the incorporation of the Smithsonian Institution, and at the same time I ask that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of and for the indefinite postponement of Senate bill 1300, a bill for the same purpose but which requires amendment. Therefore I introduce a new bill and ask for the discharge of the committee and indefinite postponement of the bill (S. 1300) to amend an act authorizing the incorporation of the Smithsonian Institution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 2541) to amend an act authorizing the incorporation of the Smithsonian Institution; to the Committee on Finance.

LOWER COLORADO RIVER BASIN

Mr. PHIPPS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1274) to provide for the construction of works for the protection and development of the lower Colorado River Basin, for the approval of the Colorado River compact, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

AVIATION FIELD IN ARIZONA

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent, as to Calendar No. 45, the bill (S. 1154) to authorize the use by the county of Yuma, Ariz., of certain public lands for a municipal aviation field, and for other purposes, that it be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF SINKING OF THE SUBMARINE "S-4"

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131), providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S-4, and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines, and I submit a report (No. 77) thereon.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to inquire what is the report he has just filed?

Mr. HALE. It is upon the joint resolution providing for an investigation into the submarine S-4 disaster.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The majority of the committee has filed a written report?

Mr. HALE. A written report.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And it will be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEIWER in the chair). The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar and the report will be printed under the rule.

THE TARIFF AND AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 52) submitted by Mr. MCMASTER, favoring a reduction of tariff schedules and the consideration of tariff legislation at the present session of Congress.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, before we come to a vote on the pending resolution I desire to submit a few remarks. I have made the statement before that I do not recall any time when there have been so many problems before the country, but so few issues. The problems are many and they are complicated, but they do not strike a political difference that will amount to an issue such as has been the case in every period in the country's history since we have been a National Government. I might enumerate the problems which come before us and which are now pending, in which the parties on either side are as much or more divided among themselves than the parties are divided as between the original contestants.

There is probably to be found an explanation in that situation of our inability to arouse the public on matters of the franchise, because they are apt to say, "What is the difference?" There is really a great difference, however, between the parties on the subject now before us, the question of a protective tariff. I have noted in the last 20 years that difference growing less and less. It certainly is emphasized in the present resolution. It is offered by a Republican. The purport of the resolution is a lowering of the tariff. Just what the extent of that is to be no one knows. All the Senators who have spoken on the resolution on the opposite side of the aisle, except three, have supported the protective-tariff system in reference to particular items and have, therefore, expressed opposition to the resolution. If it is a matter pertaining to the manufacture of straw hats, the State which is employed in that business, represented by a distinguished Democrat, is protected in its interests by the representative speaking against the resolution because he wants protection on that item, to say nothing about other items which have not been mentioned. If the matter pertains to vegetable oils, there are Democratic representatives of the State who will speak on behalf of protection upon those articles.

If it is a case of citrus fruits coming from Florida the distinguished representatives of that State speak for protection. So I could go on and enumerate the various interests that have contended here on behalf of the protective tariff when it is to apply to particular articles. I am not criticizing those who have taken such a position with respect to particular items. The criticism that I offer is that a consistent attitude, it seems to me, would not permit a Senator to speak for protection for an article that his State produces and against protection for an article that other States produce, provided the articles sought to be protected come in competition with foreign imports; in other words, it is a sort of "spotted" protection theory that favors protection for the one article growing in a particular State, but free trade for other articles that are not produced by that State.

So I think I am justified in the statement that the difference between the political parties on this one issue is becoming less and less; in fact, I believe that the southern section of the country, as it becomes a great manufacturing section, will gradually become more and more adherent to the protective theory.

There might be some occasion for surprise in that the author of this resolution comes from a great agricultural State. It is a surprise to me, and as I have listened to the arguments of the proponents of the resolution, especially those who are on this side of the aisle, I think there is an element that is unfortunate to the extent that there is indicated more or less of defiance or of a feeling of retaliation, "We are going to get even; there has been discrimination, it is alleged; and in order that we may relieve these discriminations we are going to do certain things, no matter what may be the ultimate result." I am convinced that such is a very unfortunate plane for a legislative body to operate upon.

This is a very broad principle and the subject should be discussed as a matter of principle. Any suggestion that "we are going to have what we want, no matter what effect it may have upon the general public, or else we are going to pull the house down over our own heads" is like cutting off one's nose in order to spite one's face. I know of no situation that is better expressed by that aphorism than the situation that arises here.

The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in my judgment, developed the fundamental proposition that is at the foundation of all tariff legislation, and I believe that he did not make it as strong as the facts will warrant. We are not only coming to be an agriculturally importing country but we are going to reach that condition much sooner than many Senators to-day believe. It is not only because we are in competition with new countries producing the same things agriculturally that we are producing, but it is largely because we are increasing our consumptive power in a marvelous manner without necessarily increasing the acreage tillable in agricultural production. Here is a source of production that is largely fixed; it can not be unlimitedly extended. Stress has been placed upon increasing production to the acre rather than increasing acreage. We have had that emphasis for the last 20 years upon the basis that we have an unlimited, increasingly growing consumptive need, while we have a fixed rather than a growing productive ability. The number of acres susceptible of production is not to be greatly increased, for it is more or less a fixed area, while the consumption needs are bound to increase.

Without an increase of acreage and with an increase of consumptive needs we must increase the production per acre. On that necessity emphasis has been laid for 20 years. As a result of that emphasis we have come to the point where that fixed acreage is producing a surplus which is growing less and will continue to grow less every year, which is inevitable. Before many years consumptive needs, unlimited in character except ability to buy, will be demanding a supply that our country will not be sufficiently productive to meet. Then comes the importation and its competition just as certainly as we are in this Chamber; that inevitable law of increasing needs, with a fixed ability to produce, will compel us to look to other countries. That is the point that was emphasized yesterday by the senior Senator from Idaho. We are bound under existing conditions to become in time an importing country of agricultural products.

Mr. MCMASTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MCMASTER. As I understand the distinguished Senator from Ohio, he infers that there will soon be need of the importation of additional agricultural products, but that there are already agricultural products upon the free list which need protection. That was the central theme discussed yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Idaho when he delivered his very able speech upon this subject. If it be true that duties are needed upon certain agricultural products which come in free at the present time, that is the argument why this resolution should be adopted.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, that introduces another phase that has been discussed here in more or less of a desultory manner, as to just what this resolution means; whether it contemplates a complete revision of the tariff or whether a revision to be confined according to the wording of the resolution. If it contemplates a revision of the tariff, meaning that rates may be reduced or rates may be increased, that is a different subject entirely. I would not be in favor, I will say to the Senator the author of the resolution, of undertaking a revision of the tariff at this time. I make that statement in order to answer an anticipated question as to whether, if the resolution were changed by incorporating merely the word "revision," I would support it. I could not support a proposal to-day to open up the question of the revision of the tariff, and I will state why in my own time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SACKETT in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. The resolution in its present form states—

> That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive and that the Senate favors immediate revision downward of such schedules.

I will ask the Senator from South Dakota, if I may, would he not be willing to insert the word "excessive" after the word "such," in the third line, so that there would be no ambiguity? The resolution then would read as follows:

> That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive schedules.

Mr. MCMASTER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the insertion of the word "excessive" after the word "such" in line 3. I think it would be superfluous, so far as that is concerned, because the language itself is perfectly plain that it means a revision downward of those schedules which are excessive.

Mr. COPELAND. However, to make it clear so that there could be no doubt, would the Senator we willing to insert that word?

Mr. McMASTER. Yes, Mr. President; I would be perfectly willing, and I ask that that word be incorporated in the resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. Now, may I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I believe that the position of the Senator from Ohio is exactly the same as my own position. I would not be in favor of a universal or horizontal reduction of the tariff schedules, but if there are excessive schedules they should be reduced. I assume that the Senator from Ohio will concede, in the first place, that if there are such excessive schedules they should be reduced. Am I right?

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator from Utah will wait just a moment until the Senator from Ohio answers the question.

Mr. FESS. Did the Senator from New York ask the Senator from Ohio that question?

Mr. COPELAND. I am speaking to the Senator from Ohio. If there are schedules which are excessive, does the Senator believe that they should be lowered?

Mr. FESS. If there are duties which are excessive, meaning by that unnecessary, of course I would be in favor, when the time comes to revise the tariff, of reducing them.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator mean by that that he would not be willing to do it now if it were demonstrated that they are excessive?

Mr. FESS. O Mr. President, the Senator from New York knows very well that talking about revision of the tariff under this resolution at this time is only a gesture. It is mere political "bunk," as the Senator knows, in an effort to provide campaign material for the approaching election. The Senator can not look me in the eye and suggest that he sincerely believes that there will be any effort during the present session of Congress to undertake a revision of the tariff schedules.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, Mr. President, if this is political "bunk," it is Republican political "bunk," because the pending resolution was presented by a Senator on his own side of the aisle. But I do not believe it is political "bunk"; I think it is a perfectly proper thing, if I may say so.

Mr. FESS. Yes; the Senator believes that the Senate of the United States is not performing a proper function when it is consuming the time in discussing a matter which the House probably will not consider at all and upon which it has to act first.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator is asking me a question, I will say that the Senate is performing a proper function when it attempts in any proper way to correct conditions which have interfered with the prosperity of agriculture. Of course, the Senate can not initiate tariff legislation, but certainly, if there are tariff schedules which are excessive and if it can be shown that those tariff schedules are excessive and that by reason of the fact that they are excessive agriculture is imperiled, it would seem to me that every Senator should do everything he could to make possible the revision of those schedules in order that agriculture may be relieved and put on a parity with the other industries of the country.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has a perfect right to express his views upon both sides of the question. He is on both sides. He is for protection. That will please the protectionists. He is against protection. That will please the free traders. He has a perfect right to his opinion. This is merely a gesture. There is not a person in this Chamber who believes for a second that this body has any right to deal with this subject from the beginning until a tariff bill comes over from the House. If we have nothing to do here except to talk, it is all right to proceed on that basis; but if we are to proceed regularly on tariff revision it must be admitted by every Senator that there is a way to do it, and that is the constitutional way. When it comes to that I will join in the consideration of the bill in the regular order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield further?

Mr. FESS. The Senator from New York can make his speech in his own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Ohio, having criticized the Senator from New York, would not wish to pass the matter over without permitting the Senator from New York to reply.

Mr. FESS. The Senator may reply in his own time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, very well, if the Senator declines to permit a reply.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I was somewhat surprised that this resolution should come from an agricultural State, from a representative of a great section of the country almost entirely confined to the production of agriculture. I was surprised first because it has been my understanding that agriculture is chiefly concerned not in the lowering of rates but in the increase of rates.

As has been stated here before, the very first act that was passed after the close of the war was the emergency tariff act. That was confined entirely to agricultural products. It enumerated 28 of them. There is not a single item in that bill that is not agricultural; and I state here, without fear of contradiction by anyone who knows the facts, that never in the history of this country had a tariff bill been brought before either body and seriously considered that was limited to only one industry until the introduction and consideration of that bill; and it was because the liquidation of the farm situation was most hurtful, and in order to meet it as soon as possible the whole legislation was limited to agriculture.

Then in September of the following year—this agricultural bill having passed in May, 1921—in September, 1922, it was very largely included in the regular, permanent tariff legislation.

I have consulted with the Tariff Commission upon the applications for changes in the tariff. I am amazed at the number of applications that have been made for an increase of the tariff. There have been very few applications for a decrease of the tariff. I have also noted that 40 per cent of the applications for increase are confined to agriculture, and here rises in this Chamber a representative of the great agricultural section and offers a resolution requiring the immediate consideration of the tariff for the purpose of lowering the tariff schedules when the very first and most important schedule would cover the subject of agriculture!

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. That is the reason why I was surprised to have this resolution come before us. Later on, after hearing the discussion of the author of the resolution and others who think with him, I came to the conclusion that they themselves are not seriously expecting that that will be done, but are offering the resolution simply as a suggestion that unless certain legislation is carried through looking to the improvement, in their view of the matter of agricultural conditions, there will be an onslaught on the whole industrial and agricultural fabric of the country. I do not think that is wise at all from any point of view.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. Now I yield to the author of the resolution.

Mr. McMASTER. I appreciate very much the fact that the distinguished Senator from Ohio desires to assume responsibility for the reasons and the purposes of the introduction of this resolution. I am very glad to have him attempt to interpret those motives and those reasons, but I want to say to him that he is far off in his interpretation.

In the first place, there are many agricultural products upon which there are no duties, and no one is asking for a reduction of duties upon products of that kind. For example, there are hides, which are upon the free list. Furthermore, the language of this resolution——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I want to pay some attention to the Senator's reference to hides. I want to give him some information on it.

Mr. McMASTER. May I continue my question?

Mr. FESS. No; wait until I finish this and then I will let the Senator continue his question.

Many times the Senator and others have mentioned the fact that hides are on the free list as a complaint against tariff legislation. I was in the other body at the time both the emergency tariff legislation and the permanent tariff legislation took place. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that in the Committee of the Whole we placed hides on the dutiable list, whereupon there was offered a very small compensatory duty upon shoes. Shoes are on the free list and have been for a considerable period of time, and that was one reason for putting hides on the free list—the raw material with the finished product.

The theory of protection is to protect to the extent of the difference in the cost of production. Naturally that must go to labor. Therefore when we come to consider protection, certainly where labor is employed, it will be important; and we considered that if hides were on the free list, in all probability shoes, also on the free list, might be produced in competition with foreign countries. With the raw material on the free list, the finished product was put on the free list.

When an amendment was offered putting hides on the dutiable list, I voted for it in the Committee of the Whole, and then voted for a small compensatory duty on shoes. When we got out of the Committee of the Whole, however, and the matter was submitted to the vote of the House to adopt what had been done in the Committee of the Whole, the House took off the compensatory duty on shoes. Then the House reversed the action of the committee and hides remained on the free list. Later, as the Senator will recall, there was an effort to put hides on the dutiable list in this body. I want the Senator simply to know that I favored putting hides on the dutiable list and voted for it.

Mr. McMASTER. The Senator favors this resolution, then?

Mr. FESS. This resolution proposes to reduce and lower the tariff.

Mr. McMASTER. Oh, yes; it proposes to bring about a closer parity between agriculture and industry. Now, just a moment further.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator says——

Mr. McMASTER. May I continue?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio further yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FESS. Not just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator says his resolution proposes to bring about a parity between agriculture and industry, and at the same time he argues that the tariff has nothing to do with it. I do not understand that sort of argument.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield now?

Mr. FESS. I yield now.

Mr. McMASTER. It was very gratifying to me to hear the Senator from Ohio explain why hides were put upon the free list; that is to say, if hides were put upon the free list, then shoes should be put upon the free list.

Evidence has been compiled and data have been placed before the Finance Committee showing that if there were a 15 per cent ad valorem duty on hides it would not affect the price of shoes more than from 2½ to 4 cents a pair; so it was a perfectly square deal, then, to ask the farmers to furnish shoes for all of the population of America when that price was affected only by from 2 to 4 cents and permit their product to go on the free list! As a matter of fact a duty of 15 or 20 per cent upon hides has no significant part in the cost of the manufacture of shoes; and it does not make any difference to me what were the circumstances surrounding the action when hides were put upon the free list. They are upon the free list, and it does not make any difference who was responsible for it; it is time that they went back upon the dutiable list.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the observation made by the Senator was not the basis upon which the action was taken. There are 6,600,000 farmers. All of these farmers do not produce hides. Only a portion of them produce hides, but there are 115,000,000 people who wear shoes; and the question was whether shoes should go on the free list, because we had reached a point where, in the efficiency of our machinery and labor, we could compete with foreign manufacturers. It was therefore decided that since everybody wears shoes they should go on the free list, since protection was no longer needed. Then the question was whether the raw material that goes into the manufacture of shoes should go on the free list. A majority in both branches took that view.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, does the Senator from Ohio feel that that was an adequate excuse?

Mr. FESS. I do not. That is the reason why I did not vote for it.

Mr. McMASTER. The Senator and I agree, then, on this proposition.

Mr. FESS. On that particular one.

Mr. McMASTER. That alone would justify this resolution.

Mr. FESS. Oh, no; I differ from the Senator about that alone, or any other consideration, justifying this resolution in this body.

Mr. President, next to the production of the farmer's product, his chief concern is where to sell that which he does not use on his farm. I do not speak of it as surplus, because that term applies to what we export to a foreign country. I speak of the difference between what the farmer produces on his farm and what he consumes on his farm.

Every farmer consumes a small percentage of what he produces. He must look to some one who is not a farmer to consume what he himself does not consume. He can not sell to farmers, for they are producing the same thing he is producing. He must sell to people who are consumers, who are not engaged in the production of the same thing that he is producing. Therefore the chief concern of the producer on the farm is to find a place where people consume who are not farmers. There arises the supreme necessity of building up, on the part of the farmer, industry that is not engaged in farming. That is his only hope. Otherwise all that he could do would be to produce that which he lives upon, and he would have nowhere to sell the product which he wants to convert into money to pay taxes, insurance, interest, and the current expenses of the farm.

It seems to me that every agriculturist should have supreme in his mind a near-home market, as near as he could get it, and a market with great buying power. Otherwise, he has not any profit in what he does.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McMASTER. I notice that the Senator, as all other Senators who oppose this resolution do, continually brings up the argument that the purport of this resolution is to destroy industry, to destroy the home market for agricultural products. All that this resolution purports to do, so far as industrial schedules are concerned, is to reduce excessive rates, and certainly no Member of the Senate can argue against reducing an excessive rate. If excessive rates are reduced, that protects every legitimate industry in America; it protects legitimate profits of every legitimate industry. That sort of an argument is entirely beside the question and outside of the purport of this resolution.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, that identical argument has been used by the opponents of protection ever since the Government has been organized. You never heard a free trader who would admit that he was willing to break down American industry. Never in my life have I heard one admit that. They always argue that the reduction of the tariff will not do it. We have the history of every Democratic revision of the tariff, that was to do away with the protective tariff, and that statement, every item of it, has been contradicted by the history of our country.

I have been through the Northwest, through the great State which the distinguished author of this resolution represents. I have been through the great State north of it, and through that empire State of Montana, a great producer of wheat and other agricultural articles, and when I talked to the citizens of North Dakota and of South Dakota I found they were not slow to say to me, "The thing we need is people. What we want are more people to consume what we produce, and if physically we could plant near the Dakotas a great center of population, not engaged in agriculture but in industry outside of agriculture, we would boost tremendously the prices of the products produced by the farmer of North Dakota."

But the farmer is compelled to ship his products from North and South Dakota to the Twin Cities in the one case and to the eastern part of the United States, which is the chief consumer, in the other case, and in both cases he suffers heavy transportation costs. Now my friend, whether he means it or not, is proposing to extend the market 3,000 miles across the sea instead of bringing it closer to the place where the farmer is producing his article.

I know the trite argument of the promoters of free trade. They say, "No; it will not destroy the home market; it will have very little effect upon the home market." I say to the distinguished author of this resolution that if you put the American producer of manufactured goods in competition with the cheap labor of Europe by reducing or destroying the tariff, you immediately will put out of employment at least 5,000,000 men in America, as has been done in other days, and when you drop 5,000,000 men from the pay roll you lose $6,000,000,000 of consumptive power, and if you take out of the buying power of America $6,000,000,000, what becomes of the home market for the products the farmers raise in South Dakota and elsewhere?

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McMASTER. I am very much impressed by the able statements of the Senator from Ohio, but I remember that when I was in college I read that same kind of speech; but that was in the days when the two principles of free trade and protection were coming in competition with each other. That was back in the McKinley campaign. I remember reading that speech and those arguments, and it was a splendid speech along those lines; but it has not a thing to do with the reduction of excess schedules in the present tariff law.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator is taking refuge under the word "excess," which has been placed in the resolution as a relief to him from the embarrassment of the original resolution. Nevertheless, the proposal is to tear down what we call the integrity of American business, built upon a system of protective tariff. "Unless," they say, "you are going to join with us on some method of bringing the two things together, we will pull the whole house down." That we are told over and over on this side of the aisle. That is the thing that you can not get away from, that if certain things are not going to be done, we are going to pull this fabric down over our heads, and then they say, "Let everybody suffer alike." What does that mean, to let everybody suffer alike? It means that what they appear to feel is a discrimination in tariff legislation in favor of industry as against the farmer, a discrimination intended in the law, that may be easily remedied by amending the law. That position is without foundation. We give to agriculture not only the same protection industry receives, but we give it adequate increased protection over industry.

Every person who is informed knows that the last tariff law, that of 1922, provides a lower percentage of protection on industry than on agriculture; the increased percentage of protection is in favor of agriculture instead of industry. In the face of these facts, we are told over and over that the tariff legislation is against the farmer, on behalf of industry, as if we are choosing industry as a favorite as against one of the greatest industries we have in the country, namely, agriculture.

That is an unfair statement. If the Senator would say that the farmer has not the facility to employ the tariff protection as easily as the manufacturer has, there might be some basis for the statement, but when we are charged in legislation that we favor industry, discriminating against agriculture, the facts belie that statement, for, on the other hand, the favor has been given to agriculture.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question there?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator has, I think inadvertently, because I assume he wants to be entirely fair in his argument, assumed that there is a school in the Senate that is advocating free trade. I think the able Senator who is the author of the resolution before us negatives that very completely, and I ask the Senator if he does not remember that the Walker tariff law, which really was an expression of the economic and tariff philosophy of the Democratic Party, declared in 1846 that the tariff must be levied without discrimination against any section, or against any class, or against any product? The Senator recalls that Mr. Blaine pronounced that to be the greatest tariff act that was ever written, and the Senator must know that there is no one advocating free trade. I do not see why he constantly assumes that there is, because I assume that the Senator, as an educated man, must know that his arguments, in order to carry weight, must be founded and postulated upon facts, and not upon theories which have no foundation in fact.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, let me edify the Senator from Utah by a citation of some history on the tariff question. I had not intended to do that, but he invites it, and he needs it, judging from the statement he has just made.

The first act under the administration of Washington was a protective tariff act, in order to encourage manufactories, to built up a varied industry in this country, and to supply as far as possible a market for the farmer. The tariff became a subject of discussion at once. It was indorsed by Thomas Jefferson. It was indorsed by James Madison.

At the close of the War of 1812 there seemed to be a fear that cotton, which was then coming to be a great article of export, would be militated against if the protective system continued. Consequently there was an effort to repeal the system. Finally a compromise was reached in 1833, handled largely by Henry Clay. The author was quoted yesterday by the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

In 1846 Robert J. Walker was the author of the famous Walker tariff law of that year, and it is the verdict of history that as soon as it took effect there was a general paralysis of the business of the country that was relieved only by two items. The first was the wide famine in China, which called for much of what we produced. The second was the Crimean War of 1853, which involved the three great empires of Europe in war. Those two items supplied a market not unlike the market of Europe in 1914, and America could sell at a good price everything she could produce. That was the relief from the paralyzing, death-dealing business policy of the Robert J. Walker tariff of 1846.

We have had tariff discussions from that on down to the present time. The famous tariff act, known as the Mills bill, was offered. Then came the tariff of 1893, under the leadership of Grover Cleveland. The inevitable results that followed that tariff act were paralysis of business, capital in hiding, labor out of employment, and general destruction of industry in the land, with a nation-wide suffering of all classes.

Then in 1896, with the country in an indescribable situation industrially, the Great Commoner came out of the West with the assurance that all our trouble was due to our money, that what we needed was silver coined at the ratio of 16 to 1, and he swept the country on the basis that the tariff had nothing to do with the situation, but that it was the money power. We went through that campaign of 1896.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to observe that Mr. Bryan swept the country in July and August, but McKinley swept the country in November.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is right. There is not a doubt in the world that if the election had been held in August, McKinley would not have been elected, but under a campaign of education, in which people began to think as to what would be the effect of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, that position was rejected, and immediately after the inauguration of McKinley in 1897 we had the Dingley bill of that year. Then, again, capital invested in industry, labor was employed at a steady and fairly high wage, and we secured relief from the death-dealing, business-destroying Democratic legislation of the former year.

We have the same thing coming up periodically. Whenever there is a depression in any section somebody comes along and suggests some artificial cure. We had it in the greenback movement of 1878. We had it again in the Populistic movement of 1890. We had it again in the free-silver movement in 1896. We had it last year from the same section upon the same basis, growing out of the same situation exactly—always some artificial method by the Government to cure economic ills. That is the one danger that I see in legislation on a fundamental subject such as the farm situation.

I am not going to quibble whether it is free trade or protection. I recognize that at one time it was tariff for revenue only. That was the Democratic theory. Then Samuel J. Randall came along, a protectionist, and he said "tariff for revenue only with incidental protection." Then we find Underwood coming along and it was "tariff competitive in its character," called "competitive tariff." What is the name they are now giving it? First, tariff for revenue; second, tariff with incidental protection; third, competitive tariff. What will be the name now to be applied? It is all an effort to get away from the name—free trade. To-day we find them defending the protective idea that covers some specific articles of their own localities, but rejecting other articles not in their territory.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator's account of the great calamities which have followed tariff legislation is to some degree accurate. I want to call his attention to the fact that since the enactment of the last perfect tariff bill we have now more than a million farmers who have lost their homes in the United States, and the calamity is greater than all the calamities added together which he has described.

Mr. FESS. Back in 1896 that kind of talk was stigmatized as calamity howling. All over the country we had just that sort of talk. We have not heard much of it until recently it broke out in the Senate. It was voluble yesterday. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] undertook to show that in the missions in this city there are being cared for people who have no place to sleep and no food to eat, and gave it as evidence that the country is in a bad state, a bad condition. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] rose and employed as an argument to show that labor is suffering that there are a million people out of employment, and so on. Constantly the discriminations were pointed out between the well-to-do and the poor. They are offered as the results of legislation which they propose to cure here.

Let me say to my friend from Iowa that we have good authority that the poor is with us all the time. There is not a town in the broad scope of America that does not have the indigent. There is not a county in the United States that does not have an institution to take care of the infirm. There is not a city of any consequence which in every year since the war has not, as an expression of gratitude toward or sympathy for the unfortunates, gone into what we call the community chest and made contributions which in cities like Cleveland will run up to the million mark, and in cities like my own city of Springfield, of 60,000 people, runs up to nearly hundreds of thousands, and so on. Does that mean that the Nation has been negligent and has produced by negligence the indigency which shows in every community and every city and every town?

I have visited the missions here. I want to say nothing unkind—God forbid it—and I do not mean to do it. But we can not find a town anywhere that we will not find people who suffer a lack of this world's goods because of a condition for which we are not responsible and which no legislation can cure.

We can relieve it by our voluntary efforts that show a great charitable spirit in America. These people are not out of work because they can not get the work so much as because they are not able to work or, I might say, in the cases of some of them, not willing to work. I make the statement here that there never has been a time in the history of the world, especially the last year, when there was so universal employment at such a high scale of wage, at such permanent and steady work, with so much of this world's goods generally distributed as in America at this time.

There has been a slowing down since last year. I suppose when Ford's great industry waited production in order to manufacture the new tools necessary for the new plans, with many hundreds and thousands out of employment, we are not responsible for it. I suppose when a great manufacturer sees fit to exchange the old machinery for new and must close down for a certain period in order to do it, that that unemployment is not to be laid to tariff legislation, but it is incident to the growth of the Nation's industry.

Mr. President, the arguments that we have poor in the city of Washington are not conclusive. The arguments that in my own town we have people who need help are not conclusive.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] took occasion to make an effort to prove that labor is not so well employed, and used figures which I tried to correct. The truth about the matter is that there has been a gradual decline in prices, both wholesale and retail, of the articles of industry. If that decline had been a precipitate falling off of prices, it would have been dangerous, but the decline was not precipitate. The decline has been steady, and it is in direct response to efficiency in production. We produced by the same number of people more than we produced before, and we have a greater bulk at the same cost, and that leads to a reduction of the price when it goes on the market.

It is the soundest economy that you or I can conceive to-day that when we reduce the current price in accordance with efficient service we make the cost to the consumer less and we increase the power of the consumer to buy and still lift the standard of living. So that when we speak about the lowering of the prices of these articles it does not mean that business is becoming less active. The truth about the matter is that 10 per cent less producers in 1927 produced 25 per cent more of the products. That is the soundest economy that can be offered, and instead of being looked upon as a suggestion of danger it ought to be looked upon as one of the most promising symptoms of our present day.

That leads me, Mr. President, to say another thing. We have been led by these utterances from the author of the pending resolution and others who think as he does to understand that the tariff is largely the cause of the disparity between agricultural and nonagricultural products, and it is proposed in this way to relieve that disparity. I have stated before that that is not the opinion, so far as I can get it, of agricultural thinkers who meet in Washington representing the various commissions which have been here studying the question.

On the other hand, here is a statement that can not be contradicted: Continuously there has been a gradual decrease of the purchasing dollar of nonagriculturalists up to the present day, and continuously, with a tremendous spurt last year, there has been an increase of the producing dollar of the agriculturalists. In other words, the disparity which in 1919 may have been 51 points came down last year to only about 11 points and pretty nearly disappeared by the end of the year 1927. If the lack of parity, if the disparity, is due to tariff legislation, then why, under a higher protection than before, have we a constantly decreasing price of the nonagricultural products and a constantly increasing price of the agricultural products to-day that are nearly on a parity?

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McMASTER. With reference to the tariff proposition not having any relation to the present condition of agriculture, it certainly must be an economic fact that if in the United States we have four or five separate and distinct classes, if four of those classes are distinctly under a protective system and are benefited by it, and for some reason or some condition the fifth class produces under high costs, but can not obtain the protection of that system, and must sell in cheap European markets, most assuredly the tariff system has something to do with the condition of agriculture.

Mr. FESS. That is just what I was talking about.

Mr. McMASTER. And that is just what I was talking about.

Mr. FESS. Speaking about producing under higher costs leads to the question evidently that the Senator meant that the disparity is due to tariff legislation, and I state that the facts disprove that most conclusively. A disparity of 51 points at a certain date under the old law has come to be negligible in 1927.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield further?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McMASTER. Under the tariff system, whether the tariff has been up or down has made some difference, that is true; but for the last 16 years, with the exception of three occasions, the farmer's dollar has been below par; and it was not during the period of high protection since 1922 that the farmer's dollar reached parity, for during the last six years, under this higher protection, the farmer's dollar has ranged all the way from 69 cents to 89 cents in value.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I hold in my hand charts which are graphically made to illustrate the curves of the indexes of prices. The chart covering relative purchasing power of a dollar in exchange for commodities shows that from January, 1910, to date agricultural commodities ranged slightly above nonagricultural products in the purchasing power of their respective dollars. That is a chart which I wish my friend to examine, if he does not care to take my word for it.

Chart No. 30 gives the index numbers of farm prices and wholesale prices of nonagricultural products. It shows that prices of agricultural products are slightly lower than those of nonagricultural products, but they are running close together.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me to proceed, in just a moment I will yield to him.

It is true, and nobody cares to dispute it, that agricultural products have suffered in relative price in the past; there is no doubt about that; and I have thought, in view of that fact, that the Government if it could find a sound method of relief ought to apply that relief, and, Mr. President, I want now to refer to that situation and to state why I favor affording relief that is economically legitimate.

Mr. BROOKHART rose.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator from Iowa wish to interrupt me?

Mr. BROOKHART. In reference to the charts to which the Senator has referred I wish to call attention to a matter.

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. In the first place, those charts deal with wholesale prices. But the farmer never sells wholesale or buys wholesale, either. He has to operate on a retail basis, and that makes quite a difference.

Mr. FESS. It ought to make a difference the other way, but I am sorry to say that it does not.

Mr. BROOKHART. No; it certainly does not.

Mr. FESS. On the question of giving some relief to the farmers, I desire to say that some persons hold that the problem will, under economic laws, solve itself; that Congress ought not to interfere at all; that if we let it alone it will cure itself. I have not viewed the situation in that way, and I want to state why more than that is involved.

The farmer has to pay for the things he buys a price that is largely due to management, while he gets a price for the things he sells that is subject to the law of supply and demand without being much affected or influenced by management. There is a stabilization of the prices of nonagricultural products due to the regulation of production. Such regulation has been operating for the last 10 years through the commodity committees of the leading units engaged in production with their weekly meetings or at least monthly meetings. They take an inventory; they find whether they are producing for consumption or for storage. When they find they are producing for storage, they know that they are outrunning consumption and they are going to pile up overproduction that will ultimately cause the whole product to sell for less than a smaller output would sell for.

What a fine example is afforded by cotton. When we produced 14,000,000 bales of cotton—just enough to supply the world's market—we got a certain price, but when we produced 18,000,000 bales of cotton—4,000,000 bales more than were necessary to supply the demand of the world—we got less for those 18,000,000 bales than for the 14,00,000 bales, due to the break of the price, resulting from overproduction. That makes it necessary to regulate production if possible, and nonagricultural industry largely does regulate production. That means prices are stabilized by limiting production within the bounds of consumption. Then, too, prices are stabilized at a high level because labor, which is the chief element entering into the cost of manufactured articles, is maintained at a high level by effective organization; and not only by effective organization but by the willing support to-day of the employer, because to-day we regard it sound economically to pay a reasonably high scale of wages. No longer do we think that profit is measured only by the difference between what it costs to produce an article and the price for which it is sold, and therefore make that margin as wide as possible in order to make the profit large. That would mean few sales. We have substituted for that theory narrow margins, quick sales, and many sales; and we have entered the new economy of making small profits on individual sales, but put emphasis on a large number of sales, that large number being measured by the power of consumption. The concern in America to-day is to increase the consumptive power which is the basis of profits; and for that reason it is a sound economic principle to pay a high scale of wages. So prices are stabilized by management and wages are stabilized at a high rate by organization.

I will say to my friend from Iowa that it is difficult for us to apply the same principle to the farmer; in other words, it is quite difficult to stabilize agricultural prices by a regulation of production and it is quite difficult to stabilize them at a high level, because it is difficult for the farmers to organize. For those two reasons, especially because the price of nonagricultural articles does reflect a certain management that is not wholly due to the law of supply and demand, I would be willing to employ any legitimate plan that is sound economically to assist the farmer in lifting his prices. I offered such a plan in the last Congress.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that, in my judgment, it is perfectly easy to stabilize prices to the farmers by proper financing and control of the surplus by the control of the domestic surplus. That is what every protected manufacturer who has an exportable surplus is doing. Such manufacturers are selling abroad at less than they get at home.

I wish to state further to the Senator in reference to the index figures which he has quoted from the charts read by him that those index figures are not fair to the agricultural industry at all, because when there is a high index figure there is a short crop, and, while we have been getting a greater total return in money for short crops for a whole generation than we have for long crops—the large crops—yet we can not get enough for either one to pay the expenses and taxes of the farmer. So the index figures which the Senator has quoted are very misleading when they are used to show agricultural prosperity. A high index figure right now is due to short agricultural production.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, to me one of the strongest arguments for the maintenance of a sound protective policy is the increasing high standards of living. There has been a suggestion by one or two Senators that it is a mistake to maintain that we are on a basis of high living standards. I have examined that question from the census reports, and I have in my hand here the figures which indicate an increasing elevation of the standard of living in America.

I have not the figures for 1927, but in 1919 the index figures for savings deposits in the banks and trust companies was 144, while in 1927 the figure was 211. That does not mean a comparison of amounts but it means a comparison per capita as affecting individuals. If it related merely to the amount, the elapse of time would account for the difference, but it does not mean that. Let me say that there are more deposits in the savings banks, representing small depositors, and largely the laboring men, by seven times over than the combined capital in the national banks, the State banks, and the trust companies of the United States. There is a suggestion of the situation of labor to-day. I will add also that there are three and a half times more home owners among the laboring class than there are of home owners big and little, rich and poor in the Kingdom of Great Britain, and I include only laboring men in America.

For members of building and loan associations, representing the builders of homes, the index figure in 1919 was 41, while in 1926 it was 85, or more than 100 per cent increase.

For sugar consumed during the year 1919, the index figure was 84, while in 1926 it was 117.

For meat consumed during the year 1919, the indicator stands at 138, while in 1926 it stood at 156.

For electrical household appliances manufactured during the year the indicator stood in 1919 at 37 and in 1926 at 55, or an increase of nearly 100 per cent.

In the case of washing machines for domestic use manufactured during the year, the index figure for 1919 stands at 39, and for 1926 it stands at 60; and so I might go on.

In the case of farms receiving electric service from central stations, in 1919 the indicator is 30; in 1926 it is 56, an increase of almost 100 per cent.

That indicates the increase of the standard of living from 1919 to 1926.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] yesterday spoke about wages. The way to find out what the average wage is would be to take the amount of money paid for labor and divide it by the number of laborers. I take those figures from the census report on manufactures. Dividing the total amount paid in wages by the number of wage earners as reported by the census of manufactures, the average annual wage for 1925 is found to be $1,280; and that does not include merely skilled labor. That includes all kinds of labor, both sexes, all ages, all degrees of skill. The average annual wage in this country in 1925 was $1,280. I am quite certain there is nothing like it in the history of the world. When a committee recently came over here from Europe to study labor conditions, they were amazed at the number of laborers who owned automobiles, and the number of homes that had in them modern conveniences.

Mr. President, what I am concerned about is whether we are going to yield here to a pressure that is placed upon us in the form of an alternative that "You must do what you regard as an unwise thing, or else we are going to pull down the entire fabric over our own heads." I desire, in the most earnest language I can employ, to say that the American protective tariff, designed to permit the investment of American capital in order to give employment to American labor at an American standard of wages and maintain American standards of living is the most supremely important issue that can come before the American people. If it becomes necessary for us to take this issue before the American people, there is no one fact that is more certain than that they believe in a protective tariff rather than a revenue tariff; and we shall welcome that sort of an issue if those who desire to break down this system are ready to make it.

I would suggest that this resolution be withdrawn. Let not the Senate play with a situation with which it has nothing to do, and become the subject of criticism everywhere where consistency between the two Houses is respected. Let the matter take the proper course of being introduced in the House; referred, if it is thought wise to consider it, to the committee, and then take whatever time is necessary to see whether we desire at this time to revise the tariff system.

My objection to the resolution is that every effort of this kind produces bad effects upon the American people. While I admit that as rapidly as duties become unnecessary—and that often is the case—they should be reduced, and, if we can get along without them altogether, they should be removed, I submit that this is not the time nor place to do it. In 1922, when we considered the bill that is now the law, our friends charged against it that it would destroy the revenue of the country. They wanted a tariff for revenue only, and they asserted that if we substituted a protective tariff we would destroy the revenue. It is well known that the last full year under the Underwood bill the revenue collected was $322,000,000. This year, under the present law, the revenue is $605,000,000. That is an increase of pretty nearly 100 per cent in the customs duties. That answers for all time the charge that protective legislation destroys the revenue.

Then we were told that this legislation would destroy our foreign commerce. It is well understood that our foreign commerce, both exports and imports, has continually increased under the present law. In the last few months there has been a little lowering of the exports of the country, but as a rule there has been a gradual increase.

So from the standpoint of revenue, from the standpoint of foreign trade, from the standpoint of employment of American labor, from the standpoint of investment of American capital, from the standpoint of general prosperity, I could not support a resolution like this even if it were pending in the House; much less when it comes up in the Senate, where it has no place.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a little while ago I attempted a colloquy with the Senator from Ohio, and he said, if I quote him correctly:

> The Senator from New York has a perfect right to express his views upon both sides of the question. He is on both sides. He is for protection. That will please the protectionists. He is against protection. That will please the free traders. He has a perfect right to his opinion. This is merely a gesture.

The Senator from Ohio would not permit me to reply in his time, and I am not sure that he will answer any questions that I ask him now; but I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if the visit of the President to the West last year was a gesture. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if the farm relief bill which he presented last year was a gesture.

The Senator says that the presentation of this matter is political bunk. That is a form of political slang which I suppose we can understand.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROOKHART. I call attention to the fact that it took the Senator from Ohio a little over an hour and a half to explain that bunk.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. He spent a lot of time this morning, and I remember when he was making this gesture last year it took him a long time to put over a speech as political bunk.

The Senator says he will not quibble, yet he says if there is an excessive tariff schedule it should be reduced. He does quibble, however, when he says that we must not do anything about the tariff for two or three years, or until some other more convenient season.

The Senator says I am on both sides of this question. I deny it. In my formal address the other day I stated distinctly that I could not vote for the resolution in the form in which it was then before the Senate. Since that time the Senator from South Dakota has revised the resolution. This morning, at my suggestion, he added one word which he says he thinks is not necessary; but the resolution as it is now presented reads as follows:

> Resolved, That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive, and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive schedules, establishing a closer parity between agriculture and industry, believing it will result to the general benefit of all.

I am glad to say that as modified I can vote for this resolution, and I want to say to the Senator from Ohio and to anybody who may be interested in this resolution that I am not on both sides of this question. There are excessive tariff schedules, and it is the duty of this Congress to find a way to reduce those tariff schedules.

Yesterday—I was not in the Chamber at the time—the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] became excited over this subject. I want to quote exactly what he said about the Senator from New York. He said the Senator from New York did not know anything about how tariff schedules were written.

I admit that I have not had as much to do with the writing of tariff schedules as the Senator from Connecticut. I regard the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] as great experts on writing high tariffs, and I plead guilty at once to the statement that I do not know as much about the tariff as these gentlemen do. But the particular thing that the Senator from Connecticut was disturbed about was that in my talk the day before I overstated the amount of added cost to the public involved in the aluminum schedule relating to household utensils. The Senator from Connecticut called attention to a little story I told about the aluminum pot my wife bought to make some preserves, and he said that any man who undertakes to discuss the tariff question in this Chamber ought to be sufficiently considerate of his own reputation to avoid a statement of the kind I made. I assume the Senator means that when I gave the figure of $2.28 in the case of this particular aluminum pot it was excessive to say that that is what the tariff added to the cost. In a statement earlier in the debate he said that it would be only about half that. He said that I was about 66⅔ per cent wrong.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not think the Senator ought to be concerned about it, however. Nobody took it seriously.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to ask the Senator this question: Does the tariff on aluminum utensils add anything to the price the American housewife must pay for them?

Mr. McLEAN. Perhaps I can answer the Senator in this way: The price of the article to which the Senator referred was in 1919, 1920, and 1921, so far as my investigation shows, higher than the present price.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not interested in that. I ask the Senator this question: Does the tariff law of 1922, fixing a tariff of 11 cents a pound plus 55 per cent ad valorem, add anything to the price the American housewife must pay?

Mr. McLEAN. Since the Senator practically admits that he was 66⅔ per cent wrong in his statement, I will try to answer him to the best of my ability.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator will be more than 66⅔ per cent right when he makes his answer.

Mr. McLEAN. I think I shall be about 100 per cent right, as far as my investigation goes. I endeavored to ascertain as near as I could the price of the article to which the Senator referred—that is, a similar article produced in a foreign country—and I will say to the Senator now that he ought to know, if he is going to discuss the tariff question, that ad valorem duties are not laid upon the American valuation, but upon the foreign valuation of the article.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator will remember that I said that while this utensil cost Mrs. Copeland $4.55, we would not make that the basis, but we would take $3.55. So that would represent the foreign value.

Mr. McLEAN. That saved the Senator from being 100 per cent wrong; it cut him down to 66⅔ per cent. As near as I could ascertain, the foreign value of a similar article would run from 80 cents to a dollar, although we can not estimate it exactly; can only approximate it. If the Senator will add 50 per cent of a dollar—I will give him the benefit of the largest price—to 33 cents, he will find what the tariff would be, provided a person bought a foreign article.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, when that article got to the American housewife, it would cost 55 per cent of the dollar——

Mr. McLEAN. If she purchased a foreign article. Does the Senator know whether it was made in this country or not?

Mr. COPELAND. It was made in this country.

Mr. McLEAN. Then that is an entirely different question. The Senator will probably find that aluminum ware to-day is cheaper than it was in 1919, 1920, and 1921, under the Underwood tariff, three years after the war closed.

Mr. COPELAND. Just one moment. The Senator is not interested in what the Underwood tariff was. I was attempting to point out to the Senate that the tariff act of 1922 does add materially to the cost of articles purchased in this country, made in this country.

Mr. McLEAN. I did not accuse the Senator of intentionally deceiving the American people, but I do say, and I want to repeat it now, that I have had experience enough in this body to know that again and again Senators will take the floor here and make statements, similar to those made by the Senator from New York, which indicate that they have absolutely no knowledge of the subject they are discussing; and while the Senator did not intend to deceive the American people, I want to say to him that a revision of the tariff is a serious matter, and when such statements are made as the Senator made two days ago, and go out to the American people, that the tax on the aluminum vessel he cited is $2.28, when in fact it is less than a dollar, I say that it is inexcusable on the part of the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, that is a very interesting statement and very illuminating and very cheering; but I am on my feet now to be informed by a man who is conceded to be a great tariff expert, and whether he concedes it to himself or not, he at least admits to the public that he knows more about it than I do, which would not in itself make him an expert. The Senator has already conceded that the tariff will add at least a dollar to the price of the utensil.

Mr. McLEAN. I have not conceded anything of the kind. I have said to the Senator that if the article purchased were made abroad about 90 cents would be added to the cost of the utensil.

Mr. COPELAND. By the tariff?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes. The Senator says himself that his wife purchased a domestic article.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator may speculate until sundown as to what the tariff tax was on that article, but it is my judgment, I will say to the Senator, that unless adequate rates were given to the production of aluminum articles in this country, in order that domestic competition may be maintained, his wife would pay not $4.50 but double that amount for the articles she uses. I base that statement upon testimony that we received by the cartload when we were revising the tariff in 1922.

Let me explain that to the Senator, if he will pardon me. The Senator knows that the minute these foreign producers get into this market they accomplish what we call "pocketing" the American producer. The New York importers are in sympathy with the foreign producers. They get these goods abroad, of course, just as cheap as they can. They bring them to this country. The price is so low that the American producer can not compete and he quits. The American people are then absolutely at the mercy of the foreign importer and we had instance after instance where those importers had received a thousand per cent more than the foreign articles cost them.

When the Senator asks me whether this article which his wife bought carries a tax or not, I say that he can speculate on that proposition, but I want to say to him that if it were not for the tariff, if we did not stimulate and protect domestic competition in that article his wife would probably pay double the price she did pay. That is the history of the matter.

Mr. COPELAND. The American housewife ought to be very much obliged to the Republican tariff makers for establishing a tariff schedule which protects them against high prices, which is the argument the Senator makes.

Mr. CARAWAY. And, if I understood the Senator, he said that some articles were a thousand per cent higher.

Mr. McLEAN. That is undoubtedly true. If the Senator heard the remarks of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] yesterday, he will realize that our foreign trade in competitive articles will grow less and less dependable as our competitors across the water avail themselves of our automatic machinery, and make everything that we make at a labor cost of from one-half to one-quarter of what the cost is in this country; and when they combine, as they probably will, and drive the American producer out of the market has the Senator any doubt that they will charge as high a price as they can get and that we shall be at the mercy of the foreign producer? We had that experience with sugar only a few years ago.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no doubt at all that the Senator is right, because they will profit by the experience of the combines in this country, which put the price up just as high as they could, and are continuing to do so; and the Aluminum Trust of America is one of the conspicuous examples.

Mr. McLEAN. The fact is that the Senator's statement is not true. The price of this very article, as far as my investigation goes, is lower than it was five or six years ago.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me ask the Senator this question: If there were not a high tariff or a tariff such as we have suggested in this paragraph, these utensils would come in from the other side, and the American housewife would buy them at a lower price, would she not?

Mr. McLEAN. I have tried to make it clear to the Senator that in all probability she would pay double the price she pays now. I do not want to repeat my statement. That is the experience we go through every time we cut the tariff—drive out the American producer and let in these foreign articles.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator should be intellectually honest. What is the use of our denying the fact that the tariff does add to the price the American consumer pays for the article? There are reasons why a tariff should be imposed in many instances, for the sake of protection to American labor. I agree to all that, and I believe, in principle, in the protective-tariff system, as the Senator knows. But the point I was trying to make the other day and am trying to make now is this, that we must admit that the tariff is violative of natural law. It prevents the free operation of the law of supply and demand, and necessarily out of it comes an increase in price. I was making this point not to make an attack upon the system but to justify the position taken by these gentlemen who believe in some form of farm relief, that if the great manufacturers of America are to have protection which they get through the tariff system, and if the labor unions are to do and continue what I think is a very wise thing, to deal collectively with the employers and fix the price of labor, we must face the fact that the farmer, who is left in the open field of competition, is not fairly dealt with.

Mr. McLEAN. That inspires me to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator think that reducing the tariff to a point below the difference in cost of production at home and abroad; that is, to an extent that will necessitate the cutting of wages in this country, would help the farmer?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I do not.

Mr. McLEAN. I am very glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. COPELAND. And I am consistent in that position, as the Senator must know.

Mr. McLEAN. I am delighted to hear the Senator say that; and, that being his position, it would seem to me that he would hesitate about voting for the pending resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment. I do not want to have the Senator get any false idea from what I have said. I believe that the tariff on aluminum utensils is excessive, and I believe that the tariff upon aluminum is excessive. If the Senator yesterday heard the speech made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] he, too, must be convinced; certainly he did not rise to his feet to question the conclusions of the Senator from Montana, though the Senator challenged the Senate to bring on any question or to raise any issue regarding the conclusions reached by him in his address.

Mr. SMOOT. What were his conclusions?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Montana said, as found on page 1375 of the RECORD:

> I wonder if there is any conception among the Members of the Senate as to just exactly what that increase in price of 3 cents per pound on aluminum meant to American consumers.

He was speaking about the ingots and pigs, and not of the utensils, which we were discussing a moment ago.

> Since that time the consumption of aluminum has increased very largely. Every manufacturer of household utensils, and particularly every manufacturer of automobile bodies, was called upon to pay 3 cents a pound more for his aluminum on account of this duty as here disclosed.
> I have caused a computation to be made—

> and I find that since that time that increase has cost the American people, assuming the increase to be 3 cents per pound, not less than $800,000, and the duty upon sheets and coils unquestionably was at least a million dollars. All this goes to the Aluminum Co. of America, the only producer of crude aluminum in this country. Every dollar of it goes to that company, a gift to the company.
> That company is also engaged, or at least one of its subsidiaries, the Aluminum Manufactures Co., in the production of household utensils manufactured from aluminum, upon which, as we were told by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER], there is a duty of 11 cents per pound and 55 per cent ad valorem.

The Senator from Montana said that with that duty, which the Senator from Connecticut and I have been discussing, of 11 cents per pound, plus 55 per cent ad valorem—

> I have no doubt at all that it realized from that source as much as it did from the other two sources combined. So that this has amounted to a gift to the Aluminum Co. of America, of which Andrew W. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, is the controlling figure, of not less than $3,000,000 to $5,000,000.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana made his statement. I do not know that his statement is incorrect. I have not read it. The Senator from Montana is a very able man; he is now known as the great American investigator; in fact, his friends have suggested that he might well be elected President of the United States upon the splendid record that he has made in this regard. I am somewhat surprised, however, that the Senator from Montana has not gone to the Tariff Commission with this problem. They have the power to recommend a reduction of 50 per cent, and he could no doubt get it through that source.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me inquire if there is not something pending before us in the way of an investigation, not made by the investigating Senator from Montana but by the Attorney General relative to the Aluminum Co. of America?

Mr. McLEAN. He could not reduce the tariff. The Tariff Commission, if they recommend a reduction to the President, might bring about a reduction of that tariff.

Mr. COPELAND. That is to be regretted.

Mr. McLEAN. It seems to me, if I were the Senator from Montana I would try that plan before I urged complete revision of the tariff.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Connecticut doubt that the imposition of this tariff has enriched the Aluminum Co. of America to a very considerable extent?

Mr. McLEAN. I do not know. They employ between 20,000 and 30,000 men and pay high wages. It is possible that they have made some money, and it is fortunate if they have. We have to raise between $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000 in taxes, and I think it is a good thing that somebody in this country is prosperous.

Mr. COPELAND. Was the Senator from Connecticut here yesterday when the Senator from Montana made his speech?

Mr. McLEAN. I was not.

Mr. COPELAND. I see the Senator from Utah is on his feet. Was he here yesterday?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I just told the Senator I was not here.

Mr. COPELAND. All right. I want to read into the RECORD what the Senator from Montana said:

> Mr. President, I challenge any Senator upon this floor to stand here and attempt to make a justification of these rates. They are nothing more than a pure gift to the Aluminum Co. of America of anywhere from three to five million dollars a year. Senators will bear in mind also that that company is the sole producer of aluminum in America—a perfectly iron-bound copper-riveted monopoly.

That is what he said yesterday.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator knows that aluminum is not a finished product. It is made from what we call bauxite, I believe.

Mr. COPELAND. I am aware of that.

Mr. McLEAN. My recollection is that several Senators on the other side of the Chamber voted for a tariff on bauxite. I think the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] did, if my memory serves me right.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say to the Senator from Connecticut that it does not make any difference to me how many Senators on this side of the aisle voted that way. I am trying to make clear to the country, if I can, that the protective tariff system, certainly the excessive schedules, has increased the prices of goods consumed by the people of America and that by reason of those increased prices they are contributing to the prosperity of the manufacturers of America. I have no fault to find with that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEIWER in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The interest that I have in imposing a tariff upon aluminum and aluminum ware is to keep the industry in the United States. I want to tell the Senator from New York that the Aluminum Co. of America owns, I suppose, 60 or 75 per cent of the raw material of the world.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not doubt it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the United States wants to drive that company out and let those 20,000 employees find some other work, employees who are paid wages as high as, if not higher than, wages in any other industry in the country, that company can establish their business in a foreign country where they get its bauxite, the raw material, and ship the finished material in here free. If the industry was destroyed in the United States and they had the complete market at their control, because they virtually control the raw product of the world, we then would find what the housewife in the United States would have to pay for aluminum ware, and besides that we would not get any revenue from that industry at all.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a question in that connection?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am told that the Aluminum Co. of America has one of the biggest plants in the world on the Saguenay River in Canada, and if this tariff duty were wholly taken off it would be able to supply the needs of the United States from that plant and import the aluminum in pig or in roll form into the United States free of duty.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, too, that I know it to be a fact that they have one of the greatest water powers in the world at that point, and so far as dollars and cents are concerned the Aluminum Co. of America could go to Canada now and establish their plant at that water power, right at the water's edge. They could establish their industry there and could make aluminum there cheaper than anywhere else in the world. They own properties all over the world, and raw materials are shipped in here.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, are the raw materials of aluminum shipped in here?

Mr. SMOOT. A great deal of it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, now, Mr. President!

Mr. SMOOT. I know a great deal of it is.

Mr. CARAWAY. Just a minute, if I may interrupt the Senator without getting all excited about it. More than 90 per cent of the aluminum used in this country is mined in my own State of Arkansas.

Mr. SMOOT. I know a great deal is mined in the Senator's State.

Mr. CARAWAY. Bauxite is the raw material.

Mr. SMOOT. They own mines, as I said, all over the world and they could get all the bauxite they want without using a single solitary ton of bauxite from the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why would it be cheaper to ship it to Canada than to manufacture it in this country?

Mr. SMOOT. The water rates do not amount to as much as the railroad rates.

Mr. CARAWAY. But it can not ship by water because it is mined inland.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does not the Senator know that the richest mines of bauxite in the world are in British and Dutch Guiana, right at the seacoast, and that the bauxite can be taken and is being taken from there right to the Saguenay plant without ever touching a railroad?

Mr. SMOOT. And unloaded right at the plant.

Mr. CARAWAY. Taken to the Great Lakes borders and unloaded?

Mr. SMOOT. No; unloaded on the Saguenay River in Canada.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Saguenay River flows into the St. Lawrence below Quebec.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have heard of it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is where they would establish the industry.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Utah contemplate that the lowering of the schedule on aluminum and household utensils made of aluminum, so that it could not be called an excessive schedule, would drive this great company out of America?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think so. I do not think it would as long as there was sufficient tariff to equalize the difference.

Mr. COPELAND. That is to say, the tariff could be lowered and the company would still continue to make some money?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say so, and I do not know. The evidence given before the committee was that this was the tariff rate that would hold the industry in the United States, and I know, as I stated, that if the tariff is reduced so that they could produce the goods plus the tariff more cheaply in Canada or at any other place that is where they would go.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to say to the Senator that, of course, I tremble to think what might happen to the housewives of the country and the farmers and the country itself if we did not maintain this excessive tariff on aluminum. I can see from what the Senator says that the foundations of the Republic would be undermined if we were to do it. However, I want to call his attention to a letter which I placed in the RECORD on January 11, at page 1316, from an independent manufacturer of aluminum in America. He said:

> I repeat again that the many independent foundries making parts of automobiles, washing machines, vacuum cleaners, and other household appliances; also the many makers of kitchen utensils would be distinctly benefited by a lower cost on this raw material.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; raw material.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; raw material.

Mr. COPELAND. That is all right; but the Senator was finding fault a moment ago with the statement made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], wherein he spoke of the advantage accruing to the Aluminum Co. of America by this increase of 3 cents per pound, which had amounted to not less than $1,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah did not find any fault. The Senator stated that with the situation existing in this country it would be very easy to drive this industry out of the United States. The way to do it is to reduce the tariff so low that it would be profitable for that industry to move to Canada and to make its product there.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; but the Senator at the same time——

Mr. SMOOT. As to the letter which was read here, the writer buys the raw material, but he does not say anything about the duty on the finished product. He wants free raw material and then he wants just as high protection as possible upon the manufactured goods. That is inconsistent.

Mr. COPELAND. And the Senator from Utah would be opposed to that?

Mr. SMOOT. I am opposed to any duty which is not required and in which there would not be some advantage to the United States. I am not opposed to taking care of the Senator's correspondent. I think he is taken care of, but he wants still more. One of the complaints which the Senator from Montana made yesterday was as to the manufactured product. The gentleman who wrote the letter is not trying to sell his product for less than the American Aluminum Co. sells its product.

Mr. COPELAND. No; he does not do it, because he gets the benefit of the tariff and he takes advantage of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; in other words, if he did not have a tariff he would not be in business, and he knows it just as well as does the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah is right in that sense, but the Senator from Utah has conceded—he did so a few moments ago—that the tariff on aluminum might be very materially reduced and still not drive the manufacturer out of business.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator from New York suggested that that was the case, and the Senator from Utah did not have an opportunity to answer the suggestion. I will answer it now by saying I do not know whether or not the reduction of this tariff at the present time and under present conditions would drive the industry out of the United States. I do, however, know that when the subject was under discussion that that was the representation made to the committee, and that the committee believed it, and so did Congress believe it.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Utah knows very well, however, if the Senator from Montana is correct in stating that the profits of the Aluminum Co. of America are $5,000,000, that lowering the tariff is not going to drive the Aluminum Co. of America from our country.

Mr. SMOOT. If that company could make twice that profit in a foreign country, that is just exactly what they would do. They would go right over into Canada and make the product there; and I know that they are prepared to do it, I will say to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I am ready to believe that the Aluminum Co. of America is prepared to do anything that will benefit the Aluminum Co. of America, but I have not found any evidence anywhere to show that they are seeking to benefit the housewives of America.

I think that out of this discussion has once more been developed the fact—I say "once more" because every time the tariff is discussed the same fact is developed—that the protective-tariff system does increase the price of goods which are consumed by the people of this country. Every time a farmer buys a utensil or an implement, outside of the large farming implements, so called, when he buys a knife or a saw or a chain or a pick axe or a crowbar or a nail or a hammer he is paying an increased price because of the protective-tariff system. If that be true, and if the farmer is contributing to the welfare of the industrial plants of this country, contributing to the welfare of the manufacturers, why does not the industrial world in its turn say to the oppressed farmer, the farmer who is not prosperous, "If there is anything we can do to help you to obtain your share in this protection, we are going to do it"? But that is not the attitude.

I think that on two occasions I was the only Senator east of Indiana to vote for the McNary-Haugen bill. I voted for it twice. On both occasions I said, "The bill is violative of economic law; it interferes with the free flow of goods, and, therefore, it does unquestionably interfere with the law of supply and demand; it is uneconomic; but so is the tariff system, so is the labor-union collective bargaining, and the fixing of wages, which I am glad is being done; so is the fixing of rates on the railroads, permitting railroads to make a certain profit." All those things, Mr. President, are violative of economic law.

As I view it, in this country we must choose between an attack upon the tariff system and its destruction, an attack upon the labor unions and the destruction of those organizations, an attack upon railroad rates and the structure of railroad rates and their destruction. We have to choose between giving protection to every class in this country or we will have to submit to the destruction of these things which every one of us will admit are for the good of the country.

There is not a Senator on the other side of the aisle who is more convinced of the wisdom, the importance, and the necessity of the protective-tariff system than am I.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the present tariff act the rates which were asked for by the farm organizations of this country were inserted.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, why does the Senator give us another bit of talk like that? If I were the Senator from Ohio, I would say that that was "political bunk."

Mr. SMOOT. It may be "political bunk," but the Senator is discussing the question of the tariff, as I understand him. Now he brings in the farmer, and from what he has said he seems to think the farmer has not been treated the same as have those who are engaged in other industries. I wish again to say to the Senator that the farmer received exactly what he asked for in the present tariff act.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator knows full well that the thing for which the farmer asked does not do him any good.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah does not know any such thing. I know that it does do him good; and I can tell the Senator without a moment's hesitation how it does him good.

Mr. COPELAND. I thought, perhaps, the Senator was going to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to take the Senator's time to do it, but I could start——

Mr. COPELAND. I have more than an hour before I will be compelled to leave the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. I could start with various agricultural commodities and go through them. Does the Senator think, for instance, that the tariff on wool has not done the farmer any good?

Mr. COPELAND. I think the tariff on wool has done him good.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think the tariff on sugar has not done him good?

Mr. COPELAND. I think it has done the Senator's State good and the few States which raise sugar beets.

Mr. SMOOT. The State of the Senator from Utah is not the only one that produces sugar beets by any manner of means.

Mr. COPELAND. The farmers have been benefited so far as that particular item is concerned; but, as I said the other day, we could afford to go into our pockets and pay a bounty to the beet-sugar growers of this country in order that the housewives might be saved $250,000,000 a year by reason of the increased prices which they are compelled to pay because of the tariff duties on sugar.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New York has never told the Senate how he would raise that $250,000,000 revenue for the Government or from what source he would have it come. It would have to be raised in some manner somewhere, because it goes to pay the expenses of the Government. I could go through the list of commodities which the farmer produces and show that the tariff duties have benefited the farmer. If there are any rates in the law which are not sufficient, so far as I am personally concerned, I will be very glad to see them increased.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, when wheat sells higher in Canada than it does in the United States, how does the tariff on wheat profit the farmer?

Mr. SMOOT. All I can say is that the reports of the Department of Commerce show that not to be the case.

Mr. CARAWAY. That it is not the case?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it is not the case when the prices of the same grades of wheat are compared.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator may laugh, but that is what the Department of Commerce states. I had the figures here the other day.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know the Senator did and everybody else had figures here to show the opposite.

Mr. SMOOT. No; everybody else did not have such figures.

Mr. CARAWAY. Just a moment. The Senator has gotten in the habit of disputing everybody's word, so that he does not wait to find out what they are going to deny, but just hollers out "no" almost every time a statement is made. If he would wait a little while, somebody might agree with him at some time. I do not think anybody will, but that might happen, although if it should the one agreeing would be wrong.

But I started to say that the market quotations were put in the RECORD by the Senator from Iowa where actual wheat was being sold, and they showed a discrimination in favor of Canada of nearly 20 cents a bushel. Of course, the Senator from Utah can say that is not so.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not said anything about that statement. The figures may have related to different grades of wheat. All I say is that the same grade of wheat is not selling for a higher price in Canada than it is in the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; I heard the Senator say that.

Mr. SMOOT. And I say that I can prove it by our Department of Commerce.

Mr. CARAWAY. One may prove anything by the Department of Commerce. If what the Senator from Utah has just said can be proven in that way, then, anything can be proved in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be proved, for it is an absolute fact.

Mr. CARAWAY. Can the Senator say that of his own knowledge?

Mr. SMOOT. From the way in which we obtain knowledge, I can say it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Knowledge is obtained, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is the way all knowledge is obtained.

Mr. CARAWAY. I can not receive a statement like that with any seriousness at all. Now, if the Senator from New York will pardon me for a moment.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] took us all to task yesterday for our utter lack of knowledge or accuracy, and then made this most wonderful statement. I desire while he is present to refer to it. He said:

> The American people are just absolutely at the mercy of the foreign importer, and we had instance after instance where these importers had received a thousand per cent more than the article cost them.

About the highest rate of duty at all, as I understand, is 100 per cent; and how could even the Senator from Connecticut explain in what manner a hundred per cent duty could keep out an article on which there was a thousand per cent profit? I ask the question in the interest of accuracy, because that statement comes from the side where accuracy has its habitat. Yet we are asked to take that kind of statement seriously.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, let me say——

Mr. McLEAN. I presume the Senator thinks I ought to have an opportunity to reply?

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course; but I heard the Senator take a week at it.

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator from Arkansas says that I took a week at it. This indicates that the distinguished Senator from Arkansas himself can make statements that are far from correct.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is as correct, however, as saying that an article on which there is a thousand per cent profit can be kept out by a hundred per cent duty. The Senator, of course, did not take a week; it merely sounded that long to those who were listening to him.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator from Connecticut said that it appeared to the committee when we were revising the tariff that in some instances the American producer had been "pocketed," as they call it; that is, importers had brought articles from abroad until they had driven the American producer out of market or had destroyed his market.

Mr. CARAWAY. But we could not protect the American producer against an article on which there was a thousand per cent profit by imposing a duty of 100 per cent, could we? What would be the use of putting a duty on such an article unless the duty were placed at a thousand per cent?

Mr. McLEAN. The rate fixed was of no use in some instances.

Mr. CARAWAY. What was the use of making a gesture and giving a man 100 per cent protection against an article sold at 1,000 per cent profit?

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator fails to understand the situation.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know I do not understand it, and I never will be able to understand it.

Mr. McLEAN. This situation arises: When the American producer of these articles is in what they call a "pocket," he has no market; would-be purchasers do not buy of him, but they buy of the importer, and when they buy of the importer and there is no domestic competition the retailer is then in a position to charge about anything he pleases. That appeared in evidence, and the evidence was not contradicted. The Senator will remember that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] mentioned item after item here of which the retail price was ten times the price which the importer paid for the foreign article. That is what I said.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator meant to imply, if he meant anything, that the tariff was the thing that was preventing the American manufacturer from running against a 1,000 per cent profit, and he made that statement when he was lecturing the Senator from New York and aspersing all of us on our side for inaccuracy; and it was such a striking example of accuracy that I merely wanted to call attention to it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I may resume—I thank both Senators for assisting in the debate—the Senator from Utah mentioned wheat.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not mention it.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator spoke about the tariff on wheat.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I replied to the question that wheat was less in this country than in Canada.

Mr. COPELAND. Anyhow, wheat has been mentioned, and that leads me to say a thing or two about it.

One reason why I am personally so interested in some form of relief for the farmer is because of the wheat situation. There is a lot of talk up in the Northwest about the St. Lawrence Canal, and how a canal from the Great Lakes to the sea somehow or other is going to help the wheat farmer of the West or Northwest. Of course, I am opposed to that canal. I believe that if we are to build such a canal we should build it across New York State to the headwaters of the Hudson River; and in attempting to develop the reasons for that conviction I made a study of the wheat situation.

I wonder how many of us have looked into that situation. Last year we exported about 100,000,000 bushels. Canada exported 250,000,000 bushels. Why is it that Canada can take care of its surplus wheat and we can not? It is that surplus that is giving the farmer the trouble.

The reason why the Canadian wheat goes to the Liverpool market is because it can go to the Liverpool market at a price far below the possibility of raising and selling American wheat. The absurdity of the St. Lawrence Canal project is shown by the fact that it would only facilitate the removal more cheaply of more Canadian wheat. You can take wheat in Canada from Saskatchewan and Alberta to the lake head at Port Arthur for 28 cents a bushel. To take wheat from Montana to Duluth at the lake head costs 44 cents a bushel. There is a difference of 16 cents a bushel in freight alone between American-raised wheat in the American Northwest and Canadian-raised wheat in the Canadian west.

We never can compete with that situation. We must face the fact that somehow or other we must either eat our own surplus or find some other way of disposing of it. That means this, as I see it: There must be found some way to equalize the American cost of producing wheat and marketing it or disposing of it and the price of the foreign article, just exactly as there is the necessity of equalizing the price between American production and foreign production. In other words, if the farmer is to have any degree of prosperity in the future he must have some form of farm protection.

The whole purpose of everything I have said to-day or any other day in connection with the pending resolution is to emphasize the fact that the protective-tariff system does increase the price to the American consumer and that the farmer is a large contributor to that increased price. The American farmer is affected by the labor-union situation, which I approve, as I have said repeatedly. If we are to permit the protective-tariff system to remain intact, and to permit labor to continue its collective bargaining, we must give equal protection to the farmer; and the logic is irresistible, so far as I can see.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator mentioned the relation of labor and the labor union to this matter. Apparently the Senator agrees with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that that increases the farmers' costs very greatly.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the total gross production of manufacturers in the United States is about $60,000,000,000, and of that labor gets only about $11,000,000,000; so the benefits to labor in this situation are not much greater than the benefits to the farmer.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. I thank the Senator for what he has said. We can not question at all the relationship of the labor union and the fixing of price for their work to costs on the farm.

I own and operate a farm about 25 miles from New York, and labor upon my farm is influenced very greatly by the price of labor in the city. I have to pay an increased price for labor upon my farm because of the high price of labor in the city. That is a matter of no particular concern to me because my kind of a farm would never make a living for anybody, anyhow; but when the farmer is dependent upon his crop, and particularly where he is a one-crop farmer, there must be found for him some permanent and sure means of relief. Therefore I would apply exactly the same method of protection to the solution of the farmer's problem that we applied to the solution of the manufacturer's problem, and the same measure of relief that the labor union got when it started to deal collectively.

That is where I stand. The Senator from Ohio is most unjust when he intimated that I was trying to carry water on both shoulders. I am not. I believe in a protective-tariff system, but if there is an excessive schedule I want it reduced. It is only right that it should be reduced. I do stand here to say, however—and if I were the only Senator in this body to say it I would still say—that the farmer is entitled to the same measure of relief that we have given through the protective-tariff system to the manufacturer. It is the duty of the Senate, as I see it, to endeavor to find some means of solving this great economic problem and giving relief to our basic industry.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] yesterday pointed out the fact that there has been a very large increase in the exportation of wheat to foreign ports from Canada. He indicated that if the present tendency continued, Canada would shortly obtain a large percentage of the wheat export business which the United States heretofore has enjoyed. The suggestion of the Senator from Idaho led me to consult some statistics, and I have been surprised at the information revealed. The extent of the decline in the exportation of wheat from the United States has been most marked. The increase in the exportation of wheat from Canada has been amazing.

Mr. President, I call the attention of Senators to these figures not only because they confirm the fears expressed by the Senator from Idaho but they also open up another subject for consideration.

The entire shipments of wheat from the port of Montreal in 1920 were 44,121,000 bushels. In 1921 the shipments were 50,112,000 bushels. In 1926 the shipments were 90,000,000 bushels—a gain of more than 100 per cent in six years.

Now, let us consider what were the exports of wheat from all the ports of the United States. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, there were exported 156,250,000 bushels of wheat, as compared with 293,268,000 bushels in 1921 and 208,321,000 bushels in 1922—a decline of almost 100 per cent in the exportation of wheat from the United States.

These figures show the inroads which Canada is making into the wheat-export business of the United States, and they also show what is of equally great importance—that the Canadian Government policy of supporting and maintaining a merchant marine of its own has been of tremendous assistance in increasing the export business of Montreal and other Canadian ports.

Canada has a merchant-marine policy. We have none. Canada has given preferential freight rates to farm products. We have not. Canada has, through its own transportation systems, what is called a national interest in developing export business. We have none.

These figures might well cause alarm to the wheat-growing sections of America. But I present them not so much to emphasize the need of attention to and study of the agricultural problem which has been called to our attention by the zealous Senators from the Western States as to refer to the importance and need now of an American merchant-marine policy—definite, unmistakable, and comprehensive.

To indicate to what an extent the nearest port in the United States to the Montreal port has lost business as a result of the advantages which the Montreal port enjoys by reason of favorable freight rates of the Government-owned railroads and because of the Government's keen, anxious, and willing support of shipping facilities, I ask you to study a comparison of the figures of grain exports from the port of Boston and of wheat exports from the port of Montreal.

The exports of grain from Boston to foreign ports in 10-year periods from 1906 were:

Year ending Dec. 31:	Bushels
1906	18,204,757

The exports of wheat from Boston in 1916 were 3,775,000 bushels and in 1926 were 225,000 bushels.

In Montreal the amount of wheat exported has increased in 10 years from approximately 14,298,000 in 1916 to 90,000,000 bushels in 1926. In five years the port of Montreal has increased its export of wheat 100 per cent, while its nearest American port has decreased its export of grain (including all wheat) from 33,000,000 bushels to 3,000,000 bushels.

The intention of Canada to further reduce traffic through our ports is well indicated by the recent request of the Canadian Railroad Commission that the rates from Buffalo to St. John and Halifax be made the same as the rate from Buffalo to New York, disregarding the fact that the haul from Buffalo to Halifax is twice as long as the haul from Buffalo to New York.

In 1923 the number of bushels of grain exported from the following ports were:

Montreal	120,013,038
New York	87,130,000
Baltimore	41,083,000
Philadelphia	32,107,000
Boston	9,387,662

The development of the port of Montreal and other Canadian ports reflects the policy of the Canadian Government. A continuation of this policy can only be counterbalanced by placing our ports in a favorable position with regard to rail and ocean port differentials for the sake of "national interest."

Mr. President, I call attention to these figures to ask the Senate to give some thought to the importance of a definite merchant-marine policy before the same story will be repeated in regard to the exports of other products than wheat.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment for a question?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the first address I made in the Senate was in behalf of a merchant marine. I believe in it with all my heart. I would like to see legislation to bring it about. I wanted to ask the Senator what form of merchant marine he would approve—a subsidy sufficient to equalize the difference in the expense of maintaining a merchant marine by American labor as against a foreign country, or some specific amount issued to any party or parties who may become interested in maintaining a line of ships between this country and other countries?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am pleased to answer the question of the Senator from Utah. Under present conditions, as the situation now exists in this country, I am in favor of a Government-owned and a Government-operated merchant marine. I see no other solution of the question. I have reached that conclusion somewhat reluctantly, for I want frankly to say that I would much prefer a privately owned American merchant marine than a Government-owned merchant marine. I am fully aware of the abuses, the difficulties, and the waste resulting from Government operation. But there is no other choice. I am opposed to subsidies of any kind or character. I do not believe the shipping interests of this country have any more right to a subsidy to maintain shipping upon the high seas than the railroads, or the manufacturing, and the agricultural interests have a right to a subsidy. I consider the giving of subsidies one of the most dangerous evils that can creep into any governmental system.

Mr. President, I would try to carry out the intent and purpose of the shipping laws that are now upon the statute books providing for an American merchant marine. I consider that the shipping act of 1920 now in operation provides the support for an adequate American merchant marine first and last. The intent of Congress was not to abandon the advantage that we had at the end of the war from having a merchant marine costing billions of dollars that brought the flag of the American Republic into every port in the world. When the act was passed, it was never intended, it was never expected, that we would recede from the progress we made during the years of the war. The fault is not with the absence of law, it is with the policy and manner in which the law has been administered.

To be sure, it was provided in that act that we should seek and keep before us the purpose to convert our Government-owned merchant marine into the hands of private individuals, when such interests could develop and maintain a merchant marine; but it was never intended to declare our triumphant and superb American merchant marine that we inherited from the war bankrupt. It was never intended that at the end of the World War after building up an American merchant marine it should be liquidated, should be destroyed, as it practically has been by the policy that has since been pursued. As I understand that policy, it has been to get these ships into the hands of private owners at any sacrifice, under any circumstances, to discourage Government operation, and to get the American Government out of maintaining an American merchant marine. The trouble we are now experiencing—and I am in hearty accord with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on this proposition—is due to the fact that the present law has not been given sympathetic execution by those in charge of the merchant marine policy of our country.

I think I have answered the Senator's question by stating that under present circumstances, with Government-owned ships in our possession, with the great need and importance of maintaining a merchant marine as an auxiliary to our Navy, I am in favor of a vigorous, positive, enthusiastic development of our merchant marine, and of abandoning the policy that has been pursued in recent years of destroying it, or taking the very lifeblood out of it by delaying, postponing, and discrediting the opportunity to give a real trial of Government operation.

Mr. President, as a matter of defense, regardless of our commercial necessities, I am heart and mind for a Government merchant marine—not one that would compete with the limited private American shipping interests now on the seas but as an auxiliary to them.

I arose, Mr. President, for the purpose of calling attention to the problem of the export of wheat, and to point out that it involves not only the great agricultural problem of the West, but it involves the question of whether Canadian ports and the Canadian merchant marine are eventually to transport all the wheat and much of the other export business of the country. Canada has already made tremendous advances, as I have pointed out. I do not hesitate to say that, linked with this agricultural question, is the importance of providing facilities for transporting at reasonable rates, speedily and regularly, to the ports of the world this most important export product of the American people.

I hope that attention will be given before many weeks have passed to the legislation pending here seeking to resuscitate, to put life, to put vitality into our merchant marine, and to establish a definite policy which will declare us either in the business or out of the business of shipping. So far as I am concerned, while 67 per cent of our commerce is carried in foreign bottoms, and until private interests are able to take care of much of this large percentage, opposed as I am to ship subsidies, I am for a Government-owned merchant marine. I urge the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to ask for prompt action on his bill which I understand seeks this end.

THE TARIFF AND AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have thus far taken no time upon the pending resolution, and now I shall ask the attention of the Senate for only a brief moment. If I thought that this body had any authority to act upon this question at this time I would still not be in favor of action, because I do not believe that at the present time it is wise or opportune to undertake the great subject of revision of the tariff. But I shall not go into that feature of it, because there is another reason which to me is controlling.

The Constitution of the United States is perfectly clear upon this proposition. The first paragraph of Article I, section 7, reads as follows:

> All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

I had the honor to serve for a brief period in the body at the other end of the Capitol. I am not unacquainted therefore, as other Senators are not unacquainted, with the attitude which that body takes upon revenue bills. They very jealously defend their rights under the Constitution. If I were a Member of the House, as I once was, I do not hesitate to say that if the Senate should adopt a perfectly inane and futile resolution of this kind and send it to the House of Representatives, I should hope that the House would not only not consider it, but would simply refuse to receive it. In my judgment, in undertaking to act upon this proposition we are absolutely beyond our authority and are doing something which, if we do it seriously, will raise in the minds of people who are thoughtful and who are acquainted with the Constitution a very grave question as to the sincerity and the information of the Senate.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. McMASTER. As I understand the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, no Member of the Senate or the Senate itself is to have an opinion upon any particular question until it is sanctioned by the House.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I said nothing of the kind and thought nothing of the kind. If the Senator got that impression, his facilities for obtaining impressions are bad. Of course, any individual Senator has a right to his opinion, but when it comes to the point of wasting a week or 10 days of the Senate's time in the discussion of and possibly final adoption of a resolution upon a matter which the Senator himself knows is absolutely beyond the scope of the authority of the Senate, as far as I am concerned I do not propose to participate in such action, and shall therefore vote against the resolution.

Mr. McMASTER. I would like to ask this question of the distinguished Senator from Ohio: If in his judgment he thought this resolution were perfectly proper and if in his judgment the Constitution permitted the United States Senate to initiate revenue legislation, would he vote for this resolution under those circumstances?

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator has so many "ifs" in his question that I do not know whether I followed it or not. But I say to him frankly that I am opposed to this resolution, even if the Senate has authority to adopt it. Is that what the Senator wants me to say?

Mr. McMASTER. Why?

Mr. WILLIS. Because I do not believe that the present time is an opportune one for going into a revision of the tariff, and I would not vote for the resolution if it were here in legal form. That answers the Senator's question. But that is not the reason upon which I proceed.

I shall vote against the Senator's resolution, much as I dislike to do so. I should like to vote for any resolution which he sponsors, but I can not bring myself to believe that I ought to vote for a resolution which puts the Senate in a perfectly ridiculous and senseless attitude, and I am not going to do it.

Mr. McMASTER. In other words——

Mr. WILLIS. I think I have stated it very well without the Senator putting it in other words. I think I have made myself understood, so I hope the Senator will not endeavor to put it in other words.

Mr. McMASTER. I would not want to ask any embarrassing questions.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Ohio is perfectly willing to hear any question his friend wants to ask, but he is not willing to have his attitude stated in other words. I will do my own stating, and I have stated that I think the adoption of such a resolution is absolutely beyond the power of the Senate and that therefore I shall not vote to have the Senate do a futile thing and adopt a resolution which, if passed anywhere, must originate in the House in accordance with the provision of the Constitution I have just quoted.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, I would like to fortify the opinion which has just been given by the distinguished Senator from Ohio as to the absolute futility of the pending resolution, which states—

> That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive, and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive schedules, establishing a closer parity between agriculture and industry, believing it will result to the general benefit of all.

It is perfectly evident to every Member of the Senate that any resolution of that kind that we could pass would be of no greater value than asking the Members of the House to give a party and invite the Members of the Senate as their guests. As a revenue measure it can not originate in the Senate.

It is also futile for another reason, it seems to me, in that it is a resolution which attempts to limit the scope of the inquiry into tariff duties. I know of no attempt to revise the tariff at any time in history which has limited the question of revision to the revision downward of schedules which are excessive or has limited revision otherwise, without giving an opportunity to any industries to have inadequate tariff duties increased. Certainly many branches of agriculture to-day need a revision upward.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SACKETT. I yield.

Mr. McMASTER. Just what language is there in the resolution that would not permit the changing of the agricultural schedules? What language is there in the resolution that would not permit the adjustment of almost any schedule we have in the tariff law?

Mr. SACKETT. It says the revision shall be downward.

Mr. McMASTER. And to what end, and what further purpose is expressed in the resolution? Does it not provide that revision shall be undertaken in order that agriculture may be brought nearer to a parity with industry? It is the same old interpretation put upon the resolution by every other Member in this body who opposes it. There is always some excuse, something about the language that is not just quite right to suit them. I will assure the Senator from Kentucky that if he will vote for the resolution, and if the resolution shall become effective, there will be ample opportunity to raise all the duties that he has in mind in regard to agricultural products, and I take exactly the same position. We will have also the same opportunity to reduce some excessive schedules.

Mr. SACKETT. But that is not the language of the resolution.

Mr. McMASTER. If the language were changed to suit the Senator, would he vote for it?

Mr. SACKETT. Not for a resolution to raise revenue originating in the Senate, which the Senate has no right to pass and which would not be compatible with the dignity of the House.

Mr. McMASTER. Does the Senator think the United States Senate has no right to express its opinion in regard to any matter?

Mr. SACKETT. No.

Mr. McMASTER. He does not think so?

Mr. SACKETT. No; I do not think so.

Mr. McMASTER. He thinks the Senate is gagged and bound?

Mr. SACKETT. No; I said I do not think that. But when the Constitution provides the place where measures providing for the raising of revenue shall originate, then I think it is time to stop and consider the kind of resolutions we send to the House. A resolution of this kind, which in its terms places a limit upon the scope of the inquiry which the tariff revision may take, is a resolution also which I can not favor for the reason that there are many industries in my own community, both in industry and in agriculture, which decidedly need a revision upward.

I can not subscribe to the doctrines which have been enunciated on the floor of the Senate from time to time that the tariff does not afford a protection to agriculture. I think that is a statement altogether too broad. There are many branches of agriculture to which the tariff to-day does afford protection and without which it would be in a very serious condition. I can say to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota that the tobacco schedules to-day are a great source of revenue to the raisers of tobacco in the whole country, and without those duties the present wonderful tobacco fields of the country would be a shamble and that industry would be undoubtedly destroyed. It furnishes a good illustration, however, of the working of the tariff in agriculture, because there are some kinds of tobacco which, though protected by a duty, are export goods and, with a lack of demand in the export market, the tariff that is placed upon that kind of tobacco does not protect it.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SACKETT. I will.

Mr. McMASTER. I am under the impression that if the Senator had remained in the Chamber during these debates——

Mr. SACKETT. The Senator was here most of the time.

Mr. McMASTER. There are some statements which he has made that I hardly think he would have made had he been here all the time. I do not remember of any statement being made absolutely to the effect that protection did not aid agriculture, but I have heard the statement made that the protective duties which we have upon wheat, and possibly upon millions of dollars worth of other agricultural products, are inoperative. I have heard that statement made, but I have heard no such statement made in regard to the duties being ineffective on all products.

Mr. SACKETT. Neither have I.

Mr. McMASTER. I can not imagine what there is in the resolution that has anything to do with injury to tobacco growers in America. Can the Senator see anything in the resolution that would injure them?

Mr. SACKETT. The Senator will remember what I said. I did not say there was anything in the resolution that would injure the tobacco growers of America. I said the tariff that exists on tobacco to-day was a great benefit to the tobacco industry and without it we would not be able to raise tobacco in profusion in this country. But the instance is also there of a class of tobacco which depends for its market upon export sales, and the export market is to-day so depressed that no amount of duty placed upon that particular kind of tobacco can save that industry. That but serves to draw the distinction between those articles of agriculture which are dependent upon export, which can not be protected by any amount of duty, and those articles which depend upon the home market for their main consumption.

If there were real opportunity under the resolution or any other resolution to go into the question of a change of tariff schedules where they are shown to be excessive in industry, it would be my desire to see those schedules corrected. While a believer in the tariff as a protection to American industry and as a means of building up the market for all the products of both American industry and American agriculture, I am not such a protective advocate as to desire to see any industry unduly protected or to have the rates which protect it excessive. Under a general opportunity for a revision of the tariff any excessive rates would receive my wholesome condemnation, but under a resolution of this kind, even if it were possible to bring about a revision of the tariff by the passage of the resolution, we would not have opportunity to go into the tariff question as a whole. As I said, I know of no previous time in our history when a revision of the tariff was limited to revision downward of certain schedules that should be revised.

The tariff is becoming more and more an exceedingly important question to the section of the country which I have the honor to represent in part, not only as to my State, but the entire South. I say to my colleagues who come from that section that the matter of tinkering with the tariff may mean more disaster to that part of the country to-day than to any other section. Wihin the last five years industry has been seeking a location within the Southland because of the advantages that come to it through climate, through the wonderful transportation facilities, and through labor conditions. On account of the resources of power which are now available in those sections, industry has been going into every State in the South, and more and more those industries have been able to prosper during the five years last past. To-day it forms a great reservoir of opportunity to industry, and as industry grows in every State, more and more will the people become dependent upon a protection which shall permit them to operate and manufacture as against the countries of Europe with their lower wage schedules and scale of living.

For that reason I feel that any question that is raised to-day about a change of the tariff has an effect upon the business of the South. If this were a real resolution that could have an eventual outcome of a change of the tariff schedule, we would feel throughout the country already a falling value in industry. The evenly balanced business machine of this country responds almost immediately to any suggestion that may come from the National Congress that the tariff schedules of the Nation are in danger of readjustment. Immediately we find business people beginning to haul in their horns lest they shall be crippled in the final outcome of tariff revision.

The Senate has been discussing this resolution for tariff revision now for a number of days, and no student of the markets represented in this country will for one moment think that the people of America believe there is the slightest danger of tariff revision under the resolution. It has fallen as a "dud" in the markets of the country. How different is that from the time when, at the beginning of an administration, a real tariff revision has been undertaken and business has immediately felt the discussion and felt it in every market in the land.

For that reason I can not but believe that this resolution is the outcome of a feeling of disappointment because the necessary agricultural legislation, in the opinion of those who come from the wheat States, was not enacted at the last session of Congress, a feeling of disappointment that has caused them, as was so well said this morning, to be willing to take the position that if they can not have the kind of legislation out of this Congress that would in their judgment bolster up the business of those communities, they are willing to pull the house down upon the shoulders of the people in retaliation.

Such an attitude does not gain my support even for the purpose of revising the schedules which I know are unjust and unworthy.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. SACKETT. I am about through and shall give the Senator the floor in just a moment, if he will let me.

Mr. McMASTER. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. SACKETT. Very well.

Mr. McMASTER. The Senator then admits that there are excessive and unfair and unjust schedules in the present tariff act?

Mr. SACKETT. I am afraid there are.

Mr. McMASTER. That is all.

Mr. SACKETT. Yes; but I do not think, Mr. President, that when we begin talking about the unfair and unjust schedules of the present tariff act, the adjustment of which might help agriculture, it is very helpful immediately to bring up the aluminum schedule. Aluminum, of course, undoubtedly used by many agriculturists, but aluminum is a comparatively new article. We who happened to live before aluminum household utensils were available to the people of this country had the use of other household utensils, and those same household utensils can be used by agriculturists to-day without paying the tariff that is charged to the aluminum industry. That tariff may be just; it may be unjust. There is nothing before us to predicate a judgment as to that, except the fact that a company that enjoys the benefit of that tariff is prosperous. It may be the tariff is too high; if it is too high I should like to see it lowered; but the use of aluminum is not necessary to the agricultural interests of this country.

I recall that in my early days I saw household utensils made of granite ware, and I see the same character of household utensils in the stores to-day. So the use of aluminum upon the farms in any of the forms in which it is used to-day comes about by reason of one of two things—either it is cheaper than the thing for which it is a substitute, or it is so much better for the price that the users willingly pay the higher cost.

There are some schedules of the tariff which, in my judgment, ought to be revised downward, but there are some industrial schedules that ought to be raised. There is an industry in my own State and in the neighboring States for which I have been working with the Tariff Commission for more than two years, trying to get an advance in the schedules. I refer to the rag-rug industry. It seems a small one; but the warp of those rugs is made in factories and then it is sent into the mountain districts where in many households rags are pulled through the warp by the use of hand looms. It furnishes a means of livelihood to thousands of mountain families who have very little opportunity to earn money in other ways. Since 1920 a flood of rag rugs from Japan and China has deluged the domestic market. The increased importation in 1925 over 1924 was more than 2,000,000 square yards out of a total of 2,750,000 square yards altogether. The influx into this country of those rag rugs, produced by the cheap labor of the Far East, has destroyed the industry in the Kentucky mountains and the mountains of Tennessee and of western Pennsylvania. That is an industry which is loudly calling for the help of the Government in order to maintain itself. Without an increase of the tariff sufficient to compensate for the difference between the cost of production in Japan and China and the domestic cost the people of those sections of the country must be deprived of the benefit of that industry. For that reason I say that if there is to be any revision of the tariff I can not consent for a moment to vote for a resolution which provides that only schedules that shall be revised downward shall be considered. Schedules that should be revised upward interest me fully as much on behalf of the people of my section as do the schedules that should be revised downward.

Another great industry which is being built up in that section of country and in the neighboring States is the dairy industry. That industry shows the need of further tariff protection against the importation of milk and cream and butter from across the Canadian border. It has been found that close to the great markets that industry grows faster than does any other industry of the central, southern, and northern sections of the South. It meets the direct competition of the people of Canada. That industry, too, should be given an opportunity to present its claims before I would consent to the passage of the resolution as now framed, limited to a revision downward of some few schedules that have been pointed out, and some of which, as I before stated, have little or no relation to the agricultural interests.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I yield my unstinted admiration to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. McMASTER] for the courage of his present adventure. I think certainly he has performed a very useful service. I have no sympathy with the arguments that are made that the Senate should not express its opinion upon any matter that is germane to that which concerns us in legislation or that which in any way concerns our people. I have no sympathy with the adjectives that have been hurled at the Senator from South Dakota because he has had the temerity to touch a subject such as the tariff. I congratulate him upon his very able presentation of this subject, and I congratulate him upon the fact that there has been a debate upon it which ought at least to be enlightening to the Senate and possibly to the country.

Mr. President, I think I understand, too, the reasons actuating the Senator from South Dakota and some of those who are aiding him in the presentation of a resolution of this kind and character. I understand, I think, better than some of our brethren here what rankles in the souls of the men in the Middle West and particularly of those who are engaged in agriculture, the very basic industry of this Nation.

I think I understand, sir, something of the catastrophe which has befallen the farming industry during the past few years, and I confess the deepest interest and an entire sympathy in anything which may be undertaken to alleviate the distress of the farmers of this land, and in anything, no matter how mistaken it may be in the opinion of some of our supposedly wise brethren, that may be undertaken by those who represent the farming communities to relieve and aid their people.

I desire, Mr. President, though, to obtain the necessary relief and to go at the matter the other way around; not by an endeavor to decrease the tariff or even indefinitely to revise it, for making a tariff law we who have dealt with the subject in the past have learned is a complex and a delicate and a difficult task. Under any circumstances it is delicate and it is difficult; under the circumstances at the present time it is more than delicate and more than difficult. So, sir, instead of touching this complex and this delicate and this difficult subject, in the endeavor to give the farmer his parity as described in the resolution in respect to the tariff, I would rather go to the specific and affirmative mode of agricultural relief, and by a definite act do him tardy justice.

I believe, sir, in anything which promises agricultural relief. I do not care that it may be determined to be bizarre by some of our distinguished economists and by many gentlemen from the East who have not the slightest conception of what is transpiring in the West. I do not care that gentlemen who arrogate to themselves all of the economic virtues or individuals who are coining their money out of eastern business say to us that what we endeavor to do for the farmer is empirical wholly and is quite beyond the pale of what they believe to be sound economics. If there is anything, any measure which promises relief, which gives even the possibility of relief to the men and the women and the children who have suffered in the Middle West, I will accept that measure, the McNary-Haugen bill or any other, in the endeavor to give something of relief to those who sorely need it.

In the endeavor to strike a parity in relation to the benefits that are derived from the tariff, the parity to which the farmer is entitled, I would go around in that way and I would do it by specific and definitive measures presented upon that subject, and that subject alone. I do not desire to do it by going in the other direction and undertaking the task, which ever is delicate and which in this instance is more than difficult, of revising, altering, or amending the present tariff law.

To revise downward excessive rates is something that I can scarcely wholly comprehend. I recognize that there are excessive rates; I recognize undoubtedly there are rates that ought to be reduced in a tariff law; but, coming from the West, coming from a territory that has asked tariffs and has received tariffs upon those things that come from the soil, I am not ready at this period and at this session to rest upon the determination of any of our eastern brethren as to what may be excessive rates in a tariff bill. What may seem to be excessive rates in a tariff upon the industrial products of the East to me would seem to those of the East quite the reverse; while what might seem to be excessive rates on the products of the soil of the Pacific coast to those who live in Massachusetts would seem to me to be, indeed, less than ought to be accorded.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McMASTER. As I understand the distinguished Senator from California, he would not favor a reopening of the tariff law, owing to the fact that he would not trust the interests of California to eastern interests and to their ideas in regard to tariff rates upon agricultural products raised in California. Then, as I understand, according to that theory, we must never again bring up the question of tariff revision?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; not at all, sir. Indicating an opinion here and asking the House to revise rates downward is a very different proposition from taking up a tariff bill in the regular course of legislation in the Congress of the United States. I do not wish to put it quite as harshly as the Senator did, that I would not trust our eastern brethren as to rates which should be accorded to the fruits, the nuts, and other products of the soil of the Pacific coast; but, sir, I would prefer, if there were to be any revision concerning the rates on those products which are grown upon the Pacific coast, myself to be a part of that revision, and to be a part of the determination whether or not any rate was excessive.

Sir, I violate no confidence, and say what is really a matter of history when I recite how the rates were obtained for the territory of the Senator from Oregon and the territory that I represent on the Pacific coast when the tariff bill was under discussion in 1922. We formed a bloc then. Rail at blocs, as you see fit, sir; say what you will regarding any organization within the organization of the Senate; but when the tariff bill was under discussion we formed what was termed a western bloc; and we formed it for protection of our States and our products. It embraced about 25 Senators from the West; and those 25 Senators appointed an executive committee of five, of which I had the honor to be one; and that bloc said to the gentlemen from the East, who were concerned alone in an industrial tariff, "All right, gentlemen; the West, with its 25 votes in the United States Senate, is finally going to have a tariff that suits the West"; and the West got a tariff that suited the West upon the products of the soil.

Blocs, of course, in mock horror, our eastern brethren say, are terrible things; dangerous, too; but, nevertheless, the organization of the West in 1922 effected the result at that time of giving to the West a modicum of that which had always been taken by the East; and I am very glad that we organized, and very glad that the result was attained.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. McMASTER. I want to congratulate the Senator upon the work of the bloc during that session. I think they did obtain most substantial results; but did they obtain everything that the farmers asked for? Not by a long way. The testimony before the Finance Committee shows that the farmers asked for higher duties on many things, and those duties were cut. Nothwithstanding that, I agree with the distinguished Senator from California that that bloc did put up a most magnificent fight, and they got so much more than they had ever gotten before that it was really a victory.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is right; and I may say to the Senator from South Dakota that when the tariff bill comes here again, if I happen to be a Member of the Senate at that time and the Senator from South Dakota happens to be a Member, I hope we will form again a western bloc; and we will not only get what we got before but we will get all of the things that the Senator from South Dakota would like to get to-day. I will aid him in then getting them to the best of my ability.

I recall, sir, the tariff that we then obtained. It is a singular thing that our tariffs in the West, generally speaking, are very different from the tariffs in the East. Our tariffs relate to those things that come up out of the soil. They are very valuable to us, just as the tariffs that the Senator from South Dakota would have for his territory are very valuable to him. Ours are walnuts and almonds and olives and olive oil, lemons, and other products—things that come up out of the soil, and that under certain circumstances come into the fiercest kind of competition with things that are grown abroad.

I remember when the first question and the first contest came upon lemons here. The late lamented Senator from the State of Pennsylvania, Mr. Penrose, was then chairman of the Finance Committee. Upon this floor the State that I represent in part was represented then by one gentleman of the Democratic Party and one whose party is Republican. After a contest by the Republican Senator from California, who now speaks, for an increased tariff on lemons, the Senator from Pennsylvania accorded it in the emergency tariff bill; and for the first time in the history of the State of California we had a tariff upon lemons approaching justice. The rate was subsequently carried into the general tariff bill.

I recall subsequently the tariff that we sought upon almonds. Do you realize, sir, where the opposition came from? Every great confectioner in the East came down to Washington. Some of our distinguished brethren from New Jersey, I recall particularly, and from some of the New England States as well, marched into the Finance Committee—the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will recall that fact—and, representing these great confectioners, they were demanding that we should not place a tariff upon almonds at all, because they could get a second-rate almond from Europe that would enable them to make their confectionery at a little less cost; and so great was the power of these confectioners of the East that it was only by the slightest margin of a very few votes before the Senate itself that we were enabled to obtain the present tariff upon almonds.

So it was upon walnuts. The Senator from Oregon and I stood side by side in making that fight. So it was upon olives and upon olive oil, with which we came in direct competition with our brethren across the sea. It was done, sir, because we organized; and we organized upon the theory that whereas tariff bills had been written in the past around the wants and the wishes and the profits of New England we were going to have, even if injustices might occur in that bill, at least a part of a tariff bill written around the production of the Western States of the United States of America.

I am afraid to touch those schedules now, sir. I would rather go to the relief that ought to be accorded the farmer the other way around, by a specific relief bill; and I will go the limit in that endeavor to give relief to agriculturists. I can not under the circumstances, sir—and I regret it, because of the author of the resolution and because of my sympathy with the fight he is making—I can not, sir, vote for the resolution that he has presented here now.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Barkley	Edge	McMaster	Schall
Bayard	Fess	McNary	Sheppard
Bingham	Frazier	Mayfield	Shipstead
Black	Gerry	Metcalf	Smoot
Blaine	Gillett	Neely	Steck
Blease	Hale	Norris	Steiwer
Bratton	Harris	Nye	Stephens
Brookhart	Hawes	Oddie	Swanson
Broussard	Hayden	Overman	Thomas
Bruce	Heflin	Phipps	Trammell
Capper	Howell	Pittman	Tyson
Caraway	Johnson	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Jones	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	King	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Cutting	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Deneen	McKellar	Robinson, Ind.	Willis
Dill	McLean	Sackett

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are detained on business of the Senate in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is detained from the Chamber in the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] are detained in a meeting of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, strike out the word "schedules" and insert the words "excessive rates."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in support of the pending resolution, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter just received by me from Mr. J. K. Wells a constituent of mine residing in Oklahoma City, Okla.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., December 19, 1927.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: If I believe that the high protective tariff was good for the West, Middle West, and the South, I would certainly vote the Republican ticket. Not only that, but I would move to Illinois or Iowa and run for Congress, advocating a high protective tariff on both wheat and corn as a means of helping the present deplorable conditions of the farmers. If anyone can show me where a high protective tariff ever benefited any farmer in the South, West, or Middle West, with the exception of the beet-sugar, cane-sugar, rice, and wool-growing farmers, I will make them a present of the best suit of clothes that can be bought in Oklahoma City. The old argument of the protective tariff Republican is that on account of the high tariff schedules the eastern manufacturing industry is enabled to pay higher wages to their employees and consequently they are able to buy the products of the farm and pay more money for them. I will ask you if the highest-paid mechanic in the steel mills of Pittsburgh pays one cent more for a bushel of Kansas wheat than the peasants that sweep the streets of London? You know they pay just the same less the cost of transportation. I will also ask you if the highest-paid textile worker in the mills of New Bedford pays one cent more for a yard of calico spun in their own mills of cotton grown in Jackson County, Okla., than the coolies of China who work for 6 cents per day? You know they pay just the same less the cost of transportation in their favor. I will grant you that by virtue of the high protective tariff the high-wage earners may perhaps buy a little more of the farmer's wheat and a little more of his cotton products, but this is negligible, as you know. Under Cleveland's administration the farmer received on an average of about 65 cents per bushel for his wheat and it cost about 43 cents to produce it. Under Harding's and Coolidge's administrations the farmer has received about $1 per bushel for his wheat and it has cost about $1.05 to produce it. Mind you 65 cents under Cleveland's administration is worth about $1.15 at the present time. It is true that we have a tariff of 14 cents and 28 cents on wheat but it just about as ineffectual as the prohibition law is in Breathitt County, Ky., or in the Bowery district on the east side, New York City. We are producing from 800,000,000 to 900,000,000 bushels of wheat annually and consuming at home about 600,000,000 and exporting about 200,000,000 bushels per annum. This tariff act was passed to fool the farmers of the West and Northwest. Do you think for one moment if we produced only 400,000,000 bushels of wheat annually and had to import 200,000,000 to supply our domestic consumption that the Republicans would retain our present tariff schedules on wheat? Not for one moment. These schedules would be repealed immediately and our President and Senator SMOOT would tell the farmers it was all done in their interest to make them more prosperous.

I was both astonished and astounded when I read in the President's message to Congress wherein he said that everything the farmer sold was on the protected list and everything he bought was on the free list when just the opposite is true. I can not for the life of me understand how anyone occupying such an exalted position could so misstate the facts. I also read with considerable interest and astonishment the speeches of Senator REED SMOOT setting forth our prosperous conditions brought about by the high protective act of 1922. Since and including 1922 more than 80 per cent of the banks of the State of Montana have failed, more than 75 per cent of the banks of North Dakota, more than 67 per cent of the banks of South Dakota, more than 55 per cent of the banks of Iowa, more than 20 per cent of the banks of Nebraska, more than 65 per cent of the banks of New Mexico, more than 36 per cent of the banks of Oklahoma, more than 21 per cent of the banks of Kansas, and more than 16 per cent of the banks of Texas have failed; more than 25 per cent of all the farms in Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Iowa have been sold on the auction block; more than 1,500,000 farmers moved to the city annually, and tenantry has increased more than 2 per cent annually in this country. I ask you, sir, do you call this prosperity? In 1850, 65 per cent of the population of the United States resided on the farm; now less than 40 per cent reside on the farm. If the country is so prosperous as they would have us believe, why are people leaving the farm so rapidly? I have never yet seen intelligent people run from money or prosperous conditions. Give us five years more of prosperity under the Republican protective tariff and you will have half of the farmers in the South, West and Middle West in the poorhouse.

I will grant you that industry is prosperous, but at the expense of agriculture. I will grant you that transportation is prosperous by virtue of the Esch-Cummins Act, but at the expense of the farmers who constitute the bulwark of American prosperity.

The high protective tariff act is nothing more or less than a highway-robbing scheme to rob the West, Middle West, and Southwest for the benefit of the manufacturing East. I have just as much respect for a highwayman who takes my watch and money away from me in some dark alley with a six-shooter as I have for the Republican administration who robs me through the protective tariff act. One is done in defiance of all law and the other is done with the sanction of law and by virtue of the all-powerful industrial East.

There can be no prosperity for the farmers until the expense of production is decreased through a repeal of the tariff schedules and the placing of farm machinery on the free list, reduction of transportation rates and strict economy in public expenditures.

I hope you and I will live long enough to see the West and Middle West voting for their own financial interest rather than the way the great industrial East wants them to vote. When they wake up they will be voting solidly with the South against the present tariff schedules.

I want to thank you for the December issue of the Tariff Review which you recently sent me. I have read every article in it and analyzed carefully the one by Commissioner Brossard on How Farmers are Benefited by the Tariff. To my method of reasoning it is most illogical. The most phenomenal idea in it was the statement that the Tariff Commission, of which Mr. Brossard is a member, after arduous labor, research, and investigation "had reduced the duty on quail from 50 cents to 25 cents on each bird." No doubt this one act of this commission accounts for the prosperous condition of the farmers, as set forth in the President's message to Congress and by various speeches and statements from Senator REED SMOOT. Another such an extraordinary act by this commission in the interest of the farmers and we will have such a plethora of money in circulation throughout the United States, and Oklahoma in particular, that we will no doubt be able to retire our national debt.

I also learned from this article that they likewise "reduced the duty on limberger cheese from 15 cents to 7½ cents per pound," all in the interest of and for the benefit of the farmers. These two acts are the outstanding accomplishments of this commission since it was organized by an act of Congress in 1916, of which all of its members feel justly proud. This is the very quintessence of an efficient and faithful public service. Every epochal event in our national history is incomparable to these major achievements. For these momentous, frugal, laborious, and scientific accomplishments they should be extended the thanks of Congress and immediately retired on full pay. Then let it be said of them as was said of Paul of Tarsus, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; as thou has been faithful over a few things"—lie down and take thy rest. Future generations of agrarians will sing their songs of praise and erect stately monuments to perpetuate their memories down through the corridors of time. "Reduction of duty on quail from 50 cents to 25 cents on each bird," and "on cheese from 15 cents to 7½ cents per pound," the crowning attainment of President Coolidge's administration. I have at last discovered why he is so popular with the farmers and why the country is so prosperous. Ne plus ultra.

I made the statement that the highest-paid mechanic in the steel mills of Pittsburgh paid no more for a bushel of Kansas-grown wheat than the poorest peasant that sweeps the streets of London; and also that he did not necessarily buy any greater quantity of it. In support of this last statement let me quote from the President's recent message to Congress on this very question, quoted verbatim: "Assuming that Europe would have more money if it sold us larger amounts of merchandise, it is not certain it would consume more of our food." These propositions are certainly analogous.

Tariff of every kind and description is nothing more or less than a local subsidy for local industry, meaning higher prices to local consumers. This subsidy is not paid by foreign consumers, for they are not compelled to pay higher prices as we are for the same commodity by virtue of the high protective tariff laws.

Another idea I would like to suggest in this connection and that is: The industries of Europe are at a decided disadvantage in competing in the markets of the United States with the industries of this country. This has been brought about by greater industrial efficiency and mass production methods of the United States, which not only offsets the effect of higher wages paid in this country, but which, as a matter of fact in the majority of instances make the cost per unit of commodities produced in this country less than the cost per unit of similar commodities produced abroad. Therefore, industries of this country can sell these same goods to the consumers at home and abroad cheaper than European industries can sell us similar commodities produced abroad, or even in the very foreign countries where their competitors are the very strongest. As a matter of fact they are doing this very thing each and every day. Do you think they need protection (?) at the expense of the consumer?

Would Senator CAPPER agree that it would be a good thing for the United States, and Kansas in particular, if England, Japan, Germany, and Austria should levy a duty of 42 cents per bushel on wheat? It would be effective in this instance cited above, but not in this country where we export over 200,000,000 bushels annually, while they are the largest importers of wheat.

I trust you agree with the statement in my letter to Senator NYE that no tariff schedule on the raw products of the farm can be effective where we produce same in abundance in excess of domestic consumption. A great many commodities like the raw products of the farm are on the dutiable list, but the law is ineffectual for the reason stated above. And yet, intelligent people fall for the "bunk" that tariff on wheat, corn, cotton, flour, bran, feed products, cottonseed, and many other raw products of the farm, too numerous to mention, is very beneficial to the farmer. It is nothing but sophistry personified. One must contravene their method of reasoning, suppress their initiative, and stultify their conscience to approve and support such an illogical and refutable proposition. These products were placed on the high-dutiable list in order to deceive the farmers and lead them to believe the Republicans are trying to give them the same benefits of the high-protective tariff as now enjoyed by industry.

I am thoroughly sold on the idea of reducing the tariff schedules on all necessaries of life and placing farm implements of all kinds on the free list as the most salutary method possible of relieving the present deplorable conditions of agriculture, in addition to a reduction in transportation rates and reduced expenditures in Government. It is a well-known fact that the consumer ultimately pays all fixed charges and taxes, it matters not how and when incurred.

From the gist of our recent correspondence you can readily see that no one could consistently accuse me of being in sympathy with any high protective tariff act, the McNary-Haugen bill, or one containing the same idea.

I want to beg your pardon for taking up so much of your valuable time, but the fact is, this is the last day of the week, month, and year and I have spent the day reading the Tariff Review, and while the subject matter is fresh on my mind I thought I would give you my mental reaction to the contents contained therein.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I am

Yours very truly,

J. K. WELLS.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there have been several days' debate upon the resolution, and, so far as I know, only one or two Senators have indicated a desire to speak to-morrow, I would like, if possible, to obtain unanimous consent to agree to have a final vote upon the resolution at 2 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. SMOOT. Upon the resolution and all amendments?

Mr. McMASTER. And all amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCE. Would it suit the Senator just as well to change the hour?

Mr. McMASTER. To what hour?

Mr. BRUCE. To some later hour, say, 3 o'clock.

Mr. McMASTER. That would be perfectly agreeable to me. I accept the suggestion and ask that we agree to vote at 3 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland is acceptable to him?

Mr. McMASTER. I have not been able to examine the amendment. A slight amendment was made this morning; that is, I suggested this morning that a change be made which I think would cover the amendment the Senator from Maryland proposes.

Mr. BRUCE. The effect of my amendment is to strike out the word "schedules," in line 3 of the resolution, and substitute the words "excessive rates." I understood that that would be agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. McMASTER. I will say that this morning the word "excessive" was inserted in the resolution, and I assume the only suggestion the Senator from Maryland makes is that the word "schedules" be changed to "rates." The word "excessive" is already in line 3 of the resolution. It was put in this morning. But we can look at the matter afterwards.

Mr. BRUCE. The resolution now reads:

That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive, and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such schedules.

Mr. McMASTER. We have inserted the word "excessive" before the word "schedules." Therefore the only word the Senator from Maryland desires to change is the word "schedules," which he desires to change to "rates."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. BRUCE. That amendment was to put the word "excessive" before the word "schedules," in line 3, was it not?

Mr. McMASTER. It was.

Mr. BRUCE. The effect would be just the same.

Mr. SMOOT. If the word "schedules" is used, it may be found that there are rates in a schedule that are too low and other rates that are too high. I am sure that will appear to the Senator himself.

Mr. McMASTER. That is why it is perfectly agreeable to me to insert the word "rates" instead of the word "schedules."

Mr. BRUCE. With my amendment the resolution would read:

Resolved, That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive, and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive rates.

Mr. McMASTER. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. BRUCE. I was sure it would be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota accepts the modification, and the resolution will be modified as suggested.

Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. The unanimous-consent agreement is that we vote at 3 o'clock on Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At 3 o'clock on Monday.

The agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at 3 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Monday, January 16, 1928, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the resolution (S. Res. 52) favoring a reduction of tariff schedules and the consideration of tariff legislation at the present session of Congress, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order, now that this agreement has been made, to move to take up another bill? That is, would it displace the present unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the hour of 3 o'clock on Monday the resolution will be voted upon; but a motion would be in order before that time.

Mr. JONES. I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 38, Senate bill 744, to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes. I will state that if this motion shall be agreed to I will ask unanimous consent temporarily to lay the bill aside. I do not desire to displace the resolution of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McMASTER. I wish to say to the Senator from Washington that there are several Senators who have expressed a desire to speak upon the pending resolution, and one or two of them were ready to address the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. JONES. My motion would not prevent them from speaking on the resolution. I would have the merchant marine bill laid aside temporarily.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator from Washington will not insist on the motion this afternoon. A couple of Senators who are not now in the Chamber are opposed to the measure, and they spoke to me about it.

Mr. JONES. I would not interfere with them. I will temporarily lay the bill aside.

Mr. CURTIS. I know; but I think they would like to be here when the question is up as to whether the bill should be made the unfinished business.

Mr. JONES. I desire to give notice, then, that immediately after the vote is taken on the pending resolution, I shall seek recognition from the Chair to move to take up this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. McMASTER] as modified.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in view of the unanimous-consent agreement, I suggest that we have an executive session, if no one wants to speak on the resolution now.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 14, 1928, at 12 o'clock m.

FRIDAY, January 13, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for this new day, for health, for happy friendships, for the open sky, for the wide earth; but we pray for the greatest wealth—the blessing of an undefiled heart. May the hand that bears all nature up protect our homes and shield us from the enemy that never abdicates. Thou who art our sovereign Friend, from whom earth's greatest souls have borrowed all their gifts, bless us with music without discord, with purity without stain, and with that peace which is far beyond human analysis. Wherever there are ignorance and restless passion, do Thou shed Thy light and bestow Thy strength. May we hate injustice, smite falsehood, and be consumed with a passion for righteousness, for the glory of Thy name, and for the good of our country. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FRANK H. FOSS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

FITCHBURG, MASS., January 12, 1928.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Speaker House of Representatives.

SIR: In accordance with your designation of me, pursuant to Resolution 78, adopted by the House of Representatives, to administer the oath of office to Representative-elect FRANK H. FOSS, of the third district of the State of Massachusetts, I have the honor to report that on the 12th day of January, 1928, at his residence in Fitchburg, Mass., I administered the oath of office to Mr. FOSS, form prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, being the form of oath administered to Members of the House of Representatives, to which Mr. FOSS subscribed.

I have the honor to be,
Yours respectfully,

CALVIN D. PAIGE.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 90

Whereas FRANK H. FOSS, a Representative for the State of Massachusetts, from the third district thereof, has been unable from sickness to appear in person to be sworn as a Member of this House, but has sworn to and subscribed the oath of office before the Hon. Calvin D. Paige, authorized by resolution of this House to administer the oath, and the said oath of office has been presented in his behalf to the House, and there being no contest or question as to his election: Therefore Resolved, That the said oath be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said FRANK H. FOSS as a Member of this House.

The resolution was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Civil Service may sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Civil Service may sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN M'DUFFIE

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Speaker, on July 1 of last year my colleague, Congressman MCDUFFIE, made a very interesting and instructive speech before the Alabama Bar Association on the dangerous tendencies in our Government. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. JOHN MCDUFFIE:

DANGEROUS TENDENCIES IN OUR GOVERNMENT

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Bar Association of Alabama, I wish to express my appreciation of the honor done me by the invitation to address this association. From the early days of our statehood the Alabama bar has held a high place in the esteem of the legal profession of the Nation. First State in the Union to adopt a code of ethics—largely the work of the late lamented Thomas G. Jones, of Montgomery—which has been followed by at least a dozen other States, and made the basis of the ethical canons of the American bar, Alabama has always been a leader in every movement to preserve the integrity of that profession which, more than any other, has had to do with the making and maintenance of the principles of the American Government.

I wish to assure you in the beginning, I have not come with any delusion that I could bring to this audience a message of wisdom and advice. I see before me those at whose feet I have sat, and those who possess that rare ability which makes them upstanding figures in the legal profession. I do venture, however, even at the risk of presumption on my part, to speak to you about those tendencies in our Government, which, if allowed to run their course unrestrained, will destroy our constitutional equilibrium—that even balance between State and Federal Government which has been the bulwark of our safety and the anchor sheet of the Republic. Our dual system of Government as provided in the Constitution, has been fitly termed "the longest reach of constructive statesmanship ever known in the world."

The tendency toward the surrender and elimination of the sovereign powers of the State, as well as the encroachment of Federal power, is destroying the incentive of local government, and striking down the initiative of the individual citizen; it is setting up in Washington an unbalanced and top-heavy system and gradually undermining the foundations of representative government.

BUREAUCRACY

According to Mr. Hoover, we now have more than 200 bureaus, boards, and commissions, great and small, with authority to make rules and regulations, largely fixing the policies of government under which we live. A great bureaucracy clothed with much authority and little responsibility, not only adds to the taxpayers' burden but through the dispensation of governmental favors, our people are encouraged to lean upon the Government for support rather than support the Government. To-day almost a decade after the close of the World War, Federal bureaus are still reaching out and putting their hands into numerous phases of the social and business life of the Nation. With increasing rapidity they are entering new fields every year for the performance of many duties which are more properly the functions of State and local governments. When once a Federal bureau enters any field with its powerful agencies, supported by the Public Treasury, it rarely, if ever, halts or turns backward but follows a natural course of expansion.

FEDERAL FUNCTIONS ENLARGED BY NATION'S GROWTH

Until 30 years ago, excepting the period of the War between the States, the activities of the Federal Government and its direct relation to the citizen aroused only the slightest interest in the minds of the people. To-day, however, a survey of the various functions of the many bureaus, boards, and commissions of the central Government presents a most engaging study.

Appropriations by the Federal Government for internal improvements were questioned long ago by President Madison, who vetoed a bill for the construction of the Cumberland Road, and in this he was followed by Mr. Monroe. In 1844 President Tyler likewise protested that Congress had no constitutional authority to use Federal funds for improvement of navigable channels in our rivers and harbors. Soon, however, we find Congress even granting vast areas of the public domain to aid in the construction of our great trunk line railroads. Such improvements with their strategic, economic, and political value were most essential for our national development, and with the passing of the years the pressure of public opinion accompanying our rapid growth has wrought reversals as well as many changes in the original ideas of the functions of the Federal Government. Annually increasing appropriations, not only for internal improvements but to meet the growing demands from every section of the country for the multiplication of bureau agencies to assist in solving the problems of the every-day life of the citizen, have been granted from year to year by the Congress, always ready to respond to the wishes of the people.

To-day it is almost impossible to conceive of a single phase of American life that does not feel the touch of the Government's hand or that is not affected by some regulation of a Federal bureau. Those of you gentlemen who came here to-day in automobiles traveled over roads that were constructed with the aid of funds of a Federal bureau, which even tested the material of which they are built, said the final word as to their proper location, and now advises how best to maintain them. Those who came on the railroads paid fares that are fixed by a bureau in Washington. Even your wearing apparel, from your hat to your shoes, including your spectacles, whether domestic or imported, was doubtless sold to you at a price responsive to a tariff rate made by the Federal Congress, but very likely adjusted by a commission in Washington. If your pockets are bulging with the coin of the realm, sooner or later the hand of a Federal bureau will reach in for its share of the income derived from your energy and industry. A Federal bureau expends millions annually for the reclamation of arid land, but prescribes, of course, the conditions under which those lands are used. Another bureau will lend you money on your farm land at a low rate of interest for a term of 40 years. A bureau will advise you how to build your home, even to the extent of where the kitchen should be. It will not only tell you what sort of flowers to plant but will occasionally send you a few to make your home more beautiful. A bureau tells you what kind of soil yours is and suggests the best methods of cultivation. It advises what amount and the kind of fertilizer to use and suggests how you can safeguard your premises against rats, insects, worms, beetles, and bugs. A bureau will advise you when, where, and what to plant, and, before the crop is grown, what the harvest will be. It teaches how to best transport the crop as well as the latest methods of marketing both at home and abroad. In many marketing centers throughout the land the expert eye of a Federal bureau inspects the fruit and vegetables for your table, the meat you eat, the butter and eggs you buy, and even the grass you grow. A Federal bureau tells us when the sun will shine, when the rain will fall, and warns us against tornadoes. Under the cotton futures act, the cotton standards act, the grain futures act, and the grain standards act, the standard containers act, the United States warehouse act, and the cooperative marketing act, the plant and animal quarantine acts, the pure food and the apple grading act, almost every phase of legal protection and assistance is thrown about the 30,000,000 of our people now engaged in agriculture. Indeed, the Government, through its bureaus, does almost everything except perform the labor and fix the prices of products, and there are those who now declare that regulation of prices by a bureau in Washington is a proper function of the Federal Government.

These are only a few of the multiplied activities of a beneficent Federal Government. The limitations of this hour will not permit me to name them all. Suffice it to say that many other interests in commerce and in the arts and sciences come in daily for their share of advice and supervision and for those bounties provided by the Federal Government to-day.

Mr. Coolidge, with his characteristic New England thrift and economy, very wisely suggested that the task uppermost in the minds of those "whose brains laid here the foundation for the hope of the world" was to see how much they could put into the Government, while it seems the thought uppermost in our mind is to find out how much we can get out of it.

SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT DEMANDING FURTHER EXTENSION OF FEDERAL POWER

Not content with all those powers for the advice and supervision of the business and social life of America to-day there are men and women, sincere but misguided, who are clamoring for further extension of Federal power. There is a school of thought demanding Government ownership and operation of railroads, coal mines, and other public utilities, despite the fact that the Government has never successfully operated any business without a loss to the Public Treasury.

There is a growing demand throughout the Nation for more bureaucratic control and more Federal supervision over the very person and conduct of the citizen himself. Even here in the Southland, where so much precious blood was spilled to preserve the integrity of State and local government, there are those who would all too quickly surrender to the Federal Government many duties and responsibilities which should be performed by State and local communities as well as in the home.

Under the maternity act a Federal bureau now advises the best methods as to how our children should be born, while under a scheme for birth control, not yet adopted, thank God, we might be advised whether or not it is wise to have them born at all.

Another proposal is to amend the Constitution and have the Congress provide a uniform marriage and divorce law for the Nation. Under the provisions of the twentieth amendment, which was unwisely, in my humble opinion, submitted to the States, and which they had the patriotism and courage to reject, some agent of the Federal Government might have been clothed with authority to go into the homes of the people regardless of the wishes of parents, and prescribe those rules and regulations, in conformity with the views of the professional reformer and social uplifter, governing the conditions under which the child, from its tender years almost to the date of majority, should be permitted to labor.

There was a time when we found inscriptions of tender and beautiful sentiment, such as "God bless our home" and "What is home without a mother," hanging about the firesides of our people. But, if the National Congress responds to such dangerous propaganda as involved in the twentieth amendment, and lends a willing ear to the unsound preachments of the well organized and sincere but misdirected zeal of a fanatical type of the sociologist, the time will come when, supplementing the sweet sentiment of "God bless our home" and "What is home without a mother" we will find inscribed about the hearthstones and over the portals of American homes, the later day, the ultraprogressive and Russianized sentiment, "May the Government bless our home" and "What is home without a Federal agent." No; the day will not come soon when the red-blooded American, who enjoys the protection of life and property as well as the immunity and safety of home, guaranteed under the Constitution, will surrender to some bureaucrat of the Federal Government the power to invade the sacred precincts of his home, so long as it is maintained as a home, without injury to his neighbor or hurt to society. Let us hope the American citizen is not forgetting the assuring words of the great Pitt, describing that Anglo-Saxon ideal which has come down through all the cycles of the years to add to the blessings of our constitutional liberties: "The poorest man may in his cottage bid defiance to all the force of the Crown. It may be frail, its roof may shake; the winds may blow through it; the storms may enter; the rain may enter; but the King of England can not enter; all his forces dare not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement."

FEDERAL SUPERVISION OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Not satisfied with the local support in the education of our children, a problem that was distinctly left by the founders of the Republic for solution by communities and States; not content with the present Federal Bureau of Education with its nine divisions in Washington, there is another school of thought throughout the country demanding the establishment of a new department in the Central Government, to be known as the department of education. Another powerful bureau, if you please, to sit in Washington and sooner or later dictate, not only the type of school your child shall attend, but the courses of study he must pursue, and even who his classmates shall be. Some may persuade themselves that the only function, under the terms of this bill, to be performed by Federal authority is the simple and beneficent process of passing out annually millions of dollars to the States, but I challenge them to cite a single instance wherein the Federal Government has appropriated its funds without reserving to itself the last word as to how those funds shall be expended. Nor can we object to the reason and sound business judgment involved in the fact that wherever the Federal Government places its money, there it lays its hands.

LET US BE PROGRESSIVE, NOT ULTRAPROGRESSIVE

We glory in the marvelous achievements wrought within a century and a half by the intrepid genius of the American people laboring under the inspiration and light of liberty and religion. We glory in the accumulation of our vast national wealth, in our prowess upon land, upon sea, and in the air; we glory in our position of world leadership. But we should remember that vast wealth and power always teem with temptation and prosperity is full of peril. We can not stand still in America. All the mighty wheels of progress must continue to revolve. We must be progressive; we must advocate legislation and those changes in our Constitution necessary to meet new conditions in the onward march of American civilization. But this does not mean we must approve such radical proposals as those demanding that legislative enactment override the solemn declaration of the Supreme Court; it does not mean that our Government must function only by initiative referendum and recall; it does not mean that we should have any class superior to the Government in this country, for when such an hour comes, the boasted freedom of America will be destroyed; it does not mean that we must progress upon the theory that we can "make the poor man rich by making the rich man poor," for governments, like individuals, develop and progress only through a process of building up rather than one of tearing down; it does not mean that we must change from representative government to pure democracy in America.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING?

We are not unmindful that in our rapid, economic, and industrial growth it was essential to enlarge the scope of Federal authority, but have we not reached the point in our national life where discretion and sound judgment dictates to us the stern necessity of checking the tendency to centralization and that increasing paternalism which may eventually destroy our self-reliance, if not make wards of us all? If the history of the world teaches one lesson better than another, it is that an over centralized government with its increasing hordes of office-holders becomes arrogant or intolerable, and sooner or later falls of its own weight. When we realize that, including Federal, State, county, and municipal Governments in the American Republic, for every 11 citizens over the age of 14 years, one is on a public pay roll of some character; we might well pause and ask ourselves the question, "Whither are we drifting?"

Instead of being a "government of law," as described by Webster in a debate with Hayne, this Republic is becoming a "government of laws." Almost daily we meet men and women clamoring for a "law for this" and a "law to prevent that." Shall the day come when all of our personal and domestic relations, as well as our business, will be regulated by some statute? It is estimated that we now have in America more than 2,000,000 laws, theoretically in force, regulating almost every phase of human life, while our National and State Legislatures are grinding out new statutes at an estimated rate of 15,000 a year. He was not far wrong who said that we are almost "law mad" in America, and that the "American people have more laws and obey them less than any other people in the world." After all, the future of American citizenship depends more upon the ideals maintained in the American home than upon thousands of newly made laws.

INCREASING DEMANDS FOR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

Within recent years a new impetus has been given to a tendency to radically change the fundamental law of the land. From 1789 to date there have been more than 2,000 resolutions proposing approximately 3,000 amendments to the Constitution. Between 1804 and 1860 these proposals averaged only about seven each year. Since 1889 this number increased to an average of about 30 a year, while in the Sixty-seventh Congress there were 103; in the Sixty-eighth Congress there were 87, and in the Sixty-ninth Congress about 60 resolutions proposing various and sundry amendments. These figures tell the story of an unending struggle to preserve the integrity of the Constitution. While some of those resolutions proposed changes that are doubtless needed, affecting the temporary and incidental provisions of the Constitution, many of them reveal the dangerous tendency to change those eternal and bedrock principles which need "no more change than the rules of simple arithmetic." Many of these proposals reflect a dangerous desire to turn from representative government to a pure democracy. A democracy is the only thing of which I can conceive that grows worse as it approaches purity. With her industry almost paralyzed, the morale of her people broken, the respect of leading nations lost; trying to confuse and drag down other peoples in her own muck and mire, Russia stands out to-day as the latest experiment in pure democracy. Let it be said to the credit of the political genius of the American people that of all the vast array of proposals to amend the Constitution only 19 have been adopted within the long span of 138 years of our national life.

ONLY THREE ENEMIES OF OUR CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT

There are but three enemies of the Constitution in the United States. These are ignorance, indifference, and selfishness. The average American inherently respects the Constitution, even though he may not have studied all of its provisions. Like a study of the Bible, 10 minutes study of the Constitution by the most depraved citizen will make of him a better man. The indifferent and ignorant may be aroused and taught, but the self-serving and class interests are dangerous to our ideals and institutions. The great force of a crystalized public opinion has always maintained or destroyed civilization and it will likewise preserve or destroy our Constitution. An enlightened, virile, and patriotic public opinion, therefore, must continue to be the safeguard of this Republic.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF CONSTITUTION SHOULD BE STUDIED

The Constitution of the United States should be made a part of the curriculum of every school in the land. Our youth should be taught not only its simple language, which even the child can understand, but they should learn of its historic background. They should study the lives of its inspired makers, and realize that they were the "greatest architects in governmental structure" in all the history of the world. Behind those closed doors in that great Philadelphia convention hall were men of experience, historians, and scholars of great renown. There were graduates from Princeton, Harvard, Pennsylvania, Columbia, and some who had trained under Blackstone himself, while many had been Members of the Continental Congress. In laying the foundation for the world's last and fairest dream of human liberty truly was it said that those men acted "without the cunning of the politician or the cowardice of the demagogue." They knew the dismal story of Florence and Venice as they crumbled and faded away. They sought to avoid those baneful influences which tore Athens into fragments and conquered imperial Rome. Above all things, they were careful to provide the safeguards of representative government and lasting barriers against a pure democracy. That continuing conflict which began in Philadelphia in 1787; that cause which might fitly be styled "A Republic v. A Pure Democracy" is still on trial before the bar of American civilization.

THINK ON THESE THINGS

The time has come for the American people to renew their faith in our form of representative government and consecrate themselves to the preservation of its fundamental principles. The mind and conscience of our States must be quickened to their high duties and responsibilities if we are to preserve intact the integrity of State governments.

Avoiding the doctrine that the Constitution is too sacred to be amended in any of its parts, the thoughtful citizenship of this country must see to it that only those changes are made which are in harmony with the original purposes of that great document. Let us bear in mind the Biblical injunction: "Remove not the ancient landmarks which thy fathers have set."

It is refreshing that in recent years campaigns in behalf of the Constitution have been waged and warnings sounded against the tendencies to centralize the powers of government. The President in his Arlington address said: "We may wonder that it is necessary to reiterate and defend the fundamentals of our Government, yet the principles of government have the same need for reinforcement and support that characterizes the principles of religion." Paul in exhorting the Philippians said: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." If we are to preserve for posterity the ideals and institutions of America, we should follow the advice of the great apostle and think on these things.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Saturday, January 21, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of papers on the Speaker's desk,

Major STEDMAN, of North Carolina, may have 10 minutes in which to address the House on General Forrest, the great Confederate cavalry leader.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that on Saturday, January 21, immediately after reading of the Journal and disposition of papers on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEDMAN] may have leave to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARTICLE BY HON. VICTOR L. BERGER

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER] on the subject of world peace.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I print in the RECORD an article by Hon. VICTOR L. BERGER on "World conditions for peace," which was published in Current History for January as part of a symposium of "Views of American statesmen."

The article is as follows:

WORLD CONDITIONS FOR PEACE

Mr. Steed wants a declaration by the "accredited spokesman" of the United States that if members of the League of Nations should ever take action against an aggressor nation, America would stand by the league.

The "accredited spokesman" can not do it.

TWO REASONS WHY IT CAN NOT BE DONE

Apart from our traditional American policy, from which our country has deviated only once—that is, during the World War—there are two tremendous obstacles in the way: First, the "treaty" of Versailles, which is a pact of hate and perpetuates hate, and to which we can not become a party, and, second, the competition for the world's markets is bound to create serious dissension between Great Britain and America within a generation, unless there is a strong Socialist Party in our country similar to the Labor Party in England. Diplomatic declarations are worse than useless.

To begin with, by promulgating the "world Monroe doctrine" that Mr. Steed suggests, we would in fact guarantee the "status quo post bellum"—guarantee the condition created by the pact of Versailles, which our Senate rejected.

Mr. Steed virtually wants us to underwrite the decisions of the League of Nations in which we have neither seat nor voice, according to a solemn referendum of our people. Underwrite only the righteous decisions, of course. But undoubtedly the decisions that Great Britain favors will always be "righteous" since this declaration is to be made at the behest of England, which has six seats in the League of Nations. The other side will always be the aggressor. We know history.

UNITED STATES TO BE WORLD CONSTABLE

And the United States is to act the part of a world constable. A peaceable constable, but—we know history. That constable is apt to turn into a highwayman.

The so-called treaty of Versailles now serves as the "legal" basis of all the transactions of Europe. The pact of Versailles is the "world's charter" and the League of Nations was simply created in Versailles as an instrument of the pact. Ask Clemenceau, Lloyd George, Poincaire, etc.

This pact of Versailles, which is the quintessence of 1,000 years of European hatreds and jealousies, is at the bottom of all the troubles of Europe, including the troubles of England, which are far more serious than the world knows. Why should America indorse it by standing behind the decisions of the League of Nations?

Until that infamous pact is scrapped Europe can have no peace and England no prosperity. And it makes not a particle of difference what kind of a new theory the President of the United States might promulgate at this time or any other time.

As to the troubles which are certain to arise between Great Britain and America on account of the competition for the world's markets—more later.

NATIONS MUST PAY PRICE FOR SUPREME CRIME AGAINST CIVILIZATION

Let us but clearly understand that the European nations—and particularly England—are paying the price for the World War. Great Britain can not expect to take part with extraordinary stupidity in the greatest crime against civilization without having to pay for it. The price may be England's position as a world empire, and it may be less. That depends on England's wisdom or England's luck. But England must pay the price. All of Europe has to pay the price. And even America is beginning to pay. Ask our farmers.

AMOUNT OF THE BIG BUTCHER BILL ANALYZED

And here is the bill:

According to the best statistics obtainable, the World War cost 30,000,000 lives and $400,000,000,000 in property.

In order to give some idea of what this means, just let me illustrate it in the following:

With that amount we could have built a $2,500 house and furnished this house with $1,000 worth of furniture and placed it on 5 acres of land worth $100 an acre and given all this to each and every family in the United States of America, Canada, Australia, England, Wales, Ireland, Scotland, France, Belgium, Germany, and Russia.

After doing this there would be enough money left to give each city of 200,000 inhabitants and over in all the countries named a $5,000,000 library, a $5,000,000 hospital, and a $10,000,000 university.

And then out of the balance we could still have sufficient money to set aside a sum at 5 per cent interest which would pay for all time to come a $1,000 yearly salarly for each of an army of 125,000 teachers, and in addition to this to pay the same salary to each of an army of 125,000 nurses.

And, after having done all this, we could still have enough left out of our $400,000,000,000 to buy up all of France and Belgium and everything of value that France and Belgium possess; that is, every French and Belgian farm, home, factory, church, railroad, street car—in fact, everything of value in those two countries in 1914.

For it must be remembered that the total valuation of France in 1914, according to French official figures, was $62,000,000,000.

The total of Belgium, according to Belgian official figures, was in the neighborhood of $12,000,000,000. This means a total valuation of the two countries in 1914 of less than $75,000,000,000.

In other words, the price which the leaders and statesmen of the entente, including the "statesmen" of the United States, made the people of the world pay for the victory over Germany, was equal to the value of five countries like France, plus five countries like Belgium.

WHY ENGLAND JOINED THE "CRUSADE"

And all this was done in order to preserve Great Britain's preponderance in the world's trade and to make France the foremost military power in the world's history—limited only by her terrific indebtedness and inability to borrow much more money. Great Britain could have prevented the war, but Great Britain, jealous of Germany's progress, joined the "crusade."

The most cruel part of the World War was not the ordeal of battle, nor the want which the German people especially had to suffer during the fighting, because they were surrounded by an iron ring. The most cruel part was the hunger blockade after the war, for six months after the armistice had been signed. And in that beastly and inhuman blockade not only Great Britain but also the United States took part.

Hundreds of thousands of Germans—mainly old people, women, and children—perished. This was one of the most dastardly and cruel acts of the Wilson administration. It was accomplished after Germany had laid down her arms on the so-called 14 points. These "14 points," however, were never even mentioned at the peace negotiations at Versailles.

THE ROBBER PACT OF VERSAILLES

And the results of that treaty of Versailles?

The Allies, and especially France, took everything Germany possessed not only in war material, machinery, and rolling stock but also horses, cows, etc.

The Reparation Commission established "reparations" regardless of any promises made in the armistice, and fixed no definite sum which Germany is to pay.

This peace of Versailles divided up 15,000,000 Germans among the hostile neighbors like sheep to be slaughtered. Are we to become a party to this?

Central Europe was Balkanized. The Allies took all the German colonies.

A number of new countries were founded, all of them satellites of France, each of them with a big standing army organized by Frenchmen.

The peace of Versailles helped to build up a monster Frankenstein in militaristic France and a number of smaller Frankensteins of the same kind in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Rumania.

GERMANY'S PAUPER LABOR DANGER TO WORLD

On the other hand, the Germans, a nation which a few years ago was the foremost in the world in power, civilization, learning, art, and commerce, has to-day become a beggar folk. Their very poverty, coupled with the necessity to work cheaply in order to be able to pay the tribute, makes them a peril—German workmen get about one-fourth what American workmen do and less than one-half of the English workmen—and with their talent for organization this cheap German labor has become a danger to the labor of all other industrial nations.

GREAT BRITAIN MAY HAVE TO STAY POOR

As far as the victors are concerned, there is Great Britain standing around with hat in hand, timidly, almost tremblingly—because England is afraid of the French aerial fleet.

That is the only reason why the British Labor Party quietly dropped the scrapping of the treaty of Versailles from its program when MacDonald became Prime Minister.

There are millions of unemployed in England. France, however, up to the present day is not willing to permit Europe to become peaceful again. France is still keeping an army in the Rhine Province, sucking the lifeblood of industrial Germany.

And although England is largely depending on German trade, England is helpless.

So much for Great Britain. Is America to underwrite and perpetuate this condition?

WHAT IS NOW THE GLORY OF FRANCE?

Then there is France, which apparently drew the grand prize of this war. The fact is that France is maintaining the greatest standing army ever known, and is supporting the most elaborate and most military apparatus in history—out of sheer cowardice—since Germany is completely disarmed. It keeps 50,000 men in the Rhine Province alone after leaving the Ruhr district. The Germans, however, must pay for these.

Not only is France maintaining its own costly military establishment, but she has loaned money to Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia, and to Czechoslovakia for the purpose of maintaining their armies and military establishments to assist French aggression whenever France so desires.

Is America to perpetuate this condition also?

DAWES PLAN MAKESHIFT OF INTERNATIONAL BANKERS TO EXPLOIT GERMANY

And then there is the Dawes plan. This is simply an attempt of the international bankers to enforce the impossible pact of Versailles.

France claims she can not pay her debts to the United States, but the bankrupt and starved German people are expected to pay some $35,000,000,000, which the Allies demand to begin with, because they have not set the total sum as yet, and this is more than thirty times as much as victorious Germany demanded of France in 1871.

Neither does the Dawes plan fix the total amount Germany is to pay. It only decides the amount Germany must pay each year for the next five years. The Dawes Commission does not say whether Germany is to pay that tribute for 100 years or for 1,000.

Furthermore, the plan provides that Germany must pay most of her reparations in goods, since the Allies have taken all the gold Germany possessed.

Thus the great problem is, How much goods can France and Belgium and England absorb without putting their own people out of work?

The Dawes plan worked for the first two years, because under the pretext of the plan Germany could borrow money from American bankers to fulfill her obligations during the first two years.

But for how long can Germany go on borrowing money for that purpose?

Only one-half of what the Germans are to pay is raised by taxation. The rest is a mortgage on the railroads and on all the private establishments, factories, mines, shops, etc., in Germany. These the French can sell to the highest bidder—to the capitalists of their own country, or to J. Pierpont Morgan, or to anyone else any time the Germans fall behind. The French Army is ready and Germany is defenseless. France asks for no declaration from the "accredited spokesman of America."

Evidently French and American plutocrats are looking for some pretext to get hold of all the railroads, factories, and mines of Germany. The Dawes Commission may furnish the pretext.

And, on top of it all, the Dawes plan does not set any date when Germany is supposed to have paid her debt.

HOPE THAT SOMETHING WILL HAPPEN

Moreover, there is also the all-important question, How long will the German people be willing to work like the slaves in Egypt or the slaves in old Rome for their foreign masters?

There is only this difference. That the German slaves are permitted to stay in their own country. According to the Dawes plan, they may have to remain in slavery forever.

All of which proves the Dawes plan the most devilish plan of squeezing and stripping a nation ever concocted in the history of the world.

The German Government and German Reichstag accepted this plan. They did so only under compulsion, because the nation was starving and the French bayonets were at the people's throats. It was only accepted with the hope that something would happen in the future that would show Germany the way out. Is the "accredited spokesman" of America to tell the Germans now that they they are to remain Helots forever?

This hope "that something would happen in the future" is evidently also in the minds of the best English statesmen. They see no way of being able to coerce France, which, if it so desired, could lay waste to London, Liverpool, Manchester, and any other English city within three days, as French papers gleefully point out. France possesses to-day the largest and best-equipped aerial fleet in the world.

A WORLD REVOLUTION MAY BE THE OUTCOME

On the other hand, all sensible men, and especially sensible Englishmen, must be aware that if they permit French and American capitalists to enslave 60,000,000 human beings—white human beings and highly intelligent and efficient human beings—in that manner, this would be the first step for enslaving the working class of England and even of France within a short time. A most terrific and bloody revolution, such as the world has never seen before, would sooner or later follow. And this may bring about bolshevism or wipe out the white race in Europe.

Now, this is an appalling situation. It is a danger which is not only facing Europe, of which Germany is a vital part, but our entire civilization.

GERMANY HAD NO CHOICE

And to return to the treaty of Versailles. It is based entirely on the "sole war guilt" of Germany.

The 14 points on which Germany laid down her arms were not even mentioned in Paris when the peace treaty was framed.

Prof. Harry Elmer Barnes, who studied the question of the Versailles treaty and of fixing the guilt of starting the war, says:

"Germany occupied the situation of a prisoner at the bar. And it was a case where the prosecution simply contented itself with the assumption of the guilt of the defendant. It was not required to furnish the proof. Germany was confronted with the alternative of signing the confession at once or having her territory invaded and occupied, with every probability that such an admission would ultimately be extorted from her."

LIE ABOUT GERMAN WAR GUILT GREATEST LIE OF ALL

It is generally admitted to-day, however, by all those who read the documents pertaining to the origin of the war, that the worst of all the innumerable war lies is the horrible lie that Germany was the sole cause of the World War. The pact of Versailles rests upon it.

The disclosures of the secret archives, which were published by the soviets, supplemented later by those from the German and English foreign offices, prove that Germany, instead of having been more guilty than the other powers in starting the World War, was infinitely less guilty than any of them.

In America we were told, however, that Germany, the "mad dog of Europe," had prepared for 44 years to fall upon the entirely unprepared civilized world in order to chew it up.

We entered the war because babies' fingers were cut off in Belgium by the Huns. We Americans went to war to "abolish militarism in the world forever."

But now we are to have our reward!

AMERICA IS TO HELP "TO DETER AN AGGRESSOR"

Now comes Mr. Steed, formerly editor of the London Times and at present editor of the Review of Reviews in London, and says:

"It's a fundamental truth that without the moral support of the United States there can be no certainty of world peace. Should there ever be a 'next war'—which God forbid, for it would probably mean the bolshevization of Europe—it is inconceivable that one side or the other could triumph without the moral backing of America.

"Englishmen used to say 'my country, right or wrong.' They say it no longer—or, at least, a strong and influential body of them understand that for Great Britain to pursue any policy likely to lead to war, or to attempt to use war or the weapon of blockade for the formation of any specific interest, would be to forfeit her title to the respect of mankind and to court the destruction of the British commonwealth of nations. * * *

"Modern Englishmen ask themselves and would fain ask the American people whether at some future time, after due deliberation and uninfluenced by any save purely American considerations, the accredited spokesman of the American people could not declare that the United States abhors aggressive war and that it will never weaken the hands of other nations which may band themselves together for the purpose of deterring an aggressor or compelling him to desist from aggression."

Mr. Steed remembers that when the British Government in 1920 wanted to send troops to help Poland fight Russia the British trade unions declared categorically that they would stop every wheel in England on 24-hours notice.

"LET GEORGE DO IT"

Evidently this is the strong and influential element in Great Britain now that would not go to war, "right or wrong," for their country. These workers want to be shown.

And since, as he explains at the beginning of his article, the League of Nations is failing to secure the peace of the world, in spite of the Locarno agreements, because neither Great Britain nor France, nor any other of the great military or naval powers, seem to be willing to diminish its armaments; and since it is clear that Germany can not remain permanently disarmed in the midst of armed neighbors unless the Germans agree to be the slaves of their neighbors forever; therefore Mr. Steed is willing to let "George do it." And not George V.

(Coburg) but the successor of George Washington in the District of Columbia is to do it—in case that members of the League of Nations should take joint action against an "aggressive nation."

BRITISH DIPLOMATS WOULD ALWAYS SHOW US THE ENEMY

In other words, Mr. Steed proposes that the United States, which by a referendum of the people has refused to join the League of Nations, should underwrite the league and its decisions by a declaration of "the accredited spokesman."

No "accredited spokesman" has a right to make such a declaration. That is fortunate—otherwise we would soon have a chance to repeat our recent experience. We would soon get a chance to fight some "mad dog of Europe" or Asia. We would fight many more "wars to end all wars." The British Tories would always be willing to show us the enemy.

PROFITS NOT IDEALS GOT US INTO THE WAR

Nevertheless, we are told by Mr. Steed that our "idealism" is not quite fully appreciated in Europe, even at the present time. There are still many ingrates in France and England who believe that we went to war because our munition makers and food speculators, who had profiteered to the tune of $7,000,000,000, wanted still more profits. There are some even in America who say that the fiscal agents of the Allies, Morgan & Co., had about a billion and a half coming from the allied governments, which indebtedness was a poor asset, in spite of all the innumerable victories they had won in the American papers every day, until the United States got into the scrap.

The truth is that no "idealism" got us into the World War. It was an incredible war propaganda—propaganda which probably was more thorough in America than in any country on God's earth. Parliament was told that the British Government spent about $500,000,000 during the war for that purpose, with the explanation that this was the best investment England had made. It was.

THE WAR PROPAGANDA IN AMERICA

More money was spent for propaganda in our country than in any other, and for a much longer period, but that was hardly necessary. The same plutocracy interested in getting the country into the war also controls most of the newspapers and controls the schools, churches, theaters, cinemas, and all means of communication and publicity.

Idealism? All that these propaganda agencies—including the myriads of four-minute speakers—accomplished was to awaken a certain mob spirit ready to murder and lynch. That spirit still prevails.

Of course, some young men volunteered—not very many—for what they called patriotic reasons.

In a sort of a hazy way they believed they were defending their country and their homes, lest "the Kaiser would come over and take all our money away."

MOST OF THEM ARE NOW DEBAMBOOZLED

But that kind of a story could not be repeated in our country for a generation to come—not even in order to enforce a decision of the League of Nations.

These young men are so disillusioned now that they would not even fight to keep up the Polish corridor through Germany or to hold the Tyrol for Italy, although the League of Nations is guaranteeing these and many other things. In fact, most of our soldiers realize to-day that they have been "bamboozled" much worse than "that old Presbyterian" in the White House.

A proclamation such as Mr. Steed suggests would raise a tremendous outcry against that President and his party about meddling again in Europe.

LET EUROPE UNITE ON ECONOMIC LINES

If Europe wants to have peace, Europe must scrap the pact of Versailles and get together on reasonable political and economic lines. The best method would be the formation of a United States of Europe, framed after the pattern of Switzerland, where Germans, Frenchmen, and Italians live together peaceably and happily.

Or if that can not be accomplished as yet, let them unite in two or three large economic units. These could get together again on many international, political, and economic questions.

That's the only solution. A "world Monroe doctrine" would not only add to our troubles but also to the troubles of Europe. Just ask Mexico or Nicaragua.

FOOD, RAW MATERIAL, AND TRADE ARE MAIN CAUSES

And now as to the other reason, the probability of difficulties with Great Britain.

The causes of modern war, and especially also of the World War, are clear to any observer. Most countries of Europe are limited territorially and are densely populated. The food that can be raised is insufficient to support the large population, and the natural resources can not supply the requirements of the industries. This is obviously the case in Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Belgium, and some other countries.

From this condition rises the rivalry for acquisition of foreign colonies, the efforts to defend and extend the oversea possessions and the policies of militarism and navalism. For many centuries sea power meant world power.

NATIONALISTIC HATREDS AND PAST HISTORIES ARE THE OTHER CAUSES

Add to this the memories of previous wars. There were 23 wars between France and Germany in 300 years. The French invaded Germany nineteen times and the Teutons retaliated four times. Add also the national hatreds and the thoughts of revenge—the policies of the "balance of power" in Europe, which was Great Britain's aim for centuries—the secret intrigues of diplomats—the fears and suspicions and megalomanias bred and fed and spread by the vicious nationalistic press in all nations—Pan Slavism, Pan Germanism, Pan Gallicism, and Brittania that must rule the waves—and the powerful armament and munition interests that reap rich harvests out of war—and there we have the sinister background.

No American declaration could make any change in these historical factors.

CAPITALIST SYSTEM INEVITABLY BREEDS IMPERIALISM

But deep at the bottom of modern struggles lie even more fundamental causes—causes rooted in the very nature of capitalist production.

Under the present system the wages received by the workers of any industrialized nation are insufficient to enable them to buy back with their wages what they have produced. The employing class makes a profit on their labor—and must make a profit in order to carry on business. Thus a surplus of products accumulates. The capitalist class, being small in number, can not consume all of the surplus. This surplus must be exported to foreign markets.

Moreover, in every industrialized nation—which to-day means every western civilized nation—it becomes increasingly difficult for the capitalists to reinvest their accumulated profits to advantage in their own country. These capitalists are constantly forced to look for new fields of profitable investment.

Thus capitalism inevitably leads to imperialism. This in turn brings about vast armaments and big navies. And sooner or later it brings war—not only to subjugate backward nations but also to destroy competitors.

Great Britain has been, so far, very successful in destroying competitors for the world market. Great Britain has annihilated the sea power of Spain, France, Holland, and Germany. Who is to be next?

MUSSOLINI MAY ALSO TRY IT

Of course, reactionary governments sometimes also deliberately plunge countries into war for the purpose of crushing progressive movements by creating "patriotic" excitement. This was evidently the case in Russia, for instance, where the Czar used the issue of Pan Slavism—or the world rule of the Slavic race—in an effort to hold down the Russian revolutionists. That is the reason why the "little white father" was so willing to make the plunge. Mussolini may try a similar stunt.

By the way, the only good that resulted from the World War was the dethronement of the Hohenzollerns, Hapsburgs, and Romanoffs—although all of this might have been brought about without a world cataclysm.

SOCIALISTS PREDICTED COMING OF WORLD WAR

At any rate, for more than half a century before the World War socialist writers and speakers warned the world of the impending tragedy, but the warning went unheeded. It is even possible that the capitalist world, constituted as it is, could not heed the warning without undergoing a thorough change, which capitalism fears.

Thus the World War came in spite of the warnings and protests of the socialists, and in spite of the personal desires of many of the capitalists themselves.

AMERICA NOW GREAT BRITAIN'S COMPETITOR

But the same elements and forces are still at work. Germany is crushed. But business is business still. Germany's place in world politics and also in the world markets is rapidly being taken by the United States of America. We are now Great Britain's most powerful competitor.

The statistics issued by our Department of Commerce tell a vivid story.

If the people shall remain blind to the terrible lessons of the World War and continue as they did with war pacts, secret alliances, declarations by "accredited spokesmen," leagues of nations, balances of power, etc., we may have a repetition of the disaster. In other words, if the main causes that brought on the World War—the causes that brought England into the World War—are left to operate, then this World War was surely not the last war.

Then it was only the first of a series of wars, each of them more terrible, more tragic than the one before. And the result may not even be bolshevism, it may be the wiping out of the white civilization and possibly of the white race.

THE NEXT "MAD DOG" WILL PROBABLY CHEW UP THE BRITISH EMPIRE

If England should determine to uphold its rule of the seven seas and its final control of the world's markets—as the Tories want England to do—by insisting on keeping up a larger navy than any other country, then, undoubtedly, England may also fight. And it will get its allies wherever it can; even in Asia. But most certainly England will not be able to "Copenhagen" its next adversary. The next "mad dog" will probably chew up the British Empire.

And so long as these causes continue to operate any underwriting by the United States of any of these leagues or alliances can help nothing. Any declaration may simply furnish additional pretexts.

And that is absolutely unnecessary, because there always will be pretexts aplenty for a war when one is wanted. And as inventions and science are put to the service of militarism the wars will become more horrible.

SOCIALIST PARTIES A BLESSING

Socialism would have no such problems, of course. And even socialistic governments under the present form of society could readily find a solution. This is one of the reasons why even a big socialist party is a blessing to any civilized country, and would be a blessing to America.

I understand, however, that we can not abolish capitalism overnight. Any such attempt would only bring more misery.

And we do not have a Socialist Party commensurate with the size and importance of the country in the United States to-day, although there are such parties in Great Britain, Germany, Austria, and the Scandinavian countries.

MY PROPOSITION

Therefore this is my proposition:

Scrap the pact of Versailles and all the other pacts dictated by war, hatred, and hell.

Let the representatives of all the civilized nations of the world be assembled in a great world conference for the purpose of undoing, as far as possible, the evil effects of the World War and prevent its repetition.

WIPE SLATE CLEAN OF ALL DEBTS AND INDEMNITIES

Let us wipe the slate clean of all the war debts and indemnities. Germany by this time has paid about one hundred times as much as she should have paid. The reparation claim is a barefaced fraud. Allied cannons did as much damage as did German guns.

SELF-DETERMINATION FOR MINORITIES

Have referendums in all the various countries where there are strong minorities—under the rule of foreign governments. Let such people themselves decide whether they want to stay under that foreign rule. Give them their independence if demanded by two-thirds of the inhabitants of any contiguous district that borders on a nationality of their own.

ABOLISH ECONOMIC BARRIERS

Wipe out the economic obstacles, border lines, and tariffs all over Europe. America is a continent and a world of its own. Have absolute free exchange of production in Europe. Take in Russia also, if Russia is willing to come. If America troubles Europe by an eccentric high tariff, let a united Europe put up the same kind of a tariff against America. We are bright and will soon learn.

AN INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS AND AN INTERNATIONAL COURT

Have an international congress, with certain well understood legislative powers over international affairs. And establish a genuine international court to construe these international laws. America ought to join in that.

USE ONLY ECONOMIC PRESSURE TO ENFORCE DECISIONS

Appoint special commissions of neutrals to consider international disputes as they may arise. Such decisions to be enforced, if necessary, by economic pressure without resort to arms.

INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF STRATEGIC WATERWAYS

Have international control of strategic waterways, such as the Dardanelles, the Straits of Gibraltar, and also the Suez, Kiel, and Panama Canals.

ASSURE FREEDOM OF THE SEAS

Have absolute neutrality and freedom of the seven seas. Divide up the colonies among the great European nations. We do not need any. In order to make all of this possible there must be as complete and universal a disarmament as necessary. And it ought to be brought about as speedily as possible.

PROHIBIT EXPORTATION OF WAR MATERIALS

And by all means let us have absolute prohibition of exportation of arms, war equipment, and food supplies for war purposes from one country to another.

Some of these propositions may look Utopian. But they are not. All of them are practicable.

If these steps are taken there can be no doubt that wars will be a thing of the past, at least within the white race.

As a primary measure, however, as the "conditio sine qua non"—the pact of Versailles must be scrapped. Otherwise "the next war," which God forbid, will mean the bolshevization of Europe.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 4

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That for the purpose of interpreting the meaning of the tariff act of 1922 with respect to imported broken rice, "broken rice" shall include only rice which falls within the class "Brewers' milled rice," as defined in the United States standards for milled rice as promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The message also announced that the Presiding Officer had appointed Mr. SMOOT and Mr. SIMMONS members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Treasury Department.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9136) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CHINDBLOM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum of $113,000 is hereby appropriated out of the principal funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, the sum of $48,000 of said amount for the benefit of the Ute Mountain (formerly Navajo Springs) Band of said Indians in Colorado, and the sum of $35,000 of said amount for the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, and the sum of $30,000 of said amount for the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, which sums shall be charged to said bands, and the Secretary of the Interior is also authorized to withdraw from the Treasury the accrued interest to and including June 30, 1928, on the funds of the said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians appropriated under the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L. p. 934), and to expend or distribute the same for the purpose of administering the property of and promoting self-support among the said Indians, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress, on the first Monday in December, 1929, a detailed statement as to all moneys expended as provided for herein: Provided further, That none of the funds in this paragraph shall be expended on road construction unless, wherever practicable, preference shall be given to Indians in the employment of labor on all roads constructed from the sums herein appropriated from the funds of the Confederated Bands of Utes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 65, line 23, after the word "prescribe," strike out the language down to and including the word "herein," on line 2, page 66.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, that simply strikes out the requirement for a report of expenditures. They are reported in the Budget, and another report does not seem to be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, since I am on my feet I ask unanimous consent to return to page 17, line 23, in order to make a correction. The appropriation for the year 1928 is referred to and it should be 1927.

Mr. EDWARDS. What is the request? I could not hear.

Mr. CRAMTON. In the draft of the bill the appropriation for 1928 is referred to and it should be 1927.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 23, strike out "1928" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1927."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boise project, Idaho: For continuation of construction, Payette and Arrowrock divisions, $400,000: Provided, That of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this project for the fiscal year 1927 there is reappropriated for operation and maintenance, Payette division, $17,000; for investigations, examination and surveys, Payette division, $18,000; for continuation of construction, Arrowrock and Payette divisions, $75,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to correct the text, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 76, line 8, after the word "Payette," strike out "and Arrowrock divisions" and insert in lieu thereof the word "division."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Riverton project, Wyoming: For operation and maintenance, $30,000; continuation of construction under force account, $400,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1928, which is hereby reappropriated: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 from the power revenues shall be available during the fiscal year 1929 for the operation and maintenance of the commercial system; in all, $430,000.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question with reference to a paragraph on page 80 concerning the Riverton project in Wyoming. I note that the amount is reduced about one-half from that which was reported by the Budget, and I would be pleased to have a word from the chairman with reference to that reduction, and whether it might reasonably be expected to be carried in the next bill, inasmuch as it is not included in this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, possibly a word about the Riverton project would be of interest. That is an important project and involves altogether a large expenditure. Some time ago what was known as the pavilion division was constructed. Settlement of that division has been slow and unsatisfactory. Then construction was commenced on the pilot division, principally the pilot canal, opening lands nearer the railroad. Congress made a large appropriation for that work. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Reclamation went on the project some two or three years ago in the course of that work, and the Secretary of the Interior was so unfavorably impressed that he ordered the work stopped. Since that time construction of the project further has been a matter of some controversy here. Last year the department reversed its attitude and recommended that the construction of the Pilot Division be resumed, and the Budget recommended, in the deficiency appropriation bill that failed last year, an item of something like $500,000.

The majority of this subcommittee went over the project late in September and made some study for two days of its problems, and were more favorably impressed by its possibilities than we had been before. We were impressed, certainly, with the fact that the portion of the project already constructed can not be expected to develop without the further construction of the pilot division. While we were there we were assured that construction of the project beyond the pilot division would not be desired or asked for until there was a reasonable settlement of the pavilion and pilot divisions. Furthermore, we initiated negotiations while we were there which resulted, through the activity of our colleague, Mr. WINTER, and the governor of the State, Governor Emerson, in assurances of the construction of a branch of the railroad into this project as soon as our development becomes an actuality. Also, we have assurances from the beet-sugar companies of the construction of a beet-sugar factory to serve this district, following the development that may be anticipated.

For all of these reasons the committee was satisfied that the work should continue and the pilot division be constructed. That pilot division construction is to cost approximately $1,000,000, or just a trifle more than that. The deficiency item that was submitted in the deficiency bill last year, which failed, was submitted again by the Budget in the deficiency bill that just went through, and by the deficiency appropriation subcommittee was referred to our subcommittee, so that we had before us the two Budget estimates, each for approximately a half million dollars, a total of something over a million dollars for construction of these projects. These items for construction are immediately available. The information that we have on the ground, and since, all goes to the effect that something like a half million dollars is all that can be economically expended in one construction season. Therefore there seems no compelling reason, no substantial reason, for giving an appropriation for a million dollars. The project will be just as well off. Its construction will advance just as rapidly if the further appropriation is given a year from now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will ask recognition in my own right. I can understand, with the experience which they have had and the disappointment which they suffered before when construction was under way and was suspended, that the people there may well view the future with some uncertainty. I think, however, they may rest entirely satisfied with what we here report. This bill gives a cash appropriation of $400,000 and a reappropriation of $177,000 from the old unexpended balance, and an appropriation of power revenues.

It will give them for construction of the pilot canal something over $500,000, something more than the Budget estimate that was in our bill. Inasmuch as the department after further investigation has, for two successive years, recommended the completion of the construction of the pilot canal, and inasmuch as the Budget has for two successive years recommended it, and inasmuch as our committee after examination on the ground recommends this appropriation, and the report of the Committee on Appropriations indicates that a similar appropriation may be expected to follow it the next year, as the committee report says—

It is to be expected that a similar appropriation will be made in the 1930 bill, permitting completion of the pilot canal in the calendar year 1929—

the people in that vicinity may well feel satisfied as to what may be expected for next year. While the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. WINTER] knows that I can not vouch for the action of Congress any more than he can, if as much, yet I can say that my own personal opinion is that there is no question about the appropriation of the amount remaining being made a year from now, so that that work can be completed in the calendar year 1929.

Now, that is the action of Congress. What action may be taken by the Interior Department is, of course, another question. But I have no doubt but that since they have now studied the problem they will proceed with the work.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WINTER. I simply want to say that the explanation of the chairman is clear, and I think it has made manifest the disposition of himself and his subcommittee toward the final completion of this project. I thank the chairman for the statement he has made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations to be made by the Secretary of the Interior through the Bureau of Reclamation to obtain necessary information to determine how arid and semiarid, swamp, and cut-over timberlands in any of the States of the United States may be best developed, as authorized by subsection R, section 4, second deficiency act, fiscal year 1924, approved December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 704), including the general objects of expenditure enumerated and permitted in the fourth paragraph in this act under the caption "Bureau of Reclamation," and including mileage for motor cycles and automobiles at the rates and under the conditions authorized herein in connection with the reclamation projects, $15,000.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I do so for the purpose of getting some information. Last year, when this bill was up for consideration, I moved to strike out $15,000 and make it $50,000, because I was assured by the department that it would take $50,000 to complete the work. At the beginning of this session, to my surprise, this $50,000 was not included in the deficiency bill. I took the matter up with the department, and my understanding was that the subcommittee would place it in the bill and that the amount would be $50,000 for this work when the bill came before us. I now find that $15,000 is recommended for the reclamation and investigation of arid and semiarid and swamp and cut-over timberland for every State in the Union as sufficient to complete that work. I have before me the statement of the chairman of this subcommittee which I would like to read, because the report says "any State in the Union." I doubt seriously if my friend from Michigan really meant this. He says:

Mr. CRAMTON. On page 365 there is an old item with reference to arid, semiarid, swamp, and cut-over timberlands in the South. At the time you anticipated that there would be in the deficiency bill a further appropriation, but it was transferred to this bill, and I wish you would prepare a statement with reference to it. The item as submitted by the Budget for the deficiency bill reads:

"For investigations to be made by the Secretary of the Interior through the Bureau of Reclamation to obtain necessary information to determine how arid and semiarid, swamp, and cut-over timberlands in any of the States of the United States may be best developed, as authorized by subsection R, section 4, second deficiency act, fiscal year 1924, approved December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. p. 704), including the general objects of expenditure enumerated and permitted under the second paragraph in this act under the caption 'Bureau of Reclamation,' and including mileage for motor cycles and automobiles at the rates and under the conditions authorized herein in connection with the reclamation projects, $50,000."

Please set forth clearly the progress that has been made, the theory on which the department has been working, what you have done, and what you plan to do next year. For instance, I wish you would give some expression to this consideration. I have had the theory ever since this particular work started that it was leading up to the expenditure of Federal funds for the development of swamp lands and cut-over timberlands in the South, and I have been inclined to oppose it because of that fact. In Michigan we are not going to ask the Federal Government to furnish money to develop cut-over lands, and I think that these other States can very well take care of their own projects along those lines. I notice from the papers that within the last few days there has been a meeting held by Representatives from the South, and that they are declaring for a policy of Federal financing of this program. A number of very distinguished Members of Congress from the South have assured me that that would not be the case. Now, if you have any information as to the policy on which this project is proceeding, whether it is going to be one for Federal financing, or whether it is simply for Federal guidance and cooperative investigation, to be financed locally, I would be glad to have it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The fact is that I referred to the expenditure of Federal funds for the development of swamp and cut-over lands, whether north or south, east or west.

Mr. SEARS OF FLORIDA. I understood the gentleman said "the South."

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not believe in any development in the States by the use of Federal funds for that purpose.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I thank the gentleman for his statement. It is not so reported in the hearings. On page 80 and page 81 of the bill is the item—

For investigation necessary to determine the economic conditions and financial feasibility of new projects and for investigations and other activities relating to the reorganization, settlement of lands, and final adjustments of existing projects, including examination of soils, classification of land, land-settlement activities—and so forth, there is an appropriation of $75,000. I did not oppose that. I think I have been big enough and broad enough since I have been a Member of Congress to support propositions of that kind regardless of any sections of the country. These propositions should stand on their own merit. If I felt that the $75,000 would not be sufficient, I would move to increase that to $100,000.

With the information now before me, I am frank to confess to the committee that the expenditure of only $15,000 for any State in the Union would be practically wasted, and if you distributed it among the States of Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, it would be wasted. Last year I referred the matter to the department, and I am satisfied in a letter to me it is stated that practically nothing could be accomplished with a fund of $15,000 except the compilation of data and information. I was assured such was true.

We have some of the richest lands in the world in my State, and that land should be investigated for the benefit of the people of Michigan and other States represented by members of the committee, and then they would know how to utilize that rich land. We know something of that ourselves. I hope some Member of this House will offer an amendment to make it $50,000, because I believe Doctor Mead will not squander that money, and I am satisfied that when the bill goes to the Senate the Senate will increase the amount to $50,000 if we do not. I am satisfied that the convention which is to meet on the 28th of this month, the great leaders of thought in the States, will indorse the increase of the amount to $50,000. I would like to hear from some of my colleagues on that subject.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman's request for information, I may say that the work in question is quite different from the $75,000 item referred to on page 81. This last item is for economic and other investigations confined almost entirely to projects where we now have millions of dollars invested and where we are trying to get the money back. The appropriation comes out of the reclamation fund chargeable to these projects that will be investigated. The particular item now before us comes out of the Treasury of the United States.

In the course of an investigation leading up to a proposal to adopt a new policy that we have not heretofore carried on, that investigation has been under way for some time. It has progressed so far that on page 936 of the hearings you will find a resolution of a recent conference of these leaders of thought whom the gentleman mentions—the conference on southern reclamation by its committee on legislation; that they have reached the point in their investigation where they have figured out how much money they want to ask Congress for.

The investigation of the work, so far as the expenditure of Federal funds is concerned, has been carried on by the Bureau of Reclamation, in the Department of the Interior, and when Doctor Mead was before the subcommittee a memorandum which is inserted at the top of page 936 of the hearings states that—

In North Carolina, Florida, and Alabama these investigations have not been completed. The appropriation of $15,000 requested will be sufficient to accomplish this result and complete a final report on the work in all seven States. No further appropriations for investigations of this character seem to be necessary unless some constructive action is decided upon and legislation fixing the extent of the Federal Government's participation is enacted by Congress.

When I read that, I was not entirely sure that the doctor and I fully understood the situation. I was not sure that he was aware of the item for $50,000, because he spoke of $15,000; so I wrote him, and as a result I received a letter from him of date December 28, 1927, in which he says:

The $50,000 item for further investigation, to which you refer in the second paragraph of your letter, may be omitted. The item of $15,000, which I believe is at present in the appropriation bill as it is before your committee, however, will be necessary to close up the investigations we have in progress, particularly in Florida, North Carolina, and Alabama, and then prepare the report for transmission to Congress. I trust this item of $15,000 will be left intact.

Of course, he was laboring under a slight misunderstanding. There was only one item before us, and that was the item of $50,000. There was no item of $15,000. So we cut the $50,000 to $15,000 and gave him all we understand he needs, and I think that is all the gentleman can expect us to do.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Whose statement is that?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is the statement of Doctor Mead, the Commissioner of Reclamation.

Mr. EDWARDS. And he states that $15,000 is all that is necessary until the work is actually authorized by law.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is it exactly, and we are guided entirely by that statement.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. That is to carry on the work now in hand, which is a mere casual investigation. I am not betraying any confidence when I tell you they want more than $15,000, but they were afraid they will not even get the $15,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am sure Doctor Mead was not suffering from such a difficulty.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. He would like to carry on a further examination if the newspaper reports are correct.

Mr. CRAMTON. I put the matter fully before him and asked him whether he needed the full $50,000 or whether he could do without the $50,000.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. He said he would not object if I could have the amount increased here.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HARE. I understand that the chairman contends $15,000 will be sufficient for the investigation until a constructive policy is determined upon.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the statement of the Commissioner of Reclamation.

Mr. HARE. I would like to know whether the committee has made any plans for a definite future constructive policy for reclamation.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is not within the jurisdiction of my committee. That is a legislative proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$15,000," in line 11, page 83, and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUSBY: Page 83, line 11, strike out "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, it seems that this particular item for investigations to be made by the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Reclamation, to obtain necessary information to determine how arid, swamp, and cut-over lands may be developed has been pretty well discussed by the chairman of the subcommittee, by my colleague from Florida [Mr. SEARS], and others. I happen to recall the very strong sentiment that was expressed by the department that is handling this proposition on the occasion of the getting together of the reclamation advocates last year, the occasion which has been referred to. At that time all were of the opinion that the $50,000 which was being provided for in the deficiency appropriation bill was as little as we ought to have for that work.

There is a turn of affairs in the southern section of our country which makes it imperative that we give some attention to the development of that section as well as to taking in the arid lands in the western part of the United States. I am sure every one is familiar with the reclamation fund that has been used for a great many years in the Western States, and used freely by them because it was set apart for them. The chairman of the committee now tells us we are using $75,000 out of the Treasury for the purpose of investigating conditions surrounding those projects so that we may protect the money that has gone out of the reclamation fund.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me, and I am not sure whether he does or not. The $75,000 comes out of the reclamation fund.

Mr. BUSBY. Well, it is a matter of bookkeeping as to which one of the items you would place it in.

Mr. LEAVITT. Is the gentleman familiar with the manner in which the reclamation fund is created?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes; I know that exactly.

Mr. LEAVITT. It is not created out of funds from the Treasury but is created mostly from the sale of public lands and oil leases in the West.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not created entirely from the sale of public lands in the West. Alabama has contributed to that fund, and I believe the State of Texas and a great many other States.

Mr. LEAVITT. But the bulk of it comes from the Western States.

Mr. BUSBY. The fund is made up of moneys derived from the sale of public lands and public properties, the proceeds of which go into this reclamation fund.

Mr. ARENTZ. Most of the money comes from oil leases.

Mr. LEAVITT. The sums received from sources other than western oil leases and the sale of public lands are very small and almost immaterial. Of course, I do not say that in opposition to the gentleman's position.

Mr. BUSBY. I am not in opposition to the great work that is being done in the West, but the proposition I want to present here is the necessity for an increase in this amount if we are to carry out the original program outlined by Doctor Mead and according to his own statements and his own words last year. Now, undoubtedly the department has altered its attitude on this proposition, but I believe an increase in this amount is necessary and should be provided in order to properly carry forward this particular class of work. Everyone knows that the South has made very few calls on the Government and has rarely asked for consideration at the hands of the Government from a financial standpoint.

If I did not feel this proposition was absolutely a necessary proposition and a valuable one to the country, and would bring material returns for the amount of attention and investment placed in it, I would not stand before you and advocate the adoption of the amendment I am offering here to-day.

With the progress of the South and the attention the country is turning to the South, especially from the dairying standpoint, you can not understand just what that means by the simple statement, unless you can see the northern and eastern dairying interests coming into that section, and with this condition confronting us, I feel we should be at least reasonably lenient toward the development of this particular proposition, and the gathering of information along the lines provided for in this fund. For this reason I have offered the amendment and ask its adoption.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to express an intelligent opinion as to whether $15,000 is enough or the amendment offered by the gentleman who has just spoken should be adopted.

It was my privilege during the holiday recess of the Congress to make a trip to Florida with a number of the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, who went there in an official capacity to make an investigation of a proposed harbor improvement on the east coast in the vicinity of Fort Lauderdale and Hollywood Beach.

I am sure the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors were very favorably impressed with the situation as they saw it. Several days were devoted to looking over that territory, including some long trips, hundreds of miles, through the Everglades and up to and around Lake Okeechobee. My understanding is that if the harbor improvements shall be made, then provision will be made for connecting the harbor with the waters of this lake as they flow through the Everglades to the ocean. This will lead to a development of the Everglades, an area of approximately 4,000,000 acres, in portions of which there has already been wonderful development.

This was my first visit to Florida and what I saw there was a revelation to me, and little as I am able to estimate and form an intelligent opinion of the prospects of development, it seems to me the opinion is justified that with and as a result of the harbor project there will eventually, soon, I believe, be large growth and improvement, large industrial and agricultural development. We saw farms, great gardens, where vegetables were growing; we saw sugar plantations where sugar cane is grown, the most wonderful growth that any of us had ever seen, the ground being wonderfully fertile and analyses showing that the cane has a higher sugar content than any other cane grown in the world.

As to agriculture, everything there seems to lend itself to progress and development, and as the chairman of the subcommittee having charge of this bill says that no more money should be spent for these investigations than is in this bill provided until some project is determined or some development decided upon by the Congress, my impression is there will be a substantial harbor improvement down there. If this harbor is constructed and maintained the canal between Lake Okeechobee and the ocean will be opened. There will be commerce passing through the Everglades between the lake and the ocean, and there will be industrial and agricultural development. Everything indicates that the country will lend itself to this development, and if there is to be early harbor construction, as I trust there will be—if this prospect of harbor improvement is such a project as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] speaks of—then it may be time now to make an increase of this appropriation.

I am simply giving the committee the benefit of what I saw on the occasion of my pleasant visit to Florida, wishing simply to express firmly the opinion that it is a section of country to which the Federal Government should direct its attention and do everything that can becomingly and consistently be done. If more money than this bill carries is needed, it ought to be forthcoming and generously supplied.

The CHAIRMAN [Mr. LEHLBACH]. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three additional minutes in which to answer questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for three additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. Does not the gentleman realize that the very class of investigation we are asking for here must precede any intelligent action by Congress on a plan or program for reclamation or carrying forward the great work that the gentleman refers to in that particular section?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors went to Florida only to look over the harbor proposition. I have said if that improvement is to be made, and when it is made, perhaps coincident with its construction, there may be a call for further investigation and further activities by our Government. There is abundant opportunity for it, and I trust that at the right time, I do not know whether it is now or not, suitable appropriations should be made.

Mr. BUSBY. Of course, the gentleman realizes that about six or seven Southern States must rely on this small amount of $15,000 for further investigations. If I understand the gentleman correctly, he was only in one portion of Florida.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. If other conditions are like that throughout these Southern States, then does not the gentleman feel that more than $15,000 should be provided with which to furnish us information regarding the situation, so that we can intelligently proceed with our legislation?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I wished to speak only of what I saw and the impressions I gained from traveling hundreds of miles over the fine roads in the portion of Florida I was privileged to see.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit, I ask unanimous consent that after 20 minutes of debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto that debate thereupon be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this question of reclamation as it affects the southern sections has been one that has interested me for a number of years. In the Sixty-sixth Congress I introduced a comprehensive bill involving a policy along these lines. The reason that I thought the provisions of that bill were justified was because of my study of the western reclamation problem. Congress has been very liberal to you gentlemen of the West on your schemes out there, for it has appropriated and spent, in effect, out of the public funds to date at least $150,000,000 on western reclamation problems.

I have always believed that basically the whole proposition was unsound, because it did not provide that the Government should receive a reasonable amount of interest for the development of these resources. In addition to that a great many mistakes have been made in the selection of feasible sites which have proved disastrous to the Government and the occupants, as you all know.

Here you carry $75,000 in this bill for new projects. That is the language of the bill—feasible new projects in the West.

Mr. CRAMTON. The greater part of it is in trying to figure out how we will get the money out of the projects we have already inaugurated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then you ought to change the language in the bill. If it is not for new projects the language ought to be changed, for that is what it says.

Here is the attitude of the Representatives from the South on this question. There are millions of acres of swamp and overflowed land much more feasible for reclamation than the arid lands in the West, and our position has been since I started the fight that as a matter of equity one section of the country—and it ought not to be a sectional question—should have the same right as the other. The problem is one of national scope and authority. That is the reason I introduced the bill and had extensive hearings on it. President Harding in a message said that justice and wisdom should recognize our claims in the South for reclamation.

You say that this does not come out of the Treasury. It is true that it comes out of the reclamation fund, but if it had not been provided with receipts from public lands which have been converted into this fund they would have gone into the Treasury of the United States.

I realize that under the statement of the Commissioner of Reclamation the chairman of the subcommittee is well fortified in his objection to increasing the appropriation. But I do say—and I did not expect to say anything on the subject—that we have in the South, and you gentlemen who have been there know it—infinitely more inviting fields for real reclamation, at an infinitely cheaper cost, than you have in many western propositions, and especially along the lines of new projects that you are going into. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the item under consideration is for the purpose of further investigations looking to a policy of national reclamation. As has been suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], to be justified as a national policy reclamation must be extended to apply to all portions of the country. I think this object is one that promotes national progress and national development.

NATIONAL RECLAMATION

The Federal Government did not embark upon a general policy of reclamation until 1902. Prior to that date irrigation had been carried on by the several States and by development companies.

It is estimated that under the policy inaugurated by the United States about 25 years ago some 2,000,000 acres of land in the West have been reclaimed. The appropriations aggregate approximately $200,000,000 for the reclamation of arid lands in the Western States, including the State of Texas. It is well to remember that only one-tenth of the land irrigated in the United States has been financed by the Federal Government.

This is not a new subject in the United States. Many Commonwealths owe their agricultural progress to the policy of reclamation. The State of Utah started such a policy more than 50 years ago. Something like 20,000,000 acres of land in the arid and semiarid regions of the United States have been reclaimed.

The Federal Government does not make a donation for reclamation. The Government lends the money for the construction of the project; and the cost of the project, without interest, is to be repaid by the settler. The item of interest is an important one. In order to obtain Federal legislation for reclamation it was at first insisted that some Federal interest must be involved. Originally the reclamation of public lands was provided for. However, Federal reclamation has been extended to private ownership, and many projects have been authorized where no public lands are involved.

It has been estimated that the item of interest consumes about 40 to 50 per cent of the cost of drainage improvements in the South. Reclamation in the South means drainage. If the Federal Government were to extend the same aid in promoting reclamation by drainage that it does in promoting reclamation by irrigation, it would save about 50 per cent of the cost of improvement.

In 1902 a revolving fund for reclamation was created from the sale of public lands after that date in the 16 arid and semiarid Western States. Subsequently, in 1907, the State of Texas was included in the reclamation program. There are no public lands in Texas, and it can not, therefore, now be said that reclamation only obtains in those States where public lands have been sold since the passage of the act.

Large areas of public lands have been sold in the States of the South as well as in the Western States since 1902. The idea was that in the West the proceeds of public lands sold would be utilized to reclaim and develop the remaining public lands in the Western States. It was argued that in 1850 the Government had donated swamp and overflow lands to the several States in an effort to promote the internal improvement of the country and to provide for the reclamation of swamp lands. The fact is, however, that the legislation donating the swamp and overflow lands was extended to all the States of the Union. Mississippi received about 3,288,418 acres, while Minnesota received 4,677,649 acres, Michigan 5,656,000 acres, California 2,188,547 acres, and Wisconsin 3,251,830 acres.

It is also the fact that upon the admission of the Western States larger areas of public lands were donated to them than were donated to the Southern States or to the other older States of the Union at the time of their admission.

Reclamation is, therefore, being promoted by appropriations from the Federal Treasury. It is interesting to recall that even in the arid and semiarid Western States drainage is an essential part of reclamation. If the water is permitted to remain on the lands without any system of drainage, large areas become useless. Reclamation in the West means applying water to the lands; it also means taking water off of the lands after it has served its purpose. So reclamation in the South means taking water off the lands so that they can be utilized for cultivation. I repeat that reclamation in the South is synonymous with drainage.

There is just as good reason as a matter of public welfare and under the Constitution of the United States for extending the policy of reclamation to other sections of the country as there was for inaugurating it for the benefit of the Western States.

Thus far reclamation has been confined to the West. In many instances appropriations should not have been made, and the improvement should not have been done. There have been mistakes. The policy ought not be entirely abandoned because of mistakes that have been made. Mistakes are made in all lines of human endeavor. The need for efficient reclamation, however, remains and must be recognized.

Reclamation is as old as recorded history. Egypt developed agriculture by irrigation from the Nile. Farming was made possible in Mesopotamia by irrigation from the Euphrates. Reclamation by irrigation is to-day practiced in Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australia.

RECLAMATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF SWAMP AND CUT-OVER LANDS IN THE SOUTH

Congress recognizes that reclamation should be national and accordingly for the fiscal year 1919 appropriated $100,000 for the investigation of lands outside of the then existing reclamation projects in other sections of the country. Valuable information covering every State in the Union was accumulated, particularly in the South.

In 1924 Congress authorized an appropriation of $100,000 to obtain information as to how arid, semiarid, swamp, and cut-over land might best be developed. Appropriations of $15,000 were made by each of the sessions of the Sixty-ninth Congress. These appropriations were utilized to good effect by Dr. Elwood Mead, the efficient Director of Reclamation.

There is a widespread movement throughout the South for the conservation of the soil and for the reclamation of abandoned farm lands, as well as for the reclamation of swamp and cut-over lands. From every standpoint and from every angle there is just as good reason for Federal aid in drainage of swamp lands as there is for irrigation of arid lands.

The Federal interest is just as valid in one case as in the other. As a matter of fact, swamp and cut-over land can be reclaimed in the South at very much less expense than water can be applied to arid lands in the West. We are not denying the right of Federal aid for efficient reclamation. However, the policy of reclamation must be extended to embrace the entire country or it must be restricted. In many parts of the North, reclamation means drainage; in other parts of the country, reclamation means the restoration of worn-out and depleted lands. It may be more profitable to reclaim much of the nonproductive and depleted lands by growing timber thereon rather than by cultivation. Agriculture would be promoted by the cultivation of fertile lands and by utilizing the less fertile lands for growing timber in many instances. Reclamation means conserving areas that are already reclaimed, rather than extending and enlarging the cultivated areas. It would be more economical to aid the drainage districts of the South in caring for their indebtedness in constructing their drainage systems than it would be to encourage and assist in the development of other lands for cultivation. This is true in many cases and in many parts of the country.

PROBLEM OF INCREASING POPULATION

It is frequently said that other lands ought not to be brought into cultivation. We have had Federal reclamation for 25 years. There are about 1,242,750 acres on Government irrigation projects, and in 1925 they produced crops valued at $96,100,000. The total number of acres farmed in the United States during that year aggregated 372,000,000, with crops valued at $13,031,000,000. But a small percentage of the cultivated lands in the country is irrigated; only a small percentage is drained.

However, population is increasing at the rate of about 30,000,000 every 25 years. We can afford to ignore the warning of those who say there is danger of overproduction. We must look to the future as we provide for the present. It has been well said:

> Our last frontier has disappeared. The country must live within itself, and it is the part of good husbandry to protect our capital investment and restore by artificial means that which has been lost because of the demands of immediate necessity.

AIDED AND DIRECTED SETTLEMENT

There has been a revolution in the fundamental principles underlying reclamation. An evolution in the policy is easily observed. In all sections of the country the underlying principles that must govern all successful reclamation is aided and directed settlement. We have the experience of 25 years to profit by. Our mistakes in reclamation will be too expensive if we do not profit by them. The Bureau of Reclamation is aware that some projects have failed. There is much criticism of the Federal reclamation policy. Some $25,000,000 advanced by the Federal Government have been charged off. Reclamation has not been profitable in many cases. The Federal Treasury has lost, in many instances.

We have come to know that reclamation means building up a community as well as the construction of dams and reservoirs. The original idea of building dams and constructing canals is not enough. Turning water on dry land is not reclamation. We have come to know that the failure to recognize other important elements is responsible for the criticism directed against the general policy. The defect in the policy was not in the method of construction, but it was in the matter of settlement. The failure is attributable to the neglect of the human element. It takes men to build a community. Settlers must be given a chance; they must have credit. There must be a community life. Settlements can not be in isolated units, but must be in groups to secure social and economic advantages.

Markets must be studied and a definite program of crops adopted. Transportation must be considered. Above all, the method should be for ownership rather than for tenancy. The policy of reclamation must not be perverted to enable the land speculator to use Government funds for his own profit. Reclamation must be for the public benefit. It must be utilized to make the country more attractive and rural life more desirable. It must be utilized for the Nation and not merely for one section of the country. Both the need and the justification are as important in one case as in the other.

NATIONAL, NOT SECTIONAL

Reclamation is a part of the internal improvement policy of the United States. It distributes production; it distributes population; it creates national wealth; it provides for transportation; it furnishes markets for factories; it makes business for railroads; and it contributes to the health and wealth of the community and the Nation.

The abandonment of farms is a menace confronting the American people to-day. There are fewer farms in Mississippi to-day than there were five years ago. It is primarily an agricultural State. One of the great problems confronting the Nation is to make the countryside more attractive. The pioneer days are past. The farmer will no longer endure the hardships of life on the frontier. Life in the towns and cities is too attractive; work in the factories is too remunerative.

But agriculture is the basic industry of the country, and the Nation for its own well-being must protect agriculture as a part of the general policy for the public welfare. The Government must promote country life in the United States. Cities may multiply, but the citizens must be clothed and fed. The population of the Nation is increasing and we must provide for a larger population with each succeeding year. The West is entitled to reclamation, so is the North and the East and the South.

The South is a particularly inviting field. Its advantages are numerous. We have greater rainfall, more fertile soil, and a longer growing season. The cost of drainage in the South is far less than the cost of irrigation in the West. In the South we are closer to the markets of the country. It is not necessary to transport the products of the South over the transcontinental railroads.

Then, too, the South is facing the dawn of a new day. The eyes of the Nation are turning toward the superior advantages and marvelous resources of the South. Cotton mills are being moved from New England to the Carolinas; factories are being moved from Massachusetts to Tennessee.

The people of the South are determined to cooperate in every way possible to promote the reclamation of the entire country and in formulating a broad policy for reclamation. If Federal aid is extended for bringing into cultivation more acres in the arid West, it must be extended to aid in draining the swamp lands of the South. Aided and directed settlement is proclaimed as the salvation of the South. It must be practiced in the reclamation of the West. The theory must be converted into practice. One policy ought not to be advanced for the South and another for the West. We stand for the policy. We do not want exceptions made in any case. We ask that the same relief be given all sections.

If California can point with pride to her colonization policy for rural development, North Carolina can point with equal pride to the more successful and interesting experiments in land settlements that have been conducted by such public-spirited men as Mr. Hugh McRae of that State.

The modern and better idea is that in reclamation and rural development the fundamental element is not necessarily the reclamation of more land, but the building of homes; not the construction of more improvements, but the establishment of communities with facilities for social, business, and intellectual life that are attractive to worth-while citizens.

The South is ready to cooperate with the other States of the Union in promoting a national policy and a national program of reclamation. Without such a program reclamation can not succeed. The successful policy can not be sectional; it must be national.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I hope that the amendment offered by my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY] will prevail. My mind goes back to the meeting about a year ago of those who were interested in reclamation work. They came here from all over the southeastern section of our country. Their expenses to Washington probably meant a great deal more than the small amount of money obtained. But it showed the willingness on their part to present the question to the Congress of the United States and to the country showing what they were interested in and willing to do on their part. It seems to me that the appropriation requested here of $50,000 when you spread it over seven or eight States is a very modest request.

The Nation is looking toward the South for its future field of fortune, expansion, business development, and industrial and economic evolution; all eyes are turned on the South, and on Florida in particular. This vast area of fertile and profitable land can and will be soon profitably utilized and developed.

Fifteen thousand dollars is about $2,000 a State, yet we vote millions of dollars here for dams and other projects, which all mean for the development of our Nation. I vote for any section of my country that needs relief. When you want the arid lands reclaimed, I am willing to vote for it if the request is reasonable. Our Nation is well only when all sections of it are prosperous, happy, and are well cared for.

I appreciate the statement just made by my colleague from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] when he told about his recent Florida trip, and of the great advantages and possibilities of Florida. Florida has already expended some $11,000,000 in the reclamation of the Everglades. We have millions of acres of cut-over lands in the South on which we need scientific advice with respect to their development, and the whole Nation as well as the South needs this section reclaimed and developed. Probably Doctor Mead needed the $50,000, but perhaps he wanted more for some other cause and feared he would jeopardize his causes if $50,000 was asked for the South. The South and the Nation would benefit by the additional appropriation, and I hope the amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I trust I shall not be misunderstood by not offering the amendment. I simply want to get some information, and I want to repeat that if we appropriate only $15,000 you will not be able to scratch the soil in Florida with an investigation, much less any of the other States. If you want to waste that amount, go ahead and do it. I say to you as a Representative in Congress that the department is anxious to increase this sum. I want to thank my good friend from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] for the nice things that he said about our State, and in reply will state that we already have a harbor of 25 feet at Miami. The members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are familiar with that, and we are going to have some other harbors. I now have before the committee two surveys for cross-State canals that will go through that rich section.

I sincerely trust that this House will not play with the proposition, but will give the department enough money so that a real investigation may be made, and that your friends who desire to purchase down there, if any so desire, will have real information and not fictitious or false or partial information, as they have had in the past. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman has read the hearings. Doctor Mead, in charge of this work, came before the subcommittee and said that this is all the money that we need. The subcommittee allowed him this sum of $15,000. Does the gentleman think it is fair to the committee, when no one appeared before the committee, to attempt to justify this increase now, when the head of the Reclamation Service says that $15,000 is all that is needed? In fairness to the Subcommittee on Appropriations and to the full Committee on Appropriations, if more money is needed for this particular work, ought not you gentlemen who are now speaking in favor of this amendment to appear before the Committee on Appropriations and give it an opportunity to hear what you have to say in justification of your proposed amendment?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Did not Doctor Mead make so many other requests that he had to be modest in this work?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I shall take a minute or two to complete what I have to say. We have here 1,196 pages of hearings.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I gave the gentleman two minutes of my time in which to fight this thing and I did it to save time. The gentleman asks why we did not come before the subcommittee. I will answer that by saying that we did not because we never dreamed it would be cut down.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman thinks there is pressing need for an increase in this appropriation, in fairness to the regular procedure of the House, does not the gentleman think that when the bill goes to the Senate he ought to go before the Committee on Appropriations and seek there to thoroughly justify this proposed amendment so that the matter may be fairly considered and not come here on the floor of the House, when there has been no consideration given to this extra amount by the committee, and ask that this be done at this time? The gentleman knows that we have been trying to assure everyone that there shall not be any logrolling and that every item in this bill has had a fair consideration. I am sure that no man will criticize any member of the subcommittee when he reads these hearings and finds that Doctor Mead has said that $15,000 is all that he wants.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. When my friend gets to the Senate, I shall go to him, but until that time I shall not follow such tactics as he suggests.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this subcommittee does not know any politics or any section of the country. All sections are treated alike on their merits, and both sides of the aisle are treated alike. That is that.

There has been an investigation under way for two or three years leading up to some definite program of development of those swamp lands in the South, and they have come to the point where they have adopted resolutions as to what they want, and a bill has been introduced providing that money shall be taken out of the Treasury to improve those swamp lands. That investigation has been under the direction of the Commissioner of Reclamation, and he said to our committee that he did not need more than $15,000, and he did not think more than that should be expended until Congress had provided a definite program by legislation.

The wisdom of that program which is proposed is not involved now. The only question involved now is whether, when the head of a responsible bureau who has been carrying the work along says to the Committee on Appropriations that $15,000 is all he needs, we shall thrust upon him $50,000. That is the only question that is involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUSBY) there were—ayes 32, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations herein made shall be available for payment of the costs of packing, crating, and transportation (including drayage) of personal effects of employees upon permanent change of station, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior;

Total, United States Geological Survey, $1,758,080.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEAVITT. In the debate a few moments ago a statement was made in regard to the sources of the reclamation fund. I said that practically all of the fund was derived from the western public-land States. Since that time I have been able to secure the figures. Since the passage of the act of June 17, 1902, the reclamation act, there has been paid into the reclamation fund from oil leases, the sale of public lands, mineral leases, and to a small extent from the water power act, about $140,000,000. Of that amount, Alabama had contributed $46,000 and Louisiana about $10,000, practically all from coal leases. That is all that has been paid into the reclamation fund from any States in the Union except the public-land States of the West.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Grand Canyon National Park, Ariz.: For administration, protection, and maintenance, including not exceeding $2,100 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $113,460; for construction of physical improvements, $55,540, including not exceeding $45,700 for the construction of buildings, of which not exceeding $1,700 shall be available for a checking station, $18,000 for an administration building, and $20,000 for a hospital building and equipment; in all, $169,000. The amount of $1,800 for the construction of a caretaker's cabin at sewage-purification plant, appropriated for the current fiscal year, is made immediately available for the construction of such employee's cottage in the Grand Canyon village site.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TEMPLE: Page 90, line 10, after the word "site" at the end of the line, insert the following: "Funds herein appropriated shall be available for the maintenance of a road within the following-described area, which is hereby added to and made a part of the Grand Canyon National Park: Beginning at the corner common to sections 14, 15, 22, and 23, township 30 north, range 4 east, Gila and Salt River meridian; thence west along the section line between sections 15 and 22, a distance of 950 feet; thence south a distance of 1,320 feet to a point on the south line of the north tier of forties of said section 22; thence east a distance of 1,610 feet; thence north a distance of 1,320 feet to a point on the line between sections 14 and 23; thence west along said section line, a distance of 660 feet to the place of beginning, containing an area of 48.79 acres more or less: Provided, That livestock permitted to graze in adjoining national forest areas shall be allowed to drift across the land described herein to private land north thereof within the park."

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, perhaps an explanation of this amendment is desirable. It provides that the funds appropriated in this paragraph may be used for the maintenance of a road within an area which now lies outside the park but which under this amendment would lie inside the park. That area is a little less than 49 acres. A commission, of which I was a member, was appointed about two years ago to adjust the boundary between the Grand Canyon National Park and the adjacent national forest. We considered then the advisability of taking in this small area but found that by doing so we would entirely surround the property of a private owner. In order to avoid closing him in he agreed that the road might cross his land. Now he seeks considerable compensation for permitting the road to cross his property. Of course, it is desirable always that the roads pass only over park land. If we add this 49-acre piece we can maintain the road entirely on park lands.

To preserve this man's rights we provide that his cattle, pastured on adjacent forest lands, may be permitted to cross from the land of the national forest to his private land, though by doing so they cross through a narrow portion of the national park. I have consulted the Representative from the State of Arizona, where this man lives, and, if I may say so, contrary to the rules, with the Senator from Arizona, who was formerly a Member of this House, and I find it is satisfactory to them. That is all I care to say unless there are some questions to be asked.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand also that the gentleman has spoken with the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands about this?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes; and with the Congressman from Arizona.

Mr. CRAMTON. In view of the fact that the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands has been consulted, I shall have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yosemite National Park, Calif.: For administration, protection, and maintenance, including not exceeding $5,350 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, not exceeding $3,200 for maintenance of that part of the Wawona Road in the Sierra National Forest between the park boundary 2 miles north of Wawona and the park boundary near the Mariposa Grove of Big Trees, and not exceeding $2,000 for maintenance of the road in the Stanislaus National Forest connecting the Tioga Road with the Hetch Hetchy Road near Mather Station, and including necessary expenses of a comprehensive study of the problems relating to the use and enjoyment of the Yosemite National Park, and the preservation of its natural features, $290,000; for construction of physical improvements, $95,000, of which not to exceed $65,000 shall be available for water supply and camp-ground facilities at Glacier Point, $8,000 for two comfort stations and two community buildings at the winter camp grounds, and $6,000 for two employees' cottages; in all, $385,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 95, line 2, strike out "$95,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$97,250," and in line 6, after the word "cottages," insert "for the construction of a building to cover the sewage-disposal tank."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, under date of January 9 the Budget has submitted a supplemental estimate of $2,250. In connection with it they say:

A report submitted on November 14, 1927, subsequent to the preparation of the Budget for 1929, by a sanitary engineer of the United States Public Health Service, on the operation of the sewage-treatment plant installed in 1921 at Yosemite National Park, shows that because of the large increase in the volume of sewage treated the odors from the plant have become so intolerable during the summer season as to require the early adoption of measures for the abatement of this nuisance. To remedy the situation, it is proposed to cover the septic tanks with a reasonably tight inclosure which can be opened and closed at such times as will render the odors relatively unobjectionable.

So the item that accompanies this statement from the Budget is the amendment that I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to correct the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Strike out the figures "$385,000" and insert "$387,250."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction, etc., of roads and trails: For the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks and monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, including the roads from Glacier Park Station through the Blackfeet Indian Reservation to various points in the boundary line of the Glacier National Park and the international boundary, and the Grand Canyon Highway from the National Old Trails Highway to the south boundary of the Grand Canyon National Park, as authorized by the act approved June 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 423), to be immediately available and remain available until expended, $2,500,000, which includes $1,500,000, the remainder of the amount of the contractual authorization contained in the act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1928, approved January 12, 1927: Provided, That not to exceed $9,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1929: Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of the Interior may also approve projects, incur obligations, and enter into contracts for additional work not exceeding a total of $4,000,000, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof, and appropriations hereafter made for the construction of roads in national parks and monuments shall be considered available for the purpose of discharging the obligations so created.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 9, line 24, after the colon insert: "Provided further, That balances of prior appropriations for construction of roads and trails in national parks shall remain available until expended."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the appropriations in this bill are so available and it had been supposed that appropriations made in prior years were likewise to be treated as available until expended, but it has been ruled by the Comptroller General that appropriations made for certain years heretofore were not. That complicates the situation, and it is rather difficult to unscramble the matter of bookkeeping. Therefore this amendment is suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES

TERRITORY OF ALASKA

Governor, $7,000; secretary, $3,600; in all, $10,600.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I take it that after a law has become effective it is the province of the Appropriations Committee to provide appropriations for the carrying out of such a law and to see that the appropriations are economically and properly administered. Naturally the Appropriations Committee has nothing to do with general policies. While I have been critical of conditions in Alaska for several years, it is not my purpose to object to any appropriations; in fact, I expect to vote for these appropriations, and I suspect they will be voted for unanimously; but I do wish to point out, very briefly, where, it seems to me, Congress itself, and perhaps governmental officials, have been lacking in their duty toward that Territorial possession.

In the President's message to Congress at the opening of the Sixty-ninth Congress we find this sentence—

The time has come for careful investigation of the expenditures and success of the laws by which we have undertaken to administer our outlying possessions. A very large amount of money is being expended for administration in Alaska. It appears so far out of proportion to the number of inhabitants and the amount of production as to indicate cause for thorough investigation.

This attitude of President Coolidge has been corroborated in numerous statements by the Secretary of the Interior. The Committee on Territories, as far back as 1923, made an intensive study of Alaska and recommended legislation which has remained dormant ever since. Therefore I say the day has come when we should not accept these items in appropriation bills in a pro forma manner and put them through as we do here. But, rather, we ought to go to the heart of such a subject as this and make an intensive study of the matters involved so as to change the system.

I did not intend to make any remarks in connection with this matter, as I have expressed my views very freely as to conditions in Alaska in previous Congresses, but night before last I happened to pick up a copy of the current number of the Atlantic Monthly and there I find a very exhaustive and dispassionate discussion, written by a man who probably knows more about conditions in Alaska—he did in the early days at any rate—than any other citizen except, perhaps, the Delegate from the Territory of Alaska. I do not wish to plagiarize from that article—written by Col. Wilds P. Richardson, of the United States Army, retired, and for whom the longest trail in Alaska is named—but I want to summarize the statements he makes in that article and call them to the attention of this House. He says this:

After 60 years of ownership, assertions about the Territory should be supported by a substantial showing of developed resources, wealth, and population.

He argues, in effect, that an inventory should be taken and that we should know something about where we stand in regard to Alaska. He says:

But the predicted inrushing of people following the construction of the railroad, the fast-growing cities, the population running into seven figures have not come true.

Further than that he calls attention to many other things we should do with respect to Alaska. You will hear, undoubtedly, an argument from the Delegate in a few moments, if he sees fit to make any reply to the statements I am making, and he will no doubt call your attention to how little it cost us to get Alaska, $7,000,000. In that connection it might be said that we made the Louisiana Purchase and secured Florida very cheap, as dollars and cents go. Colonel Richardson in this article calls attention to the developments in those sections of this country and what has come from them, whereas Alaska has lain dormant.

He goes on to show that the construction of the railroad was, as we all know now, a very serious mistake, and that it was absolutely unjustified by any facts that can be brought before Congress. Some of us who were here at the time the Alaskan Railroad was advocated remember the propaganda that was issued and the methods which were used to put it across. It has involved the expenditure of $70,000,000, and the very able manager of the railroad, Mr. Smith—who had long training with the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and, I believe, is still an official of that company—to-day is gratified to be able to come before the committee of which our honored friend Mr. CRAMTON is chairman and inform us that for the first time the Alaskan Railroad deficit was under $1,000,000. It is costing more than $1,000,000 annually to keep up that road. Colonel Richardson says that that road costs us, if we charge up the interest account and everything of that kind, in the neighborhood of $4,000,000 per year to maintain.

We are chasing rainbows in Alaska. Aside from the fisheries the only real asset they have is down in the southeast corner where an agreement has been made to get out some timber and wood pulp which is fairly accessible. Building a railroad way up there in the interior where there is no population is entirely different. The only customer of any size at the present time of that railroad is a private company using it to deliver ore.

Colonel Richardson goes on to say that the one hope, as he sees it, of an increased population in Alaska is to change our immigration laws and get out propaganda to try to get people over there from the northern countries of Europe—Norway, Sweden, and Finland. I am not sure whether the former countrymen of our distinguished chairman [Mr. CHINDBLOM] would feel like migrating from such countries to northern Alaska; but this is the only type of people you can appeal to to go to Alaska and settle. The Scandinavians are the hardy kind that could withstand the climatic conditions. And even then, the Alaskan land office does not advise any settlers to come unless they can support themselves without going there. Here is what they say:

We do not advise settlers entering upon this land with the idea of getting their living entirely from the soil while improving their property.

There is just one further possibility other than the timber and fisheries, and that is an appeal to the tourists. This is where Colonel Richardson says there is a possibility of making some use of Alaska's property. The natural scenery is unsurpassed. It is marvelous scenery, and for about 10 or 12 weeks in the year, if there were accommodations, we could throw tourists in there by the thousands; but unfortunately, the entire arrangements for the care of people coming there are so limited that in spite of the hundreds of miles of travel one might make, you could more than put every tourist accommodation that is available in Alaska into one hotel along the line of the boardwalk in Atlantic City.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for two additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. In line with the gentleman's remarks, we all know that most of the intellectuals were driven out of Russia and are now camping around in different localities of Europe. What would the gentleman think of our inviting them and offering them some inducements to go to Alaska?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am afraid we would run up against the immigration restrictions of our friend, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

I was just quoting Colonel Richardson as to the feasibility of endeavoring to secure people from these three nations. Very likely the colonel would include Russia as a part of it, and there would be just as much chance of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] agreeing to that sort of an amendment of the immigration law as for any other country.

Mr. DENISON. I would say to the gentleman that the Russians who have been driven out of Russia are the only ones I would be willing to have go to Alaska.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But they will not work.

Mr. DENISON. They would if they went to Alaska.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, we have some intellectuals here in this country that might be utilized. I agree with the gentleman's suggestion, at least, with respect to Alaska as a tourist country, and the gentleman, I am sure, appreciates that the neck of the bottle now is the lack of ocean transportation.

Mr. TREADWAY. Which we were very glad to allow the gentleman to include in his bill last year.

Mr. CRAMTON. Our action last year permitted an appreciable improvement, but it is to be hoped that the companies that are carrying on this work will increase their facilities much more because on that is dependent the tourist traffic to Alaska.

Mr. TREADWAY. Let me add to the gentleman's suggestion that it would not be entirely a question of the people getting up to Alaska, it would be a matter of accommodations for them after they got there. The Government has gone into hotel building at one point, the township of Curry, named after our distinguished Member from California. There is a Government hotel there. If the gentleman intends at any time to advocate construction of hotels under Federal appropriations, that is another question; but unless you have much better accommodations than are available for tourists there now, you can not get money-spending tourists to go up into that country in large numbers or to return for a second visit.

Mr. CRAMTON. May I observe in this connection that as to the park the situation is one that we hope will never call for expensive hotels. We hope the tourists who go to the park will be willing to take quarters a little different from what they get at home, and the development in the park does not need to progress rapidly until we get ocean facilities that will enable tourists to go there.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not arguing with the gentleman. I am making this statement for his information. It is our thought, and I think the policy of the Government, to provide accommodations in the park to keep up with the tourist traffic. When it comes to towns outside, I am sure there will be quarters, although I fear they will not be as comfortable as are maintained in some of the splendid hotels of Massachusetts with which the gentleman is most familiar.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman permit a question, and I want to extend this also to the chairman of the subcommittee. Has any provision been made further than was made last year to increase the transportation facilities to Alaska?

Mr. CRAMTON. The hearings will show that, but the result I may say of the language the committee recommended and to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] was kind enough to withdraw his objection—the result of that authority to the Railroad Administration was materially to increase the facilities, and we hope that they will increase in the future.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there any way that we may increase them? It seems to me the objection raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts can easily be remedied when tourists arrive, for then there will be provision made if the tourists come.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is correct, but you will never get sufficient accommodations, scattered broadcast over that great Territory, to care for any large number, because you can not concentrate them sufficiently to make it a business proposition. The only way I see to extend beyond the camp roadhouse made of logs with paper and canvas partitions in which I spent some time, and similar facilities—the only way you are going to extend accommodations up there is through the same procedure that you took in building the road—take the money out of Uncle Sam's pocket. No business man will go up there as a hotel keeper on any extensive scale.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts devote his energies to creating facilities for tourists to go up there instead of devoting criticism of those who are now up there and trying to do the best they can?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am not in the transportation business. I have agreed to vote for all appropriations you ask for Alaska; but, considering the fact that you have 25,000 white people scattered through the country, I say we are too lavish in expenditures. Take, for instance, the highway item alone. Last year the total highway appropriations are shown to be more than a half million dollars. That is, trails and roads for 25,000 people cost over a half million dollars.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then there is the climate.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes. The highways can only be used for 10 or 12 weeks on account of the snow. A portion of the railroad is built on a moving glacier and has to be reconstructed annually. It is no place for farming. The farm people say in this report that they do not wait for the frost to get out of the ground. They can not wait. Further than that, the other nine months of the year they are buried under avalanches of snow, and six months they are in practical darkness. You can not urge citizens to go to Alaska in order to increase the population. It seems to me that this question ought to be constructively taken up and something done about the statements that have been made by those interested in Alaska and by this last article of Colonel Richardson. You ought to do something besides appropriating millions of dollars in connection with Alaskan affairs. [Applause.]

In his last chapter Colonel Richardson says, "Let Alaska be offered to the traveling, touring, scenery-loving public." In effect, he advocates development for Alaska somewhat similar to that of the Yellowstone National Park, in order to make use of what appears to be Alaska's greatest asset, namely, its scenic beauty and the lure of the wild life still existing there. It seems to me that Colonel Richardson's viewpoint is most sane and practical. Every year predictions are made and much flowery language wasted in prophecies of Alaska's enormous future population. Mr. Chairman, we are chasing rainbows. Why should we not see to it that such practical suggestions of one as familiar with conditions as Colonel Richardson admittedly is are used as a foundation for future legislation? Why is it that the recommendations of the President and the Secretary of the Interior have fallen on fallow ground? No matter how extravagant our appropriations may be or how much interest we may feel in Alaska, we have not the power to change nature. Alaska for 3 months out of 12 can be made an attractive playground for the American tourist, but for the other nine months, when buried in snow, and six months of the nine in darkness, it can never be made an El Dorado for comfort-loving American citizens.

I shall vote for the appropriations recommended in this bill, but I hope the time is not far distant when some practical effort can be made looking to a very material curtailment in these appropriations and a much more reasonable and practical attitude on the part of Congress toward Alaska's future.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Does the gentleman mean to convey to the membership of this House that this railway in Alaska can not be traveled over only four to six weeks each year?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; not the railway, as I believe large sums are expended for snow shoveling, but the use of the highways and trails is limited to a few weeks.

Mr. VESTAL. I left Fairbanks on the 17th day of September and drove out over the Richardson Highway. I had been there a month or six weeks.

Mr. TREADWAY. I said three months.

Mr. VESTAL. I understood the gentleman to say three weeks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Did the gentleman, going into the consideration of the magazine article, form an opinion regarding the proposition of getting Europeans to go to Alaska?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is so apparently contrary to all our immigration provisions that it seems impractical. I think it an excellent suggestion if the people want to come there, and if we can get the immigration authorities to amend the immigration act and allow them to come I should be for it. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How would you keep them there?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman will have to ask the Delegate from Alaska.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The Chairman. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I was much interested in looking over the RECORD this morning to read the discussion in respect to the efficiency of the Pension Bureau, which occurred yesterday. I am much interested in that because I find from official records that Ohio has more pensioners than any other State in the Union—43,881 on July 30, 1927—and more pension money is expended there than in any other State in the Union—$20,700,000 a year; also because of the great pressure upon the office of the Representative from the third district of Ohio, because in that district is concentrated the greatest number of pensioners of any district in the United States, and also of the location there of the central branch of the National Military Home at Dayton, Ohio. Therefore I take a special interest in the matter of this Pension Bureau appropriation.

It is perhaps too late to give it any consideration upon this bill, but I do ask that the Committee on Appropriations next year arrange for a definite survey of the situation in the Pension Office, and I make that suggestion because of what the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations said in respect to the difficulty of ascertaining definitely how many employees are needed there in the course of the year. We now know that the Pension Office is six months or more behind on its work and that it has been behind in its work for more than two years. This causes a great deal of unnecessary work on the part of Members of Congress. We ought to have adequate appropriations for the Pension Bureau, so that it may be able to keep up with its work. I read with interest the complaint of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON], and I agree with him that this bureau should have sufficient money so that they will be able to give proper consideration and reply to the communications of Members of Congress in respect to matters upon which Members have spent considerable time.

If I understand the matter correctly, when the estimates were made up for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, the Pension Commissioner showed a need for $1,190,000 to provide the requisite personnel to take care of the work. A great and unusual burden had been put upon him by the removal of the Pension Office from the old building to the Interior Building. This amount of $1,190,000 was approved by the Budget Commission, but was reduced by the Committee on Appropriations of this House, and the bill when introduced and passed by the House in the last Congress, carried but $1,132,000, or a deficit of $58,000 in what the Pension Commission had testified was required. When the bill went to the Senate, the matter was investigated and the amount of the appropriation raised to $1,190,000, being the amount actually necessary to give the service required under the law. This difference between the House and Senate threw the bill into conference, and the representatives of the Appropriations Committee of the House secured a concession so that the bill as finally passed carried but $1,160,000 for a work which actually required the expenditure of $1,190,000. This means that the personnel of the Pension Bureau must be further cut down, the work retarded, and great additional burdens put upon the Members of Congress who are the recipient of continuous complaints because the Pension Bureau is physically unable, with its force so limited by the appropriation of Congress, to function as it should. I understand upon reliable authority that this year the Pension Commissioner certified that the work of the Pension Bureau would require an appropriation of $1,190,000 in order to function efficiently; that this amount was cut to $1,150,000 before the Budget reached Congress, probably in view of the action of the House committee in the last Congress.

We are now going into another year with the Pension Bureau crippled with insufficient employees, unable to properly fulfill its mission, and with thousands of the most pathetic and appealing cases of the rapidly dying veterans of the Civil War delayed until death must inevitably overtake hundreds of them before action can be had upon their claims which are crowding the Pension Office beyond its capacity to function under the restricted appropriations of the Congress. There are now only about 90,000 Union veterans of the Civil War left to us.

In the name of the veterans of the Civil and Spanish Wars, I protest against this treatment of the Pension Bureau. Because my office has, and has had for years, perhaps, more correspondence with the Pension Bureau than any other office in Congress, I am in a position to judge of the efficiency of its work. I here state that I have found the most energetic and sympathetic attitude in the Commissioner of Pensions and have understood that the delays experienced in correspondence and in action on claims were aggravated by, in fact due entirely to, inadequate personnel, due in turn to restricted appropriations by Congress. The situation in the last year or two has been seriously complicated by the removal of all the pension records and files from the old building to the new, and this alone has thrown back some of the work at least six months.

My experience with the Patent Office leads me to believe that that office is also suffering from niggardly treatment. More liberal appropriations should be made for the Patent Office. The prosperity of this country depends upon every legitimate safeguard being given by the Government to the development of manufacturing and commerce, while every sentiment of loyalty and gratitude requires prompt action from our Pension Bureau on behalf of those who served to defend the country and her institutions in time of need and to whom delay in adjudicating claims is so often equivalent to denial. It being too late now to remedy this matter in the House at this time on the present bill, I hope that a full investigation will be had by the Senate committee and adequate provision made for the work of the bureau, and I trust that the Representatives of this House on any conference committee will see to it that ample funds are provided for this work which is so near to the hearts of our people.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, clerk hire, not to exceed $2,800; janitor service for the governor's office and the executive mansion, not to exceed $2,760; traveling expenses of the governor while absent from the capital on official business, and of the secretary of the Territory while traveling on official business under direction of the governor; rent of executive offices, repair and preservation of governor's house and furniture; for care of grounds and purchase of necessary equipment; stationery, lights, water, and fuel; in all, $14,000, to be expended under the direction of the governor.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 101, line 14, strike out "$2,800" and insert "$3,520."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this does not increase the appropriation in this paragraph, but it increases the allocation available for clerk hire.

In that connection I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which will explain this amendment and the necessity for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 13, 1928.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: In H. R. 9136, entitled "A bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes," which was reported out of the House Committee on Appropriations January 11, 1928, on page 105 there is the following language:

"For incidental and contingent expenses, clerk hire, not to exceed $2,800; janitor service for the governor's office and the executive mansion, not to exceed $2,760; traveling expenses of the governor while absent from the capital on official business, and of the secretary of the Territory while traveling on official business under direction of the governor; rent of executive offices, repair and preservation of governor's house and furniture; for care of grounds and purchase of necessary equipment; stationery, lights, water, and fuel; in all, $14,000, to be expended under the direction of the governor."

The representative of the department at the time of the hearing on the bill suggested (see p. 1146 of the hearings on the bill) that:

"In the appropriation for the present fiscal year for incidental and contingent expenses in the office of the governor, clerk hire is fixed at not to exceed $2,800. The governor is very desirous of increasing this amount to $3,520 in order to give him more money for that purpose. It does not increase the amount of the estimate. The governor in discussing the subject in a letter dated December 10, 1927, stated, among other things, that—

"'In Alaska the secretary to the governor occupies a very responsible position. He is charged with the general supervision of the office, and in the absence of the governor is responsible for proper conduct of the work. The salary paid is not commensurate with salaries for similar positions in the Territory, and if the salary had not been augmented by an appropriation of $720 from the Territorial fund it would be impossible to obtain the services of a competent man, especially in view of the salary increases that have been made throughout the Government service in the past 10 years. A suit is now pending in the district court at Juneau, Alaska, attacking the validity of a Territorial appropriation of $720 which he has been paid in the past, and it is likely that hereafter the Territory will be estopped from making any contribution to the salary of the governor's secretary. He is a Federal employee, and his entire salary should be paid by the Federal Government. I am advised that if the limitation of $2,800 now contained in the appropriation bill is changed, and there are sufficient funds in the appropriation, we may expend for clerical hire up to the amount fixed by Congress. The changing of the limitation in the appropriation bill as suggested will not increase the total appropriation asked for, but will make it necessary for us to rearrange the budget in the governor's office. I believe this can be done, and it is recommended that the limitation of $2,800 be changed so that we may have an authorization for clerical hire not to exceed $3,520.'"

For the reasons above stated I have to request that the bill be amended by striking out the figures "2,800" and inserting in lieu thereof "3,520." This does not increase the appropriation over that provided for in the bill, but allows the governor some latitude in the matter of the salaries to be paid for clerk hire.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Governor, $10,000; secretary, $5,400; in all, $15,400.

For contingent expenses, to be expended by the governor, for stationery, postage, and incidentals, $1,000; private secretary to the governor, $3,000; temporary clerk hire, $500; for traveling expenses of the governor while absent from the capital on official business, $500; in all, $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to have the type in lines 13 and 14, page 108, of the language "temporary clerk hire, $500," changed from italics to roman.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, sundry messages in writing from the President were presented to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed a joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

On January 11, 1928:

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution to continue commissioners in the Court of Claims.

On January 12, 1928:

H. R. 6657. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River near Kettle Falls, Wash.

On January 13, 1928:

H. R. 483. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire certain lands within the District of Columbia to be used as sites for public buildings.

The committee resumed its session.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

The Clerk read as follows:

Legislative expenses: For furniture, light, telephone, stationery, record casings and files, printing and binding, including printing, publications, and binding of the session laws and the house and senate journals, indexing records, postage, ice, water, clerk hire, mileage of members, and incidentals, pay of chaplain, clerk, sergeant at arms, stenographers, typewriters, janitors, and messengers, $30,000: Provided, That the members of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii shall not draw their compensation of $200 or any mileage for an extra session, held in compliance with section 54 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, approved April 30, 1900.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii: Page 108, line 23, strike out the figures "$30,000" and substitute therefor the figures "$50,000"; line 25, strike out "$200" and substitute "$500."

The CHAIRMAN. Consideration will be given to the first amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, according to the organic act, the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii shall have 15 members of the senate and shall have 30 members of the house—45 members in the legislature in all. By further Federal enactment these members of the Hawaiian Legislature shall be paid the sum of $1,000 per session of the legislature, which occurs once every two years. The total sum to pay for the mandatory salaries of these legislators exceeds by $15,000 the sum allowed here for legislative expenses, and besides their statutory salaries, the members are to be paid the sum of 20 cents per mile for traveling expenses involved in attending the session. In 1904, when the first legislature of the Territory met under the organic act, they were allowed the sum of $24,500 by Federal appropriation. They were at that time by statutory Federal enactment allowed the sum of $600 salary. In 1910 the sum allowed for Federal appropriation was raised to $30,000, at which figure it has remained up until the present time, including these estimates. In 1920 the salary of the legislators was raised by Federal enactment from $600 to $1,000, but the total sum has not been changed.

The total expenses of the Territorial legislature have risen from the figures that were covered at that time by the Federal appropriation until at the present time the expenditures of the last legislature totaled $130,000, of which the Territory of Hawaii provided the sum of $100,000.

The legislature at its last session passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress asking that the Federal share of the legislative expenses might be raised an appreciable amount, and the governor of the Territory has suggested the sum of $20,000. I submitted the matter to the Director of the Budget and I have not yet been able to get an answer.

As to the second amendment, on line 25, the sum of $200 is given. By statute the sum was fixed at $500. I think undoubtedly it ought to be corrected and made to conform to the existing statute.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the matter of the contribution to the expenses of Hawaii has been stationary for a number of years. I do not understand that the Delegate from Hawaii has had full opportunity for the Budget or the department to fully consider his claim. The amount proposed in this bill is the same as it has been for many years. I would prefer that the Delegate from Hawaii be given opportunity to present his proposition fully in the make-up of the next Budget rather than to accept the proposition here. I think, therefore, the amendment ought not to be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Delegate from Hawaii.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Hawaii offered another amendment. With reference to that amendment, that is simply to correct the phraseology. It refers to the salary of the members of the legislature, and says they shall not receive salary at certain special sessions—that is, when appropriation bills are considered. The law is changed, and instead of $200 salary it is now $500. The phraseology should be changed as the gentleman suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii: Page 108, line 25, strike out the figures "$200" and substitute the figures "$500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

For support, clothing, and treatment in St. Elizabeths Hospital for the Insane from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, persons charged with or convicted of crimes against the United States who are insane, all persons who have become insane since their entry into the military and naval service of the United States, civilians in the quartermaster's service of the Army, persons transferred from the Canal Zone who have been admitted to the hospital and who are indigent, and beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau, including not exceeding $27,000 for the purchase, exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent, purchasing agent, and general hospital business, and including not to exceed $285,000 for repairs and improvements to buildings and grounds and for additional fire-protection equipment, $913,000, including maintenance and operation of necessary facilities for feeding employees and others (at not less than cost), and the proceeds therefrom shall reimburse the appropriation for the institution; and not exceeding $1,500 of this sum may be expended in the removal of patients to their friends, not exceeding $1,500 in the purchase of such books, periodicals, and newspapers, for which payment may be made in advance, as may be required for the purposes of the hospital and for the medical library, and not exceeding $1,500 for actual and necessary expenses incurred in the apprehension and return to the hospital of escaped patients: Provided, That so much of this sum as may be required shall be available for all necessary expenses in ascertaining the residence of inmates who are not or who cease to be properly chargeable to Federal maintenance in the institution and in returning them to such places of residence: Provided further, That during the fiscal year 1929 the District of Columbia, or any branch of the Government requiring St. Elizabeths Hospital to care for patients for which they are responsible, shall pay by check to the superintendent, upon his written request, either in advance or at the end of each month, all or part of the estimated or actual cost of such maintenance, as the case may be, and bills rendered by the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital in accordance herewith shall not be subject to audit or certification in advance of payment; proper adjustments on the basis of the actual cost of the care of patients paid for in advance shall be made monthly or quarterly, as may be agreed upon between the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital and the District of Columbia government, department, or establishments concerned. All sums paid to the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital for the care of patients that he is authorized by law to receive shall be deposited to the credit on the books of the Treasury Department of the appropriation made for the care and maintenance of the patients at St. Elizabeths Hospital for the year in which the support, clothing, and treatment is provided, and be subject to requisition by the disbursing agent of St. Elizabeths Hospital upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the developments made before the District Committee show conclusively that the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Insane Asylum, Dr. William A. White, is not a proper official to have charge of these 4,000 helpless inmates or to expend annually this vast sum of money which Congress appropriates for it.

He is protected by the Secretary of the Interior, who himself is a psychiatrist and has been in charge of a similar hospital in his State of Colorado in years gone by, and it is a well-known fact that among all such superintendents there is a fellow feeling that they must protect each other. Were it not for this fact Superintendent White could not stay there a day.

I want my colleagues to remember this, because it is important: There are eight departments of the Government now that by a mere order or a scratch of a pen from the chief can confine individuals to this insane asylum, with no hearing in court, with no chance of redress, and no opportunity of getting out. How much longer is Congress going to let that condition prevail? How much longer time is to elapse before Congress or its committees can frame and pass legislation that will stop it?

I maintain that there is not a department of Government that ought to have that power. When you send a person to a penitentiary he is sent for a term. When his term expires he goes free, and the world is prone to forget the crime he has committed and to give him a new start and a new chance. Aye, when a prisoner is sent to a penitentiary for life he still has a chance of being pardoned or having his term commuted and getting out and starting over again. But when you incarcerate a person in an insane asylum his future is ended. If he is able to go into the court by habeas corpus proceedings he may be able to get out, but the fact that he has been charged with insanity and has been in an insane asylum follows him all the rest of his days. It is something he can not get rid of.

I maintain that this Congress ought to pass a law providing that no department of the Government can send any person to an insane asylum until that person has been adjudged insane by a competent court, by a jury of his peers, in accordance with proper law.

The present law says that these six departments can send them there without a judgment of court, without a hearing in court, without their day in court and the opportunity of testifying in their own behalf and having other witnesses testify. But it presupposes that within 90 days the superintendent of St. Elizabeths will give them a hearing in court. Yet I have in my files case after case in that institution where they have been kept there a dozen years and have not been given a hearing or a chance to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Does the gentleman mean to assert that there have been inmates in this institution for a dozen years without a hearing in court?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Since I have been bringing this matter to the attention of Congress there have been sixty-odd inmates who have gone into the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on habeas corpus writs and presented their cases to a jury of their peers and have been discharged as sane by the verdict of the jury and judgment of the court, which forced the superintendent to discharge them.

I wonder if you know that your Secretary of the Navy can by the mere scratch of a pen send any man in the Naval Establishment to St. Elizabeths at will. There is no power that keeps him from it, and the law authorizes him to do it. He has the authority of law to do it. Is that a power that he should be possessed of? Do you know that your Secretary of War can do it? Do you know that the Commissioners of this District can do it? It ought to be stopped. It is not a responsibility that rests alone upon my shoulders. It is a responsibility that rests upon the shoulders of every Congressman and Senator in the Seventieth Congress. Is it so that I am the only one here concerned about this matter?

I went before a naval board and I had your Secretary of the Navy force Doctor White to bring a young naval officer from Georgia before a board. I conducted the examination and I showed that he was sane.

Let me quote you some of the evidence I offered in his behalf:

SWORN TESTIMONY OF DR. F. A. MOSS, HEAD OF THE DEPARTMENT OF PSYCHOLOGY, GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY

I have studied Lieut. Commander Harry T. Sandlin almost daily for the last two weeks, during which time I have spent more than 50 hours going into all phases of his case. In addition to making a careful study of his history and giving him the usual subjective examination made by psychiatrists, I gave him a number of objective standardized tests with the hope of putting his case, in part at least, on a fact rather than an opinion basis.

In all the objective tests Mr. Sandlin's showing was that of a person with a normal mind. On the Army alpha test he made a score of 151, which is above the average for the officers in the Army and is 10 points above the average for university students. On the will temperament test his reactions were all within the normal limits. In his test for judgment in abstract relationships he shows a superior performance. His poorest showing was on the test calling for judgment in dealing with other people, and this defect, in my opinion, accounts in no small part for his present difficulty; for it is this shortcoming which often causes him to evaluate improperly the way others will interpret his acts. This, however, is not an indication of insanity, for some of our most intelligent people do not get along very well with others.

With the hope of discovering some objective evidence of his so-called "complexes," I gave him the association test devised for this purpose and described by Dr. William A. White on page 352 of his Outlines of Psychiatry. This test gave absolutely no indication either of an inferiority complex or of an abnormal attachment to his mother.

His neurological examination was negative. His family history showed no taint of insanity, and is what I would term a fairly normal family history. His previous personal history shows little of value in explaining the present difficulty, which really began with his first marriage and culminated in the recent court action in Boston.

At first I found it considerably difficult to reconcile some of his letters and telegrams with my other findings, but it is my opinion that the explanation of his present difficulty can be traced to his unfortunate marriage with the first Mrs. Sandlin. From the history it would seem that she is more or less of an adventuress, and that when they had separated she deliberately set about to cause him all the embarrassment possible. After several years of prolonged worry and uncertainty he finally succeeded in settling with her by paying her the lump sum of $6,400. But one and a half years after the final payment he found himself suddenly ordered to Boston to face a new action brought by her. At this time he had married again, and had two young children to support. His judgment in sending the letters and telegrams to Secretary Wilbur was admittedly poor, but I believe that these can be attributed in no small part to the excessive annoyance to which he was subjected by the tantalizing tactics of the first Mrs. Sandlin, who was aided by certain unsuspecting naval officers.

In spite of all the harassing that he has gone through he manifests at present no clear-cut symptoms of paranoia or of a paranoid state. He has no hallucinations, either visual or auditory. He neither has at present, nor has he had, any "hypochondriacal ideas." No period of "marked emotional depression," no clear-cut "ideas of reference," no "delusions of explanation," and no greatly exaggerated feelings either of "self-importance" or of "inferiority" can be found in the case. I was unable to find any "retrospective falsifications of memory," and I am positive that he has no mental deterioration. Yet all these, according to White's Outlines of Psychiatry, pages 109–113, are the signs by which one may recognize paranoia and paranoid states. His natural resentment at being thrown into an asylum for the insane might be termed an indication of a delusion of persecution, but his explanation of this feeling is too clear cut to permit one to believe that he has a definite, systematized delusional system, for he manifests no resentment at any particular individual, and only attributes his misfortune to the system under which he is working. Such being his attitude, I see nothing to make me suspect that he may do violence to any one, nor can I find any other reason for his being locked up in an asylum for the insane.

F. A. MOSS,
Head Department of Psychology,
George Washington University.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 21st day of January, 1927.
[SEAL.] JAMES M. WOODWARD,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Then Dr. S. F. Acree, being duly sworn, testified before said naval board as follows:

My name is S. F. Acree, am 51 years old, entered State University of Texas in 1892, graduated there with degree of Bachelor of Science, then went to University of Chicago, where I received a Ph. D. in 1902, then spent 1903–4 in University of Berlin; I have been abroad five times, besides university work and chemical researches; I have been a teacher in Johns Hopkins University and Wisconsin and Syracuse Universities. I have published over 100 articles in various lines of chemistry in which I have been interested. I have been invited to give numerous addresses, and I was invited to make an address before the Faraday Society of Great Britain. I have appeared in a number of lectures involving chemistry and I have been connected with the direction of two plants for the commercial development of some of my processes; I was acquainted with Commander Sandlin while he was under observation in the Naval Hospital here in Washington; from August to October, 1925, we were at the same boarding house; I have talked to Commander Sandlin a great deal on subjects of current interest; I have been interested in naval subjects; we were a great deal together socially, and we were better acquainted with them than with any other family here, and that intimacy still exists; I have had occasion to note the conduct of Commander Sandlin with regard to the condition of his mind, and my opinion is based on continual contact with the medical men of Johns Hopkins University, with whom I ate daily, taught medical students myself, having been on the staff of the Highland Hospital in Rochester, N. Y., having been friends of people interested in psychiatry in general; I did not even know at first, when I met Commander Sandlin, or for some time afterwards, that he was under observation in the Naval Hospital, and never suspected any such thing from any talk with him. I learned it after three months' acquaintance with him, and I have carefully watched his talk. I did not observe anything abnormal about him. He was to my mind an unusually fine man. He never tried to force on us Christian Science, or any such ideas. He was very fair, indeed. When I learned that Commander Sandlin was in St. Elizabeths I went over there. To my astonishment I found that he was the same well-poised, fair-minded man I had known before; I believe that Commander Sandlin is of sound mind; I do not believe that he is potentially dangerous to society—not in the slightest; since he has been let out of St. Elizabeths he has been a free agent, going where he pleased, and doing what he pleased; I have been attracted to him; I do not believe there is anything in the world the matter with his mind; a psychiatrist whom I know says he believes every person is a paranoid; with regard to the suggestion that Commander Sandlin made to the Navy, there is not anything that would indicate an unsoundness of mind; I called on Congressman BLANTON, my old schoolmate, to see that my friend got justice; I feel that Commander Sandlin has been misunderstood because he expresses himself in an unusually brilliant way.

He had been adjudged insane and kept in St. Elizabeths Insane Asylum for two months before I found him. And after I placed the evidence before the naval board, four out of five decided that he was not insane, and I forced the Navy Department to release him and discharge him. But they retired him, and they hold now, under a ruling of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, that even after they retire an officer they still have jurisdiction over him, and if the Secretary sees fit he can order him back to St. Elizabeths any time he wants to, although he is retired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman said there were a number of the Government departments that had the right to do this. The gentleman has named three of them, and I am very much interested in knowing the other departments that can do the same thing.

Mr. BLANTON. There are eight of them, and I will name them. You will remember that in response to my resolution which the House passed, Gen. J. R. McCarl, Comptroller General of the United States, between July 1 and December 1, 1926, made an exhaustive investigation of St. Elizabeths, and he made a report to Congress embracing 175 printed pages. In such report General McCarl certifies that under existing laws St. Elizabeths receives men and women for incarceration upon the mere order or request of the following heads of departments, to wit:

(1) From the Secretary of War—persons belonging to the Army, civilian employees in the Quartermaster Corps, interned persons, and prisoners of war; (2) from the Secretary of the Navy—insane persons belonging to the Navy and Marine Corps, naval interned persons, and prisoners of war; (3) from the Secretary of the Treasury—insane persons belonging to the Coast Guard, insane patients of the Public Health Service, merchant seamen, officers and crew of the several vessels belonging to the Bureau of Fisheries, ex-service men hospitalized by virtue of the war risk insurance act, commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, discharged Army and Navy nurses, seamen on boats of Mississippi River Commission, employees in Lighthouse Service, civilian employees on Army transports, and civilian employees entitled to treatment under the United States employees' compensation act; (4) from the Secretary of the Interior—insane American citizens in the Canal Zone, persons charged with Federal offenses, persons convicted of Federal offenses; (5) from the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau—all ex-service men, veterans of the World War who come under his jurisdiction; (6) from the president of the Board of Commissioners of Soldiers' Home—inmates of the Soldiers' Home; (7) from the president of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers—inmates of the national home; (8) from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia—indigent patients and alleged insane persons of homicidal or otherwise dangerous tendencies pending formal commitment.

You will note that he lists eight different departments of this Government whose heads the law now gives the right to order human beings into an insane asylum without due hearing in court. General McCarl further certified:

These patients come from all walks of life and represent most every vocation and profession. There are patients who were lawyers, doctors, business men, machinists, common and skilled laborers; teachers, nurses, musicians, artists, authors, and writers; officers and men committed from the United States Army and Navy and Marine Corps; retired officers and men of the United States Army and Marine Corps; veterans of the Civil, Spanish, and the World Wars; women who come from the various social strata, mothers, wives, and unmarried girls. There are also insane criminals and the criminally insane committed from Federal prisons and by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Dr. William A. White testified under oath and our Gibson investigating committee unanimously found that there are 2,200 people incarcerated in St. Elizabeths Insane Asylum who have never been adjudged insane and who have never been given a trial to establish their sanity.

Note that General McCarl certified that the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury all can order men in this insane asylum. And they can do it without giving these men a proper hearing. By the mere scratch of a pen they can doom a man to St. Elizabeths, an insane asylum. It ought to stop. It exists because the people of the United States have not known it and they do not know it now, but I am bringing it to your attention, and I hope you will help me stop it. I hope you will help me get a bill passed through this House before we adjourn that will take that power from every department of this Government, so that before they can send a man to an insane asylum they must give him a hearing before a court and have him properly adjudged insane under the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. In Texas we have tribunals constituted which require a trial before anyone can be adjudged insane.

Mr. BLANTON. And very rightly so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that ought to be the law of the Nation as well as of the States?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. It ought to be the law. Let me say to my colleague from Texas that I would rather to-day you would adjudge me guilty and send me to a penitentiary for 20 years than to send me out to St. Elizabeths Asylum charged with insanity, from what I know about that institution, because I would have a chance to get out of the penitentiary and a chance to show my innocence of the charge upon which I was sentenced, but when once the doors of St. Elizabeths are closed on an insane victim he rarely ever gets a chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes, because I want to answer some questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I am in sympathy with much the gentleman is saying.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any part of that which I am saying with which the gentleman is not in sympathy?

Mr. HUDSON. No; I think not, but I did not think the gentleman would have any complaint to make to-day after having won such a signal victory in getting the Democratic convention to meet in the State of Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am not now talking politics.

Mr. HUDSON. I know the gentleman is not.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I did not know that the conditions to which the gentleman refers existed here. Does the gentleman mean to say that a person can be sent to St. Elizabeths without judicial procedure?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. Secretary Mellon has done it, and Secretary Wilbur has done it. Your Secretary of War has done it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman stated he would rather be sent to a penitentiary than to St. Elizabeths, and I know he would have rather been sentenced to a penitentiary in Texas three years ago because he would probably have gotten a pardon at that time.

Mr. BLANTON. I never did stand in with that particular pardoning power down there.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have just been wondering how the gentleman would provide for such trials by the civil courts in the case of men in the Navy or the Army or the Coast Guard, the latter service being under the Treasury Department.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask my friend from Kentucky this? Suppose the gentleman joined the Military Establishment or the Naval Establishment, does the gentleman surrender all of his rights civilly as a citizen? Does the gentleman by engaging in the military service in behalf of his flag in peace time or during war, thereby give the Secretary of that department the right to send him to an insane asylum without a hearing in court?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman is not a Yankee and he has no right to answer my question by asking me one. But is not this a proper authority for the Army and the Navy to have? How could you bring these men in and have them tried before the civil courts? The question of testing a man's sanity is certainly of no higher right than to pass upon his life and liberty, and we permit the Army and the Navy to try these men and in certain cases on conviction to put them to death. I do not understand that the Secretary of the Navy assumes the power or has the power to merely say, "Here, I send this man to the insane asylum." Is there not in every case a trial?

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman will not take up all of my three minutes, because I want to answer the gentleman.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is not a soldier or sailor tried by a competent court-martial before such action is ever taken?

Mr. BLANTON. No. Rarely is he given a proper hearing. I do not think the Navy is competent to try the question of the sanity of a man. I think that is a personal right that ought to be adjudicated in a courthouse before a jury of his peers. I do not think the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Treasury ought to leave that to some subordinate officer and then approve such action by ordering him into an asylum.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is not such a court-martial a part of our judicial system? It is our means of trying cases arising in the Army and Navy.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more. This is an important question, and I have given it great study.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my friend from Kentucky——

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Let me continue just a little further so the gentleman can answer the question entirely at one time. Are not the courts-martial provided by the Army and the Navy part of the judicial system of this country, only they are restricted to dealing with men in the Army and the Navy?

Mr. BLANTON. No; they are not. Why, I have seen courts-martial in the Army and in the Navy when the ones who were trying the accused or the ones governing the body knew nothing in the world about law, knew nothing in the world about the rules of evidence and cared less about the rules of evidence. They admitted anything they wanted to admit and excluded everything they wanted to keep out.

I am one of those who believes that in peace times there ought not to be any court-martial in the Army or in the Navy. There ought to be the right to dismiss from the service for cause, reserved when they enlist, but when they commit crime, let them be tried in the courts. Oh, I have seen so many farcical courts-martial in the Army and Navy in peace times that I have become disgusted with them. I have been checking them up here for the last 10 years.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman, but I do not want to be diverted from St. Elizabeths.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; I am interested in what the gentleman has stated, and I want to ask for information. Are not the boards that determine the sanity or insanity of a soldier or sailor from the Medical Department of the Army or of the Navy? We know they have a large corps of eminent medical men in both services, and my question is whether the service appoints such a board from the Medical Corps, which then determines the sanity or insanity of a man, which is somewhat comparable with such cases in civil life?

Mr. BLANTON. In the case of Lieutenant Commander Sandlin, they first ordered him to St. Elizabeths without any hearing. He was kept there about two months. He and his friends appealed to me, and I went out there and found he was absolutely sane, in my judgment, after a close, rigid cross-examination which I gave him. I demanded from the Navy a hearing before a board. They convened their board of five members, two being doctors, without notifying me, and without hearing a witness, they took him off into a room and would not even allow his wife to be present. Without anyone being present, that board of five members found him insane and so reported to the Secretary without a hearing. Then when I went before them they would not set the proceeding aside and hear the matter again de novo. They said if he could prove by evidence that the decision was wrong they would set it aside, but he had to prove his sanity first. And Secretary Wilbur upheld them in it. He did this and that very board by a vote of four out of five found him sane after I proceeded to prove his sanity, and he is now in his own home attending to his own business.

Let me show you what the wife of Commander Harry T. Sandlin says about it:

AFFIDAVIT OF MRS. BETTY SANDLIN

I, Mrs. Betty Sandlin, being duly sworn, upon oath, state: I am the wife of Lieut. Commander Harry Till Sandlin, who is now perfectly sane, and never during our married life has had one single thing the matter with his mind; he is unusually bright and well poised; the Navy is punishing him simply because he took up the study of Christian Science, and appealed direct to Secretary Wilbur for fair treatment, when he should have sent his letter through channels; wholly without warrant or trial the Navy had my husband locked up in St. Elizebaths Insane Asylum on November 8, 1926, and until Congressman BLANTON visited him there on December 14, 1926, he was shown no consideration whatever, but after Congressman BLANTON obtained my husband's record, and in the House of Representatives on December 15, 1926, condemned the Navy for its unwarrantable action, he was allowed to leave St. Elizabeths, and spent Christmas week at home with me and our two little children, and since December 31, 1926, has been allowed to stay at home and do what he pleased, except they had him report one night and required him to telephone St. Elizabeths about once a week; under orders from the Navy my husband appeared before the Naval Retiring Board January 3, 1927; they refused his request that I be allowed to act as his counsel, as I wanted to attend; the board consisted of five captains; the two medical members took my husband into a closed room for examination; on their return, Captain Carpenter, chairman, announced that he found my husband to be "paranoid state, condition permanent"; the other medical member concurred; the board approved, and announced that my husband did not have mental capacity to select his own counsel, and they would have had Secretary Wilbur appoint one, and adjourned until next morning; we went immediately to the Capitol, called Congressman BLANTON out of the House, and urged him to save us, and to see that we got justice, as we were not financially able to employ counsel; our friends also urged him, and he secured permission from Secretary Wilbur to conduct our defense at such hearing; he promptly appeared at said trial on the morning of January 4, 1927, but had said board to understand distinctly that in conducting my husband's defense, he did not appear as his attorney, but in his representative capacity, to see that an American got a square deal, and also to learn just how the Navy conducted such trials, where men without court trial could be consigned to insane asylums for life simply upon Navy orders; the hearings were held in the forenoon, so Congressman BLANTON could attend House sessions at noon; he conducted my husband's defense four days, and by competent evidence not only established my husband's sanity, but proved that the Navy was persecuting him; the chairman, Captain Carpenter, and his counsel, saw that they must get rid of Congressman BLANTON; at the close of the hearing on January 7, 1927, Chairman Carpenter ruled that if Congressman BLANTON appeared any further he must do so as my husband's attorney and not in his representative capacity, knowing at the time he would not do so, hence Congressman BLANTON refused to appear further; Congressman BLANTON had made Captain Carpenter admit that he had prejudged my husband's case, basing his decision that he was of paranoid state simply because he had communicated direct with Secretary Wilbur, and because an officer at Key West once reported that my husband refused to give up his duty there; such officer so reporting had himself been under mental observation for a year, and I personally know that his report was false, because I was then with my husband when he turned over his office strictly in accord with the naval order and regulations; and in deciding the case Chafrman Carpenter still held that my husband was of paranoid state, despite the fact that the other four members of the board changed their preliminary decision and held that he was not; I believe that if it had not been for Congressman BLANTON protecting us that naval board would have condemned my husband to St. Elizabeths Insane Asylum for life, when he is absolutely sane.

BETTY SANDLIN.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 7th of March, 1927.

[SEAL.] WALTER C. NEILSON,

Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia.

It is an outrage upon common decency and justice for the Army and Navy thus to put sane men into insane asylums without proper hearings.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Do I understand that they put him in the asylum before there was a hearing before the board at all?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. They ordered him out there and kept him shut up for nearly two months.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is what I think is important.

Mr. BLANTON. And it was the Medical Corps of the Navy that did it. It was this Medical Corps of which the gentleman from Nebraska speaks so eloquently.

I hope my colleagues will help remedy this situation. It is our common responsibility. It is something which all of us should be interested in. Do not place it all on me. I need your help, and the people who have their rights taken away from them need your help. Please help us get a law passed to stop it. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For medical and surgical building, $400,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into contract or contracts for the erection of this building at a cost, including equipment, not to exceed $875,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 111, line 11, after the figures "$400,000," insert a comma and the following language: "including the cost of advertising for proposals, preparation of plans, and supervision of work, to be immediately available."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment itself is explanatory, but I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting the letter of the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 12, 1928.

The Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: In H. R. 9136, a bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, reported January 11, 1928, on page 111, and under the heading of St. Elizabeths Hospital, there is the following language:

"For medical and surgical building, $400,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into contract or contracts for the erection of this building at a cost, including equipment, not to exceed $875,000."

Representatives of St. Elizabeths Hospital suggested, as noted in the hearings, page 1167, that there be added to the foregoing language the following: "including cost of advertising for proposals, preparation of plans, and supervision of work; to be immediately available."

Similar language is included in the authorization for additional buildings for Freedmen's Hospital in the committee's bill, and I believe that it is just as essential for such language to be added to the authorization for the building for St. Elizabeths Hospital.

I submit this for your earnest consideration.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK, Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOWARD UNIVERSITY

Salaries: For payment in full or in part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, the balance to be paid from privately contributed funds, $160,000, of which sum not less than $2,200 shall be used for normal instruction.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that paragraph that it is an appropriation not authorized by law.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if I had not learned by experience in the past that it would do no good to make an appeal to the gentleman from Mississippi to withdraw his point of order, I should endeavor to make such an appeal to him, for the appropriation is so very desirable. I have to admit, however, that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman from Mississippi withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. LOWREY. I will reserve it.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHALMERS. I am sorry to have the point of order made. It seems to me that this is a very valuable service that is being rendered here in our National Capital by the Howard University. However, at this time it would not be wise to take up the time of the House, and since I have permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD I will take advantage of it.

I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill. I am surprised that there should be any opposition to a system of education that would fit the colored race for general human service. I think we should encourage education in Howard University and I do not think the color of the students ought to make any difference whatever in encouraging education.

I know that when I was a student in college in Michigan, I sat next in class to a colored boy and we followed Cæsar together through the three parts of Gaul. I found him a good, honest, hard-working student.

Last month at a meeting of Washington City Congregational Club I had the pleasure of sitting at the speaker's table and eating dinner with Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, the distinguished president of Howard University. Doctor Johnson was the principal speaker of the evening. He gave one of the most learned and finished addresses I have had the pleasure of listening to recently. Doctor Johnson is a great educator and a fine administrator. Any investment that the Congress sees fit to make in Howard University will bring splendid returns.

Howard University has had a long and honorable career. It was organized by act of Congress March 2, 1867, about two years after the close of the Civil War. Since that time Congress has appropriated about $5,000,000 for its support and maintenance. The legality of this appropriation has often been raised. Ever since I have been a Member of this body the annual appropriation extending financial assistance to Howard University has been passed after the most vigorous opposition and protest of the Democratic membership of the House. This uncertainty as a financial support should cease. We therefore propose to write the following measure into permanent law as soon as the legislative committee can bring in the bill:

Annual appropriations are hereby authorized to aid in the construction, development, improvement, and maintenance of the university, no part of which shall be used for religious instruction. The university shall at all time be open to inspection by the Bureau of Education and shall be inspected by the said bureau at least once each year. An annual report making a full exhibit of the affairs of the university shall be presented to Congress each year in the report of the Bureau of Education.

Howard University has an attendance of about 2,000 students, who are required to pay tuition and provide for their own living expenses. It has been thoroughly investigated by the college rating board of the Maryland and Middle States district and rated in class A. Thirty-eight States and 13 countries are represented in its attendance. President Durkee gave it as his judgment that fully 97 per cent of those who have attended Howard University have "stood up in the country as centers of influence for good."

There is a strong practical reason why a school like Howard University should be maintained in the District of Columbia. The Freedmen's Hospital was authorized by Congress in 1904, and was built upon land owned by Howard University. The university generously leased the land to the Federal Government for 99 years at $1 a year, with a privilege of renewal for a like period. The existence of this hospital so near the medical school of Howard University affords the students of the university an opportunity which exists nowhere else in this country to acquire the clinical instruction which is necessary to complete each student's medical course. On the other hand, this opportunity exists for white students in every State of the Union.

In addition to the great importance to the country of having an institution capable of developing trained leaders for the colored race in all walks of life, the urgent necessity of making possible a supply of properly trained physicians of that race for the protection of the health of all our people, white as well as black, must be plain to every fair-minded American citizen.

I believe that Howard University has entered upon the most successful period of its history. Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson was unanimously elected president by the board of trustees and is one of America's great college presidents. Doctor Johnson is the first colored man to serve as president of the university. He was graduated in 1911 from Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., with the degree of bachelor of arts. Doctor Johnson was retained for two years in his alma mater as professor of economics and history. In 1913 he received the degree of bachelor of arts from the University of Chicago. He was graduated from the Rochester Theological Seminary in 1919.

Later he was pastor of the First Baptist Church of Charleston, W. Va. He received the degree of bachelor of divinity from Rochester Theological Seminary on his historical thesis entitled "The Rise of the Knights Templar." He was graduated from Howard University with the degree of master of the science of theology.

Doctor Johnson is not only the first colored man to serve as president but is one of the youngest college presidents in the country. He is only 37 years of age.

The wisdom of the choice of Doctor Johnson as president of Howard University may be conceded because of the fact that Col. Theodore Roosevelt was chairman of the committee which unanimously recommended his election. I prophesy that under the administration of President Johnson, Howard University will become one of the great educational institutions of the world. Let me say this to my Democratic colleagues, let us be fair to the Negro race. The so-called negro problem is not of their making. The black man is not here of his own volition. He was seized by force and brought unwillingly to a strange country where for generations he was your slave and where as a race he has since been compelled to eke out a meager and precarious existence.

I want to call your attention to the fact that after his emancipation, that he has made the most remarkable progress, mentally and industrially, of any race recorded in the annals of history. In the short period of 60 years he has emerged from slavery and has won his place in world leadership to-day. You will find the negro holding his place with his white brother in leadership, in science, in literature, music, art, finance, industry, and commerce. You will find negro leaders in all lines of human activity.

He has not only won and held his place in the business and professional world, but he makes the right kind of a citizen. He is patriotic and American to the very core of his character. Let us lay aside prejudice, pass this bill, and build up here in the National Capital a great institution for the colored race.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that there is no authority for the legislation in question. The point of order is admitted by the chairman of the committee, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses: For equipment, supplies, apparatus, furniture, cases and shelving, stationery, ice, repairs to buildings and grounds, and for other necessary expenses, including reimbursement to the appropriation for Freedmen's Hospital of actual cost of heat and light furnished, $80,000.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order to this paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have to admit that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction and equipment of a chemistry building, $150,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building and equipment at a cost not to exceed $390,000.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will have to be sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Howard University, $390,000.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 45, line 9, for the purpose of offering an amendment as suggested in a memorandum from the Indian Office.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to page 45, line 9, for the purpose of offering an amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HASTINGS: Page 45, line 9, after the figures "$10,000," strike out "for central heating plant, Seneca Indian School, Oklahoma, $25,000," and insert in lieu thereof "for central heating plant and water supply, Seneca Indian School, Oklahoma, $35,000."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, without reading it, I have here a memorandum sent up to the chairman of the subcommittee having this bill in charge, justifying the increase of $10,000 for water supply at the Seneca Indian School. There is also a short letter, which I shall insert, addressed to my colleague, Mr. E. B. HOWARD, from the agent of that Indian reservation, in which he calls attention to the fact of the need of this appropriation and strongly urging that additional appropriation of $10,000. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting these papers.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The memorandum and letter are as follows:

MEMORANDUM RE WATER SUPPLY, SENECA SCHOOL

With reference to the matter of water supply for the Seneca Boarding School under the Quapaw jurisdiction, Oklahoma, the facts before the office are, briefly, as follows:

With the object of further developing a water supply for the school, the superintendent recently caused a shallow well to be dug from which a supply of water, which the superintendent reports under date of December 16 last to be sufficient for all school purposes, has been obtained. However, while the water in this well has been tested by the State laboratory and pronounced safe for domestic use, the superintendent expresses fear that the water thus obtained comes originally from a neighboring creek, which has many sources of contamination. If this should prove to be the case, the present status of the water supply at the school must be regarded as by no means satisfactory, and measures to provide another supply free from the danger of contamination will be necessary. To that end the superintendent contemplates digging a deep artesian well. He has also in mind to re-lay water lines at the school and install certain other equipment which is needed for the system.

There have been two serious epidemics at the school, one in 1926 and again in the fall of 1927, which have been traced to the present water supply which leads into the creek before mentioned, which possibly feeds the new shallow well.

Some of the present water mains have been in use for 25 years. The estimated cost of digging a deep artesian well, re-laying the water mains, and installing the needed equipment is $10,000.

MIAMI, OKLA., January 11, 1928.

Hon. E. B. HOWARD, M. C.:

Your letter 7th. Your understanding as to water system here correct. In fact, the recent epidemic of typhoid fever at this school was isolated directly to the present water supply and system. School physician and district supervising physician have recommended immediate change in entire water system. Suggest if possible a flat appropriation of $10,000 be made to become immediately available to cover cost of drilling new deep well and otherwise properly provide for labor, general equipment, etc., necessary to the furnishing of proper water supply for this school. It has been estimated that this amount will be necessary for that purpose. Letter follows.

SUFFECOOL.

MIAMI, OKLA., January 12, 1928.

INDIAN OFFICE,

Washington, D. C.:

Office wire 12th plan in mind is to drill deep artesian well and relay all water lines, some of which have been in use for 25 years; also install new needed equipment. This, it is believed, will furnish proper and adequate water supply if plan outlined by letter December 16th is carried out. Do not believe it will cost in excess of $750. First analysis of water in experimental well showed safe, yet there is some belief that this water supply comes from Lost Creek, about 300 feet south, and if this is true, this water has many sources of contamination and will probably necessitate constant treatment. Letter follows.

SUFFECOOL.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following further amendment to correct the total.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HASTINGS: Page 44, line 24, strike out "$38,000" and insert "$398,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that it is necessary, but I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to correct the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the committee are highly gratified that their work has met so fully with the approval of the House. This bill has been passed in record-breaking time. I can account for it further only by the fact that we have a new member on the committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], and I think he is a very effective mascot.

I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9136, the Interior Department appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRAMTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDRESS OF HON. FINIS J. GARRETT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD the speech delivered last night at the Jackson Day banquet at the Mayflower Hotel, in this city, by the distinguished leader of the minority the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. There is a little politics in it, of course, but nevertheless it is a very able document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

Democracy is not a state of mind nor a psychological manifestation. It is a fundamental thing which lies deep in the human heart, and in its essence is of the profoundest philosophy of human life.

It does not spring from government; it underlies government, at least our Government.

Simply because man exists he is possessed of certain rights. They are coexistent with his birth and coextensive with his being. Government is merely to assure these rights and the highest functioning of government is that activity, or lack of activity, as necessity dictates, which preserves them.

Democracy is the antithesis of selfishness, and its constant danger is that it become the victim of greed. Because of its very nature it is surrounded always with enemies—enemies that are astute, alert, constantly organized, and ever watchful.

Because its character renders it unable to offer favors of law and enable one individual through legislative manipulation to profit at the expense of another, it does not, as an instrument of government, command the influence or elicit the support of special interests. It has to rely upon reason, upon justice, and make its appeal to the higher motives and the broader sympathies of mankind, and, unfortunately, these are not always in the ascendant.

These enemies, watchful and adroit, are masters of political warfare. Tactics, strategics, logistics—they possess them all, and never yet have they been found lacking in munitions.

They understand frontal attack and flank movement; when to strike and when to give the counterstroke. The value of espionage they recognized long ago, and above all things they appreciate the importance of creating dissensions and divisions in democracy's forces, and we are all too prone to divide.

In 1924, although they had no heavy artillery with which to bombard us, we nevertheless broke ranks before we had gotten close enough for them to see the whites of our eyes.

Is it possible, I wonder, that a great party, grounded in traditions of glory, a great party which has written nearly every permanent chapter of American law, is again to fall a victim to its own folly and blither about nonessentials, fight with passionate abandon over imaginary goblins and academic abstractions, and forget the substance which challenges our bravest and our best? Heaven forbid!

Surely in the conditions which surround us and which are observable upon the very surface, without even probing to the depths, we have glaring issues upon which to make successful appeal to the intelligence and virtue of America. In the favoritism which within seven short years has been wrought into law; in the tangled confusion following in the wake of corruption and shame; in the foreign policy, or lack of foreign policy, which has left us without a friend among the nations of the world; in the domestic distresses which all their cunning has not enabled them to cure because avarice forbade alleviation; surely these things summon us to find a firm and common ground upon which the legions of democracy can stand and give lusty battle as in the victorious days of yore.

Democracy will not win grouped about a jumble of policies asserted as meeting the expediency of a fleeting hour. Democracy has won its fights when it had a battle flag which symbolized a system of principles fitted for the government of a free people in a republic (which is a democracy made practical) grounded upon a written constitution.

Democracy will never be destroyed; its philosophy too thoroughly permeates the world. And the party which espouses it stands in no danger of death from external forces. Its only danger lies within its own organism. It will not be killed, but it could commit suicide.

Democracy means respect for law and the implications of law; regard for the Constitution and the limitations of the Constitution; antagonism to governmental favoritism and the corrupting force of favoritism; enmity to privilege and the withering blight of privilege upon our institutions.

It means justice to the individual, and, therefore, peace among the masses.

The application of its principles by some party (for popular governments are administered only through the agency of party) constitutes the sole hope for the permanency of this democratic Republic.

Surely the Democratic Party—our Democratic Party—ought to be the one to apply democratic principles.

Its founder made it the instrumentality which rendered the Republic a democratic one. The man whose memory we honor this night revived it as it was about to become moribund and expanded it even beyond the hopes of its founder. A long line of illustrious leaders have followed them and carried on. Surely we of this demanding day will also carry on.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

PASSPORTS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State requesting that section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the issue and validity of passports, and for other purposes," Sixty-ninth Congress, session 1, approved July 3, 1926, Public, No. 493, be amended so as to authorize the refund of passport fees erroneously collected otherwise than under the existing authority contained in that section.

I concur in the view of the Secretary of State and I therefore request of the Congress legislation amending section 3 of the act of July 3, 1926, in the sense suggested.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 13, 1928.

SECOND INTERNATIONAL IMMIGRATION CONFERENCE

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State requesting that legislation be enacted to provide funds to cover the expense of this Government's participation in the Second International Emigration and Immigration Conference, to be held at Habana commencing March 31, 1928. The Secretary of State sets forth in his letter the reasons why it is considered advisable that the United States be represented at this conference.

I concur in the view of the Secretary of State that this Government should participate in the Second International Emigration and Immigration Conference and therefore request of the Congress legislation appropriating $5,000 for each and every expense connected with the representation of the United States at that conference, including travel, subsistence, or per diem in lieu thereof, in amounts authorized in the discretion of the Secretary of State (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), and compensation of employees as the Secretary of State shall consider necessary and authorize in his discretion.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 13, 1928.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BACON, for a few days, on account of illness.

REPRESENTATIVE LOUIS C. CRAMTON

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, less than 24 hours ago the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union began to consider under the five-minute rule the Interior Department appropriation bill. This bill contains 113 pages. A few minutes ago the bill was passed by the House of Representatives.

The chairman of the subcommittee that has reported the bill spoke of the appreciation of members of the subcommittee of the confidence reposed in the committee by the Members of the House. I want to say I am sure that the members of the subcommittee join with me when I tell you that the action of the House certainly was largely due to the confidence of the Members of the House in the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. CRAMTON. [Applause.]

May I say further, the chairman of the subcommittee does not come from a State that has to do with reclamation, that has to do with Indian problems and with national parks, that has to do largely with the many public-land matters that have so much interest for the great western part of our country. Yet in his statement on yesterday to this House, as on previous occasions, our chairman indicated the profound knowledge that he has of all the subjects involved, knowledge not only of general policies and principles but of the multitude of details with which the appropriation bill for the Interior Department is concerned. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has obtained this knowledge through rare diligence, through untiring energy, and through painstaking persistency both during the sessions of the Congress and during the time when Congress has been in recess in studying the problems with which this committee has been charged. Mr. Speaker, the promptness with which this House has ratified the work of the Appropriation Committee is, as I take it, in large measure a manifestation on the part of the House of its appreciation of the industry, the honesty, and fidelity of our distinguished chairman in the job you have given him to do. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, as always, is unduly generous. [Applause.] I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.), pursuant to the order previously made, the House adjourned until Monday, January 16, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Saturday, January 14, 1928, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

1644. By Mr. WINGO: Petition of citizens of Midland, Ark., protesting against passage of Lankford Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

1645. By Mr. TREADWAY: Petition of residents of various towns in Berkshire County, Mass., against the passage of the so-called Lankford Sunday closing bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE

SATURDAY, January 14, 1928

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose kingdom is everlasting and power infinite, have mercy upon this whole land, and so guide the destiny of our Nation that the gentleness of Thy omnipotence may be tenderly revealed. Give us understanding hearts and discerning minds, that by our endeavors the safety, honor, and welfare of Thy people may be advanced. Grant that by looking unto Thee our love may be rekindled and by waiting upon Thee our strength may be renewed. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9136) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

AIR NAVIGATION FACILITIES—SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION (S. DOC. NO. 41)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation from the Department of Commerce, fiscal year 1929, for air navigation facilities, in the amount of $475,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. My colleague the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is necessarily detained from the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 9136) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXPERIENCE OF A MINNESOTA FARMER

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter this morning which I send to the desk and ask the clerk to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

EAST GRAND FORKS, January 10, 1928.

Hon. H. SHIPSTEAD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: When farm products sell at prices that are profitable to the producer, threats of boycott are heard as business interests and middlemen must have cheap food to make larger profits. January 1, 1921, I had 1,120 acres of land, all under cultivation, all the horses, machinery, and livestock needed to farm at a profit; Government bonds, bank deposits, and grain on hand to the value of over $10,000. January 1, 1928, I still have 1,120 acres of land, valued at 50 per cent less than 1920; the same amount of livestock and machinery; no Government bonds, no bank deposits, grain to the value of $2,000, not sufficient for seed and feed until next harvest. Oats were a failure here last year. Six adult persons have been working 365 days a year for the last seven years on our farm without wages. At present we milk about 30 cows; have retailed milk for 34 years in Grand Forks, N. Dak. The profits from our dairy the last seven years and our Government bonds have been used to produce cheap food. Management of farm is the same as from 1890 to 1920, when we accumulated this property, starting as a renter. Something is wrong.

ANDREW A. OLSON,
Box 4, East Grand Forks, Minn.

HON. EVANS WOOLLEN'S JACKSON DAY DINNER SPEECH

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of a speech made at the recent Jackson day dinner in this city by Hon. Evans Woollen, of Indianapolis.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Woollen's speech is as follows:

A recent magazine article, by Mr. Walter Lippman, was entitled "The sick donkey." Well, if the donkey has been sick it would seem to-night that he is convalescent. Twenty-one Democratic governors were invited to this dinner and nearly half of the Congress. Such convalescence gives hope that an invitation to the next quadrennial dinner may be sent to a Democratic president.

Mr. Lippmann said that he would not try to answer whether the donkey was worth saving. There was no need that he do so. The question answers itself. The faith of the Democratic Party is a living faith, presently useful, never more needed. Since the war, especially, there has been a growing and sinister feeling in the hearts of the common folk of America that they are not represented actually and effectively by those who control the National Government. There has developed the feeling that governmental policies are cut and dried and handed down by that small group of influential men who have the private ear of the Republican administration. And I tell you it is a disturbing thing when great bodies of our citizens, of the farmers, of labor, of the plain people everywhere, get the idea that what they do, what they say, whether and how they vote, is of no great consequence.

We are told that here in Washington there are "over 150 central agencies of various associations and groups." Some of them, to be sure, seek the common good. Most of them seek privilege for themselves at Muscle Shoals and Boulder Canyon or elsewhere. The privilege seekers are organized and articulate. They turn instinctively to the Republican Party. The unorganized and inarticulate, "the forgotten man," the consumer, they are those whom the Democratic Party must defend.

As a part of that defense it makes war on the Fordney-McCumber tariff. Let it be understood, however, that no one proposes to jump from protection to free trade. Whatever one may think about the principle of protection, he must, if he be realist as well as idealist, recognize that the system has been long established in this country and that vested interests are involved. What the Democratic Party does propose is tariff duties whose purpose is effective competition between foreign and domestic producers, duties in the making of which the voice of the American consumer shall be regarded as well as those still, small, insistent voices of privilege. What the party proposes is the immediate substitution of a moderate tariff act for the present immoderate act, and thereafter slowly progressive reduction in the direction of tariff for revenue only. The difference on the tariff is not a difference between extremes but a difference in direction. The Repbulican Party is headed one way. The Democratic Party is headed the other way. In the last 40 years we have had seven general tariffs acts—five Republican, two Democratic. Every one of those Republican acts was a step upward. For 40 years the movement, except as twice interrupted by the Democrats, has been steadily upward. Now the Democratic Party proposes to face in the other direction, to begin, prudently and without unfairness, a movement downward; to take from the tariff the worst of the plunder.

"The great question of the future * * *, is whether this policy (of tariff protection on manufactured products) has not fully served its purpose, and whether, indeed, it has not been pushed so far as to endanger the balance between agriculture and industry and so warrant such readjustment as may distribute its advantages and burdens more fairly." That quotation is not from a Democratic platform. It is from the report of the Business Men's Commission on Agriculture appointed by the National Industrial Conference Board and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Yes, the balance between agriculture and industry is endangered and our permanent well-being threatened. Whether legislation of the McNary-Haugen type is a solution sound in practicability may well be questioned, but I am impatient with the superior airs of Republican protectionists who protest against the proposed legislation as unsound in principle. For one I can see no difference in principle between the McNary-Haugen bill and the Fordney-McCumber Act. Each is designed to enable the seller by law to get prices higher than he could otherwise get. Indeed, my impatience leads me to say that economic unsoundness is not the worst thing in the world. Injustice is worse. The farmer is now the victim of injustice. That injustice must be removed; soundly, if possible, but in any event removed. It was not removed magically by the wave of a western hat assumed for the purposes of an agrarian gesture.

I am impatient, too, with those for whom patriotism is braggadocio and isolation. We are a part of the world and we had better remember it in self-interest if not in good will. For one thing, we had better be willing, at least, to examine the difficulties which stand in the way of consummating our adherence to the World Court. That, we thought, was one way to peace. Another stands brilliantly illustrated in the methods thus far of Mr. Dwight Morrow, our ambassador to Mexico, in contrast with the methods of previous Latin-American diplomacy.

Yes; the donkey has a lot of useful work to do. He is worth saving. Besides, you could not kill him. He can not kill himself, as he has proved more than once. The worst thing that could now happen to him would be a dose of bigotry. Traditionally haters of bigotry and repression, defenders of freedom in speech, press, religion, Democrats can not tolerate the denial of office on the ground of religious affiliation. Neither can they tolerate the advocacy of any man for office on the ground of religious affiliation. Not that way lies usefulness.

The Democratic Party, when true to its principles, has served well our country. Its usefulness now lies not in behind-the-door intrigues of bigots or sectionalists or privilege seekers but in the maintenance of an open door through which there shall be welcomed to the household all those who believe that the American people, still capable of self-government, are in no need of guardianship by the few and who believe that the national well-being is based not on the wisdom of the Republican Party but on the bounty of God and the genius of our people. Those so believing, unitedly embattled under the banner of faith in the plain people, can serve mightily—triumphantly, I am persuaded—for minimum government, home rule, freedom from privilege, international good will.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 79) providing for a general survey of the condition of the Indians in the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and, on his motion, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 2020) for the relief of Leonidas L. Cochran and Rosalie Cochran Brink, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 78) thereon.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 2570) to establish the Kendrick National Park in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 2571) to revise the boundary of the Yellowstone National Park in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 75) authorizing the President to invite the nations of the world to send representatives to a conference at Washington, D. C., in 1928 for the purpose of adopting a code of international law, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

DAM ON CLARKS FORK OF THE YELLOWSTONE RIVER

Mr. WHEELER introduced a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 74) authorizing investigations and surveys for a dam on the Clarks Fork of the Yellowstone River, which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and, on request of Mr. WHEELER, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas to effect adequate control of the flood waters of the Missouri River, and as a means toward control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River, it is essential that the annual spring floods, which originate from melting snow in the headwaters of the Missouri River, shall be controlled at or near their sources; and

Whereas the Riker spillway project and ramifications (S. J. Res. 7, 70th Cong.), which calls for the construction of a master dam across the Missouri River above Bismarck, N. Dak., is now before the Congress and would effect such a result; and

Whereas the Clarks Fork of the Yellowstone River in Wyoming, just below the Montana State line, affords a location for a dam which, if constructed, would control a large part of the flood waters which now ravage the valley of the Yellowstone River and would increase the flood-control capacity of the master dam aforesaid; and

Whereas such Clarks Fork dam could also be utilized for purposes of power and irrigation: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed (1) to proceed immediately to make the necessary engineering investigations, surveys, borings, and plans and estimates for the construction of a dam on the Clarks Fork of the Yellowstone River, adequate to restrain the spring floods of such river, at a point approximately 8 miles south of the Montana-Wyoming State line, or at such other point on such river as the Secretary of the Interior deems suitable for the purpose, and (2) to report his findings to Congress within 60 days after the approval of this resolution. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BRATTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 9136, the Interior Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1929, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"For the construction of a bridge on the Zuni Indian Reservation, N. Mex., under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, $2,000: Provided, That Indian labor shall be employed so far as practicable."

SELECT COMMITTEE ON REVISION OF THE LAWS

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was Ordered, That the Select Committee on Revision of the Laws is hereby abolished, and the services of the clerks, assistant clerks, and other employees of said committee are dispensed with after January 31, 1928.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO SINKING OF THE SUBMARINE "S-4"

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 109) submitted by Mr. TRAMMELL on the 12th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee composed of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is hereby authorized and created.

Resolved further, That it shall be the duty of the said committee to investigate the full facts of the sinking of the submarine S-4 in collision on December 17, 1927, with the United States Coast Guard destroyer Paulding off the Massachusetts coast, and the rescue and salvage operations carried on by the United States Navy subsequent thereto. All hearings before the committee shall be open to the public.

Resolved further, That to carry out and give effect to the provisions of this resolution the committee hereby created shall have power to issue subpœnas, administer oaths, summon witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive testimony taken before any proper officer in any State or Territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the said committee shall immediately proceed with the said investigation and not later than March 15, 1928, make its report to the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, under the law, this resolution should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I beg to differ with the Senator from Kansas. The resolution does not carry an appropriation.

Mr. CURTIS. How could a committee employ a clerk and stenographer and take testimony without incurring an expenditure of money?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is a matter which may be taken up after the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think the Senator from Florida can dodge the issue in that way. We may not do indirectly what the law forbids us from doing directly. The resolution, if adopted, would require the taking of testimony, and testimony can not be taken without paying the attendant expenses. However, I was going to suggest that the resolution might go over, because a report has been made on a joint resolution involving this question, which will come up early next week. The Senator from Florida could then offer his resolution as a substitute proposal at that time.

Mr. TRAMMELL. My request does not involve a dodging of the issue at all. I think the question of dodging the issue is involved more in the procedure of referring the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate in order to let that committee pass upon the question of the appropriation and thereby avoid a consideration of the real merits of the resolution, which calls for an investigation. I had hoped that we might have the question involved in the resolution considered on its merits as to whether or not we should order the proposed investigation and not have it sidetracked by being referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does not the Senator from Florida think that the resolution should be discussed at the same time as the joint resolution reported by a majority of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. CURTIS. That joint resolution relates to the same subject.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Both resolutions relate to the same subject.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, my resolution is expressive most conclusively of my sentiments that we should have an investigation on the part of a senatorial committee and that such investigation should be expedited and that there should be no unnecessary delay. However, under the circumstances, I am willing to have the resolution go over, holding its place.

Mr. CURTIS. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will say to the Senator from Florida that I am in accord with his position on the resolution.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I appreciate that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida will go over.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 1946) relative to the pay of certain retired warrant officers and enlisted men and warrant officers and enlisted men of the reserve forces of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard, fixed under the terms of the Panama Canal act, as amended, was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FRANK TOPPING AND OTHERS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 19) for the relief of Frank Topping and others.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as follows, to wit: To Frank Topping, the sum of $372; to J. A. Garrett, the sum of $127.90; to Charles H. Lemon, the sum of $1,006.50; to Elmer B. Irvan, the sum of $121; to G. C. Rothwell, the sum of $1,240; to E. L. Brown, the sum of $492.60; to Robert White, the sum of $228; to Charles L. Shirar, the sum of $332.50; to A. E. Welsh, the sum of $421.80; said sum representing losses and damages sustained by above-named individuals as a result of the flood gates in Haskell Institute's drainage ditch not being closed during the high water in the Wakarusa River during the years 1921 and 1922.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], who introduced the bill, make a brief explanation of it.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the letter from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Work, explains the bill in full. His letter is found on the last page of the report of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Kansas read the letter?

Mr. CAPPER. The important feature is stated in this paragraph of the letter of the Secretary of the Interior:

This bill is intended to provide reimbursement for damage sustained by Mr. Topping and other farmers in the vicinity of Lawrence, Kans., because of the flood at the Haskell Institute during the high water in the Wakarusa River in 1920, 1921, and 1922.

Under date of April 26, 1926, Mr. Topping, who appears to be acting as spokesman for the other claimants, wrote me that they had decided to withdraw their claims for damages alleged to have been sustained during the high water in 1920, there being no proof that any damage suffered during that year was caused by the Haskell floodgates being open.

The fact has been established that considerable damage was caused by the Haskell floodgates being washed out in 1921 and 1922 and the department is in favor of reimbursement for such actual damages as may have been suffered in those years. However, from the information obtained relative to the actual damages suffered by the claimants, it is believed that the amounts appearing in the proposed bill are in some instances excessive and that the text should be revised so as to eliminate such portions of the claims as refer to damages alleged to have been suffered during 1920.

The bill has the full approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and the amounts have been carefully audited. The committee reported it favorably a year ago and the Senate passed it a year ago.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator how were the damages ascertained? Does the bill require that the Government shall ascertain the damages?

Mr. CAPPER. The Secretary of the Interior has had each claim audited. He suggested a reduction in various amounts in his report, and the bill has been made to conform to his recommendations.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill embodies the reduction suggested by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CAPPER. Yes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. H. KING

The bill (S. 1766) for the relief of R. H. King was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the bill has been heretofore agreed to.

The bill as amended is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to R. H. King, of Alvin, Tex., former postmaster at that place, $2,283.28, the amount paid by him to the Government of the United States on account of defalcation in in the post office at Alvin while he was postmaster, said defalcation having occurred without fault or negligence on his part.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, objection was made by my colleague [Mr. SMOOT] to this bill the other day.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not find the bill in my calendar.

Mr. KING. It is a bill which the committee has reported favorably providing for reimbursement to a postmaster, notwithstanding the fact that because of the postmaster's laxity the Postmaster General submitted an adverse recommendation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I should like to make a statement in regard to the bill. The war savings stamps referred to in the bill were lost during the World War. The postmaster was sent a number of war savings stamps for sale to the public. He did not have adequate facilities to take care of those stamps and he placed them in a bank. They were lost in all probability because some official of the bank went wrong. There was no dishonesty or wrongdoing on the part of the postmaster. He made the loss good by using his life insurance.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the facts stated by the Senator from Texas seem to place the case in a different category from that indicated by the report. The report states, in substance, that there was a shortage of $2,283.28 found in the war savings stamp account which was paid by Mr. King. The report indicates that the postmaster failed to provide an adequate check against the employees under his jurisdiction who handled war savings stamps and thrift stamps, and so forth. Suspicion pointed to the assistant postmaster at that time.

Then there is a report of the inspector in charge, which I have hastily glanced at, which is found on pages from 2 to 4, inclusive, of the committee's report. The inspector in charge indicates that the funds perhaps were taken by the assistant postmaster because of the failure to keep proper accounts and adopt a proper system and because of the lax method in which the postmaster checked the receipts and disbursements from day to day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, let me quote from the inspector's report.

Mr. KING. The point I was making is that there is nothing to indicate that the funds were in bank, but rather that they were in the post office.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is a paragraph in the inspector's report which indicates that the postmaster himself is a man of unquestionable integrity. Toward the bottom of page 3 I read:

While the postmaster has been rather lax in the manner of handling the accounts and cash, we do not believe that he has misused any of the funds. He has resided in Alvin, Tex., for a number of years, and he bears an excellent reputation. We would have no grounds whatever to accuse him of misappropriating funds of the office. He realized that he was responsible for the loss of the funds, and when we could not fix responsibility on any of the other employees of the office it was necessary for us to make demand on him for the amount of the shortage. He informed us that he had no personal funds whatever, and requested us to give him a few days in order that he could make arrangements to borrow the amount. He informed us that it would be necessary for him to mortgage his home in Alvin, Tex., in order to raise the amount. We were inclined to give him a few days, and he stated that he would try to raise the amount by the 16th instant, or before, or he would notify us that it would be impossible to secure the amount.

I think the Senate has passed a number of bills in cases where the record disclosed a greater degree of negligence on the part of the postmaster than was alleged in this instance by the inspector against the beneficiary of this bill. It is true that the report does say that the postmaster was somewhat lax in the manner of his handling the accounts and the cash of the office, but in numerous instances, taking into consideration all the equities of the case, we have reimbursed postmasters where similar conditions existed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The shortage occurred, let me say to the Senator, during the war when everything was in a turmoil, when the work of the office had been doubled and trebled, and when the postmaster could not obtain additional facilities for the safe-keeping of the funds of his office. He placed these war savings stamps in a bank in order that they might be safely kept. There was a shortage in the account of one or more of the officers of the bank, and the logical conclusion is that they must have been lost on account of that shortage. There is no charge against the postmaster himself as to his reliability or honesty.

It seems to me that the postmaster exercised all due diligence in endeavoring to keep those war savings stamps in a proper way when he deposited them in the bank, finding that he had no secure way of keeping them in his office.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I read the report I do not reach the same conclusion as that indicated by the Senator from Texas. There is a supplemental report by inspectors, found on pages 4 to 7, inclusive, which indicates that probably there was a theft committed by the assistant postmaster, and there is nothing in this report to indicate that the funds were placed in a bank.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator will observe page 10 of the report, he will see that in a letter from the postmaster to myself he states that he placed the stamps in a bank.

Mr. KING. On page 5 it is stated, speaking of the assistant postmaster:

His reply to the charges have been received this date and they are herewith. It will be noted that he claims to be very much shocked and grieved that we should bring such accusations against him and he states that he had hoped that the investigation would show that he was in no way responsible for the shortage. Commenting on our charge that he had manifested no interest concerning the shortage, he states that he had made suggestions on a number of occasions to the postmaster, but the postmaster paid no attention to him; that he had suggested to the postmaster that each employee have a separate box to sell stamps from, etc. We will state that an affidavit taken by us from Clerk Smith shows that the postmaster did adopt a system of that kind and McClendon made slurring remarks about it.

The point I am making is that it would seem as though the funds were taken from the post office rather than from a bank.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They are speaking of McClendon here.

Mr. KING. Exactly—the assistant postmaster.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The man, in whose favor the bill is introduced, is R. H. King.

Mr. KING. Oh, I comprehend that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me read to the Senator from the statement of the postmaster. He is a thoroughly reputable man. I know him personally:

The shortage occurred during the war when everything was in confusion and when the Alvin office had heaped upon it double and triple duty, due to the fact that it was a second-class post office, and was appointed central accounting office for Brazoria County. No extra facilities were furnished by the department to safeguard the excess of war savings stamps that this office was forced to handle, and in the case of the war savings stamps in question, I used my best judgment to safeguard them by placing them in the vault of the Farmers State Bank at

Alvin, Tex., thinking, of course, that the bank officials were honest, and using this precaution mainly to safeguard them against fire and theft.

The inspectors say:

We will state that the postmaster has not misused any funds and we consider him perfectly honest and reliable. It is our opinion, after making our investigation, that the shortage is chargeable to some employee who is accused of dishonesty.

This man was poor in worldly goods and supplied the loss by using his life insurance, as I have before stated.

I trust the Senator will permit the bill to pass.

Mr. KING. Was he not bonded?

Mr. SHEPPARD. He was bonded.

Mr. KING. Was the assistant postmaster bonded?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That I do not know; but the bonding company paid the loss and the postmaster reimbursed the bonding company.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill; but my recollection of many of these cases places this case outside of the list of those where the postmasters have received reimbursement from the Government.

As was stated by my colleague [Mr. SMOOT] the other day, there are a great many postmasters and other Government officials. There has been a very lax system obtaining in the matter of protecting the funds of the Government placed in the hands of various Government employees. If this thing is to go on it does seem to me that there ought to be legislation that will afford adequate protection to the Government, because at every session of Congress we have many of these bills for reimbursement because of the negligence or the dishonesty of some person in the employ of the Government. Often it is an employee rather than the chief of an office; but it seems to me that some plan ought to be adopted by which the Government can be fully protected, and the honest chief of a department may not be called upon to pay a shortage arising because of the dishonesty of some one else under him.

I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, while the Senator from Utah is quite correct in many of these instances involving a requirement that the postmaster shall keep a safe and deposit these things in his own safe, I can not see that there was any negligence here. This postmaster actually took the property to the safest place he could find, the vaults of the Farmers State Bank; and it seems to me that he can not be charged with negligence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JOHN STEWART

The bill (S. 1622) for the relief of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William L. Browning, administrator of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, late civil engineer, for extra compensation for services rendered by him to the Government in connection with the Potomac Flats case, the sum of $2,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2185) to extend the time for the refunding of taxes erroneously collected from certain estates was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM W. DANENHOWER

The bill (S. 1288) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$42,260" and insert "$34,260," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William W. Danenhower, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $34,260, for damages caused by the depreciation in value of his property situate in square 737 in the city of Washington, D. C., which said damages were caused by the elimination of the grade crossings of railroads in pursuance to the act of Congress approved February 12, 1901 (31 Stat. L. 774), and acts supplemental thereto, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 2, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNER OF DRY DOCK NO. 6

The bill (S. 1981) for the relief of the owner of Dry Dock No. 6 was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BRATTON subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago I made objection to Senate bill 1981. Upon an investigation of the matter I have reached the conclusion that the bill is meritorious. I therefore withdraw the objection, and ask that we may return to that number.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to returning to Senate bill 1981?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Staten Island Shipbuilding Co., owner of Dry Dock No. 6, against the United States of America for damages alleged to have been caused by a collision on January 6, 1923, between Dry Dock No. 6 and the steamship Cody, in Kill Van Kull, New York Harbor, while the said steamship was owned by the United States of America and was being operated in the service of the United States Shipping Board, may be sued for by the said Staten Island Shipbuilding Co. in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of Staten Island Shipbuilding Co., or against Staten Island Shipbuilding Co. in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability and with the same rights of appeal as in cases involving collision within the admiralty jurisdiction between movable floating structures designed for navigation: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months from the date of the passage of this Act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES H. NIEHAUS

The bill (S. 380) for the relief of Charles H. Niehaus was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] make an explanation with regard to this bill? He reported the bill from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOWELL. I ask that the bill be passed over temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

VAN DORN IRON WORKS CO.

The bill (S. 624) for the relief of the Van Dorn Iron Works Co. was announced as next in order, and was read.

Mr. JONES. I ask for an explanation of this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the bill provides for payment to the Van Dorn Iron Works Co. for supplies that were furnished the Government and for which the company never has received any payment. I call the attention of the Senator particularly to the report, wherein appears a letter from the Postmaster General saying that this matter has been gone into and is reported, first, not in conflict with the financial program of the President; but I particularly call attention to the following letter from the Acting Postmaster General, noting especially the second paragraph, where I find this language:

The fact remains, however, that the Government received these boxes which it retained and made use of but for which it never paid anything, and from the evidence before the department it appears that the Van Dorn Iron Works Co., apparently an innocent manufacturer, has never received any money from the Columbia Supply Co. for the boxes involved in this claim. (See the attached affidavit, dated July 21, 1919, by the vice president of the Van Dorn Iron Works Co.)

In a word, then, the Government received these boxes and made use of them; but because of some complications growing out of a fraudulent act by an officer of the United States this company never has received a penny for the boxes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, apparently the Van Dorn Iron Works Co. was a subcontractor.

Mr. WILLIS. I think that is correct.

Mr. JONES. Why could not they hold the original contractor?

Mr. WILLIS. I assume because it was found that the original contractor, the Columbia Supply Co., was insolvent, and it was a party to this fraudulent contract. That was the view taken by the Acting Postmaster General.

Mr. JONES. Did the original contractor get paid?

Mr. WILLIS. No; it is my understanding that he did not. That was set aside.

Mr. JONES. Is the Senator certain about that?

Mr. WILLIS. I would not want to say that I am absolutely certain. That is my understanding, however. I do not for the moment have the papers before me, but I think that is the case. I feel reasonably certain that that is the case.

Mr. JONES. I think we ought to be sure of that. I will ask that the bill go over to-day so that we can look into it.

Mr. WILLIS. All right. I have not any objection to that. I will investigate the matter fully.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ISABELLE R. DAMRON

The bill (S. 1361) for the relief of Isabelle R. Damron, postmaster at Clintwood, Va., was announced as next in order, and was read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I find on page 2 of the report this statement by the Postmaster General:

The loss thus appearing to have resulted from negligence within the meaning of the statute above cited, settlement of the claim was made by disallowances under date of January 31, 1924.

One of the rules of the department, if not the provision of the statute, is that postmasters must exercise all possible care for the protection of the public funds and property in their custody. Of course, that is obviously a very proper rule. It appears from the report that the postmaster neglected to lock the safe or the drawer, and went out during the middle of the day, leaving the drawer or the safe unlocked, and some person came in and purloined the money.

I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF GEORGE B. SPEARIN

The bill (S. 1678) for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased, was announced as next in order, and was read.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this seems to be a bill to pay a man for loss sustained by reason of the failure of his attorney to file a paper within a certain time. I think we should have some explanation of that, and whether or not the Government is going to become guarantor for the laches of an attorney.

I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

W. P. DALTON

The bill (S. 2005) for the relief of W. P. Dalton was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the payment in full of the claim of W. P. Dalton for injuries sustained at Laguna Dam, Ariz., on November 16, 1908, while in the employ of the United States Reclamation Service.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may we have a brief statement of the case?

Mr. KING. Apparently these injuries were sustained back in 1908.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senate has passed this bill twice in previous Congresses. The injured man, Mr. Dalton, was a switchman. He was employed by the United States Government on a switch engine in the construction of the Laguna Dam, in Arizona. The switch engine was proceeding along, and, without any fault or negligence on the part of Mr. Dalton, the switch was negligently misplaced or defective, as a result of which he was thrown from the front board violently to the ground and was dragged some 90 feet, sustaining what are alleged to be and what probably have proved to be permanent injuries. He is utterly incapable of doing manual labor.

I have been as brief as possible in reciting the history of the case. I might ask that the report be read, if Senators wish it. I will make that request.

Mr. JONES. I do not ask that it be read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSA E. PLUMMER

The bill (S. 904) for the relief of Rosa E. Plummer was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Rosa E. Plummer, a former employee in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the provision of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes, approved September 7, 1916," compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. JONES. Let us have a brief statement as to the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the beneficiary under this bill is a woman who worked here at Washington for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and in the course of her employment her eyes were injured. She left the service for a time, and was taken back into the service, but her eyes got worse and she presented her resignation. She knew nothing about her right to compensation until she found that she was blind, and the doctors advised her that she was entitled to it. She asked for an application and filed it, but after a year had elapsed; so she was shut out because she had not filed it within the time required by the law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it necessary to pass a special act in order to afford her relief?

Mr. CURTIS. It is. She is totally blind now. She lives here in the city of Washington.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no question but that she could have recovered if she had filed her claim in time?

Mr. CURTIS. If she had filed her claim within a year, she would have recovered.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD TUNNEL IN THE CITY OF WASHINGTON

The bill (S. 1279) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to compromise and settle certain suits at law resulting from the subsidence of First Street east, in the District of Columbia, occasioned by the construction of a railroad tunnel under said street, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to discontinue the prosecution of all claims and suits pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and entitled suits at law Nos. 63579, 63580, 63581, and 63582, to recover the sum of $58,198.80 expended from public funds in resurfacing, repairing, and restoring to grade First Street east, between B Street south and B Street north, which work was rendered necessary by the subsidence of said street occasioned by the construction of a railroad tunnel under the said street incident to the project of elimination of grade crossings and the establishment of a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, authorized by acts of Congress approved February 12, 1901, and February 28, 1903: Provided, That the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and the Washington Terminal Co., jointly or severally, pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia a sum not less than $30,000 in compromise and settlement of said claim or claims: Provided further, That said sum shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], who reported the bill, explain the reason for compromising this claim for less than the full amount?

Mr. CAPPER. The bill involves a controversy between the District of Columbia and the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. that has been in the courts for many years. Finally the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the legal department of the District came to the conclusion that it is in the interest of the District to accept an offer of compromise made by the railroad company.

The case has to do with the construction of the tunnel under First Street and is for damages resulting in connection with that work. The railroad company claims that the work done by the engineering department of the District was not done according to the best engineering practices. The claim involved about $58,000. Finally, after a year spent in the courts, during which the District seems to have gotten the worst of it, it is the opinion of the legal department of the District that the acceptance of $30,000 would be clearly in the interest of the District.

Mr. BRATTON. Do the Commissioners of the District of Columbia concur in that view?

Mr. CAPPER. They prepared the bill and brought it to Congress, and have asked us to pass it. They appeared before our committee and urged prompt action upon the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, this matter was up once, I remember, when I was a member of the "town council." Where has it been all the years since then?

Mr. CAPPER. It has been in the courts.

Mr. CARAWAY. For 12 years?

Mr. CAPPER. There have been in the courts here several cases having to do with this particular claim.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why is it not a claim of the property owners against the railroad company and not against the District of Columbia, and why is there a bill here proposing that the United States shall pay half of it?

Mr. CAPPER. It was found some years after this tunnel was built——

Mr. CARAWAY. Who found?

Mr. CAPPER. There was a settlement in the tunnel——

Mr. CARAWAY. That was where the District went in and made a voluntary settlement?

Mr. CAPPER. No. I mean there was a settlement in the ground—that is, the subsurface of the ground—and the tunnel had to be reconstructed. The railroad company asked the District of Columbia to attend to the work, and, according to the records, it cost something like $58,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I am coming to. If the railroad company constructed a faulty tunnel, then why should the District of Columbia come in and offer to supervise and assume any responsibility for correcting this defect in the construction on the part of the railroad company? It grew out of the company putting in faulty timber work, did it not?

Mr. CAPPER. That is correct.

Mr. CARAWAY. The claim has been here for at least 10 years. There was never any obligation on the part of the District of Columbia to supervise and superintend that construction. Nobody ever authorized them to do it.

Mr. CAPPER. The railroad company appealed to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia——

Mr. CARAWAY. And they voluntarily went in there to assume something over which they had no authority, and nobody ever authorized them to do it.

Mr. CAPPER. A mistake may have been made but at any rate it was done. The present officials of the District of Columbia were in no way responsible for it, and they have been doing their best to collect for the District of Columbia. The case has been in the courts for years.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the bill ought to go over. I am unwilling that we should do this. Let it go over.

Mr. CAPPER. I may add that this matter has been before the citizens' associations, representing the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, and we find their report here, from which it appears that, under all the circumstances, they are of opinion that the District is in a better way to secure its money through this compromise than in further litigation.

Mr. CARAWAY. But they are not getting a cent out of the railroad company through this compromise. They are asking the Federal Government to pay.

Mr. CAPPER. No; the bill is to authorize the District to accept $30,000 from the railroad company by way of a compromise.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did any lawyer advise them to do that?

Mr. CAPPER. All the lawyers the District has had in this litigation advised it.

Mr. CARAWAY. On which side were they employed?

Mr. CAPPER. There is one lawyer on the present Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the corporation counsel himself strongly urges it. There was a similar suit, involving another controversy, in which the District lost its case, and then important witnesses in this case have disappeared. For those reasons now the District commissioners are strongly of the opinion that this compromise ought to be accepted.

Mr. CARAWAY. The District needs somebody to look after its legal department then when such a thing as this is advised. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATE CANNIFF

The bill (S. 1543) for the relief of Kate Canniff was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Kate Canniff the sum of $1,345, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the death of her husband, James Canniff, who received injuries April 15, 1901, while in the service of the United States on the lighthouse tender Haze, and as a result of which he died on October 20, 1909.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this bill was introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and I want to ask him if he does not think that it would be better to amend the bill in line with the report. As the bill now reads, it would pay the widow $1,345 "in full compensation for the death of her husband." I note in the report just how this $1,345 is arrived at, and it is suggested as "a liberal compensation for the injuries and expense sustained by him as the result of the accident." Then the report itemizes the different amounts as follows:

Expense of amputation; 2 artificial limbs, repairs to same for 7 years; two subsequent operations; 3 months' confinement in hospital; medical attendance, nurses, drugs	$975
Loss of pay from Mar. 15 to May 14, 1902, during which time he was separated from the service, at $50 per month	100
Loss of salary from May 19, 1909, to date of his last separation from the service, to Oct. 30, 1909, the date of his death, at $50 per month	270

That figures up $1,345, and apparently that is really what this amount was intended to take care of. I merely wanted to suggest that the Senator might think it wise to indicate the real purpose of the payment of the $1,345 instead of making it for compensation for the man's death, to make it reimbursable for the expenses incurred. That just occured to me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I thought that with the report there would be no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. JONES. I took what I read from the report.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As the Senator was speaking, I thought perhaps it might be advisable to insert after the word "for," in line 6, the words "losses sustained through," so that it would read, "in full compensation for losses sustained through the death of her husband."

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that really covers it? As a matter of fact, $975 of this amount is for expense of amputation, two artificial limbs, repairs to same for seven years, two subsequent operations, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Those are losses sustained by her.

Mr. JONES. Not by reason of his death. This is compensation for these matters. I do not want to object to the bill, but I just want to suggest that matter to the Senator. It struck me that $1,345 was a very small compensation for the death of a man. So I looked at the report, and I found that, as a matter of fact, it was for compensation for expenses, you might say, of his last sickness, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite true; it is not quite accurate to put it this way. But the bill was passed in exactly this form at least five times.

Mr. JONES. I know that a similar bill was passed. I merely make the suggestion. I do not object to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM HENSLEY

The bill (S. 1623) for the relief of William Hensley was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on page 6 of the report I find that this was for an injury occurring away back in 1910. The report says that there was a slight incised wound of the right cheek, and the injury was caused by the negligence of the claimant. The work this man was doing was not in the line of his duty. He was not ordered to do it. On page 7 it appears that the claimant was "reported at the dispensary with a splinter under the left middle finger nail. He received treatment and was advised to return to work." That was from the surgeon. W. G. Betts, quarterman, also reported "probable duration of incapacity for work due to injury, no absence necessary."

Then the United States surgeon, L. W. Spratling, reported on July 19, 1910, that the claimant "reported at the dispensary with a punctured wound, web of left index finger. A report was sent to the commandant at the time stating that he had received treatment and was advised to return to work."

There does not seem to be any liability and no injury sufficient to warrant this bill. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

ALLOWANCES TO CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS

The bill (S. 2032) for the relief of certain officers and former officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I note that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who introduced the bill, is not present, and I suggest that it go over for to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE STREAMS

The bill (S. 1181) authorizing an appropriation to be expended under the provisions of section 7 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, at the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] I am going to ask that the bill may go over to-day. However, I do want to notify my friend the Senator from North Carolina that at the very earliest opportunity I shall call this important measure up for action.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

Mr. McNARY. I desire to call attention to orders of business 39, 40, 41, 42, and 43. Those are all departmental bills which have been introduced at the request of the Department of Agriculture. In view of the absence of one of the members of the committee who desired to have an opportunity further to consider some of these bills and study them, I ask that they may go over to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolutions 20, 21, and 42, Senate bills 1182 and 1531 will be passed over without prejudice, in accordance with the request of the Senator from Oregon.

TAMPICO MARINE IRON WORKS

The bill (S. 472) for the relief of Tampico Marine Iron Works was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 4, after the word "pay" and a comma, to insert the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may we have a brief explanation of this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the amount stated in the bill is for work performed by a concern at Tampico on a vessel owned by the Shipping Board. The bill carries the amount which the Shipping Board consented to pay. The company at first asked for a larger sum. It was a foreign company and did not know that under our admiralty law it could not sue on a claim after a certain time. The time limit elapsed while they were attempting to compromise the matter. On this account it is necessary to obtain relief by a bill in Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no question about the amount?

Mr. SHEPPARD. None.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$4,677.98" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,573," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Beaumont Export & Import Co. for the Tampico Marine Iron Works, a foreign corporation, the sum of $2,573 in full settlement of all claims due the Tampico Marine Iron Works by the Government of the United States for work on, repairing, raising, and furnishing material for the United States Shipping Board vessel Latham, during the year 1920, on presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury from the Tampico Marine Iron Works of an authorization for payment of said amount to the Beaumont Export & Import Co., said authorization being in such terms as to make said payment to the Beaumont Export & Import Co. a complete settlement of all claims herein referred to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. SPATES

The bill (S. 1336) for the relief of Benjamin F. Spates was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this claim seems to be 45 years old. That is a pretty long time to let go by before bringing a claim. I object.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah listen to me a moment in reference to the bill? This accident, as the Senator stated, happened some 45 years ago. The claimant is now a very old man, and crippled because of the negligence of our Government. He was a carpenter employed at the Capitol, and while carrying a heavy timber fell through one of the sewer traps in front of the Capitol, which was found to be defective. He broke his ankle and has been a cripple ever since. He has been trying to get some just relief from the Government. A similar bill has been passed by the Senate a number of times. The amount has been reduced to a mere $1,000, and it is a claim based on fairness and justice on the part of the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, when was the claim first presented, if the Senator from Nevada knows?

Mr. ODDIE. It has been presented to previous Congresses a number of times, but I do not know just how far back.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That happens in a great many cases. A claim is presented here and passes one House of Congress during a given session and fails to pass in the other House, and after a period of some years we then plead the laches of the claimant as a reason for rejecting the claim or for not allowing it. I think our system in disposing of such matters is quite defective and that we ought not ourselves to cause the postponement of a claim and then plead laches against its final adjustment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that the first appearance, so far as the report indicates, was in the Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, so that many years apparently went by before there was any presentation of the claim. After a lapse of 45 years it is rather dangerous to allow claims for tort, when the Government is not in a position to defend itself.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I rather think the claim has been here longer than that. The Senate has acted favorably on it two or three different times. It is really a very meritorious claim, as stated by the Senator from Nevada. This old man is a cripple now. I have seen him repeatedly, and he is a cripple as the result of the accident. If he did wait a few years before he asked for it, I do not think that should be held against him. All the testimony shows that his present condition is due to the accident. He is getting old and is unable to do anything. The accident was because of a faulty sewer trap through which he fell while working here on the Capitol Grounds, and through no fault of his own.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me further, in support of the suggestion of the Senator from Florida, I notice that some of the affidavits are dated as far back as 1885 and 1886, and that in 1914 the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, Mr. Wood, made a report on the matter to Senator Bryan, who was then chairman of the Committee on Claims of the Senate. While there is no express statement in the RECORD that any action was taken by either House shortly after the injury, it does appear that the affidavits were taken at that time, indicating that some efforts were being made to collect the claim.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am confident that efforts have been made for a great many years. It seems to me this matter has been pending since I have been on the committee, for the past 11 years. We have a number of times reported the bill favorably. I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection to this particular bill, because if we have any meritorious claims before the Senate, this is one of them.

Mr. KING. Very well, I will withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Benjamin F. Spates, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 for a personal injury received by him on September 17, 1885, without fault or negligence on his part, while in the service of the United States Government, performing labor at the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BREWSTER AGEE

The bill (S. 1442) for the relief of Brewster Agee was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Brewster Agee the sum of $2,500, as compensation for loss by death of her husband, George L. Agee, killed by United States soldiers during a riot at Griffin, Ga., on or about March 8, 1899.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, a similar bill has passed the Senate several times previously providing for $5,000 instead of $2,500. The reason why, in introducing the bill, I fixed the amount at $2,500 instead of $5,000 is because at the last session of Congress the House Committee on Claims appointed a subcommittee to consider the matter, and they agreed to approve the payment of $2,500 instead of $5,000.

I happen to be familiar with the claim. I know the widow and know all about the matter. I know the doctor who made the affidavit that death was caused from this wound. The doctor is one of the leading doctors in the South.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I note in the report that the death of this man did not occur until 11 years after the accident. Can the Senator state the character or nature of the wound?

Mr. HARRIS. He was shot in the stomach and was very badly bent over for 11 years as a result of the wound. He happened to live in the town in which I reside.

Mr. JONES. The Senator knew him and knows the circumstances?

Mr. HARRIS. I know all about the case and I have talked with the doctor about it.

Mr. JONES. The Senator is satisfied that his death was really the result of this accident?

Mr. HARRIS. The ablest doctor in the State made an affidavit to that effect.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF GEORGE E. TAYLOR

The bill (S. 1358) for the relief of the heirs of George E. Taylor, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to have a statement of the matter from the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], who reported the bill from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the bill was introduced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. A postal employee in the classified service was charged with embezzlement and dismissed from the service. He was completely vindicated in relation to the charge and was not responsible at all for the loss of the funds. He sought to be reinstated in his old place of employment. He had been so employed for a long time and had no other means of livelihood and no other calling or profession.

He was dismissed in 1911. In 1921 by an Executive order it was attempted to reinstate him, but he had then reached the age of 65 years and was denied reemployment. His reputation was blasted, his occupation was gone, his only means of earning a livelihood had been unjustly taken away from him by the Government, and the committee thought that $4,000 was a very reasonable sum in consideration of the humiliation and disgrace and loss of employment he sustained, and reported favorably that amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to M. H. Taylor and Vertner Tate, children and heirs of George E. Taylor, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, said sum to be in full and final settlement of all claims for salary he would have received had he not been unjustly arrested and dismissed from the Postal Service on May 11, 1911, to the date of his reinstatement on November 16, 1921, by Executive order.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

O. H. CHRISP

The bill (S. 1113) for the relief of O. H. Chrisp was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$27,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to O. H. Chrisp, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, being damages for personal injuries due to the negligence of the Director General of Railroads on January 17, 1919, at Crawfordsville, Ark.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if the proper procedure would not be to remove the statute of limitations and let the man sue in the courts for recovery of the amount claimed rather than to appropriate it out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. CARAWAY. His cause of action would be against the Railway Administration, which has gone out of existence. There is nobody for him to sue. Inasmuch as there is no question about the extent of his injury or the justness of his claim, it was the belief of the committee that he ought to be paid, and they finally fixed upon this amount. He had a judgment for $27,500 and it was reversed solely upon the ground that the suit ought to have been against the Railway Administration. There was no question about the liability.

Mr. BRATTON. Let me make a further inquiry of the Senator. Has the Railway Administration expired for all purposes? Is it not in force now for some purposes?

Mr. CARAWAY. I would say that I do not think it is for any purpose at all.

Mr. BRATTON. I was under the impression that it was continued for the purpose of being sued upon old claims. I may be in error.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator may be correct and I may be in error.

Mr. BRATTON. Is it a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is.

Mr. BRATTON. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFUND OF ESTATE TAX TO EUGENE DU PONT

The bill (S. 341) for the refund of estate tax erroneously collected was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and directed to receive, consider, and determine, in accordance with law, but without regard to any statute of limitations, any claim filed not later than six months after the passage of this act, by Eugene du Pont, surviving executor of the will of Amelia E. du Pont, late of Christiana Hundred, New Castle County, Del., deceased, for the refund of estate tax erroneously collected from the estate of said Amelia E. du Pont in 1918.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to said Eugene du Pont, surviving executor of the will of the said Amelia E. du Pont, any amount allowed in the determination of any claim filed in accordance with this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Committee on Finance has made very liberal provision for the bringing of suits for taxes erroneously collected and has been opposed to removing the statute of limitations except in important cases. I will ask the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to explain the reason for this apparent exception to the general rule.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the reason why this does not appeal to the Senator, apparently, is because it does not come within that statute. It does not come within the statute of limitations nor the recommendations made by the Committee on Finance.

These moneys were paid into the Federal Treasury in perfect good faith and the question was raised as to whether or no there should be a rebate in regard to the large sum paid in by the estate.

The sums in question grew largely out of a stock dividend or what was supposed to be a stock dividend. The Treasury Department made three separate and distinct rulings upon whether or not this was a stock dividend or not a stock dividend and therefore amenable to the income tax law. A case was finally brought by some other person in the district court, which was taken to the Supreme Court, and then, and not until then, did the Treasury Department get behind the decision and make a final ruling.

The record discloses that every effort was made by the estate to do everything just and proper under the law. Mrs. du Pont paid in all the money she was called upon by the Treasury Department to pay, and when adjustment came and the amount was determined and the rebate was fixed as to amount, the Treasury Department said, "We are very sorry, but the statute of limitations has run and, according to our policy, no matter whether you paid the money providently or improvidently, no matter whether you paid the money in the best of good faith, we stand back of the statute of limitations, which has run against you."

That is the whole case. In the correspondence will be found statements where Secretary Mellon simply sets up the statute of limitations. I wrote a letter to Mr. Gregg, solicitor for the department, and he simply set up the statute of limitations. But neither of them denied the facts in the case nor denied the absolute good faith of the parties having paid the money at the request of the Treasury Department. They now seek to take it out under a ruling of the Supreme Court, which shows that the money belongs to the decedent estate.

Mr. KING. What is the amount involved?

Mr. BAYARD. The amount involved is $25,918.66.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDEXED COMPILATION OF ACTS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, S. Res. 17, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby requested to prepare as soon as is practicable a manuscript, in form suitable to be printed, covering the text of those provisions of law which (1) are administered by the commission, (2) affect the commission's work, powers, or duties, and (3) the commission decides should be included so as to make available a comprehensive publication of the Federal laws relating to the regulation of carriers subject to the interstate commerce act, suitably annotated as the commission deems to be of public interest and value with digests, following each section or paragraph, of pertinent decisions of the Federal courts and the commission, together with an index, the text of general rules and regulations, or appropriate reference thereto, promulgated by the commission under authority of any of said provisions of law, and such tables as may be necessary, and to transmit such manuscript to the Secretary of the Senate upon the completion thereof. Such manuscript, when received, is authorized to be printed as transmitted as a Senate document, and shall be in lieu of the manuscript requested by S. Res. 334, Sixty-ninth Congress, agreed to January 28, 1927.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not see in the Chamber the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] who submitted the resolution.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. FESS. I reported the resolution for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES], and I will explain it if it is desired.

Mr. JONES. I think I understand the resolution; but what I wondered was would the resolution, if adopted, really give the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to incur the expense which might be involved. Would the passage of a mere Senate resolution authorize that? It seems to me that if we desire this information, if we wish to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to prepare an annotated publication of its decisions and so on, we should properly authorize them to do it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. FESS. A resolution similar to this was adopted at the last session, but it was so broad and at the same time so limited the time under which the commission was to perform the work that we were informed the commission could not properly undertake the task under the resolution, and it was withdrawn. The commission proceeded, however, to assemble the statutes for their own personal use. It also collected material for the annotations and gathered the necessary historical notes. About 125,000 points have already been covered. The commission itself offered objection to the resolution at the last session, but the commission now asks that the work be done. They have the work 50 per cent completed at the present time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is contemplated by the terms of the resolution that the manuscript when received shall be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the information is of very great value and importance.

Mr. FESS. And there is not anything, either publicly or privately, printed that covers the subject.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the Senator as to the importance of the work, and if these data are already prepared, then, it seems to me, it would be better to put the resolution in the form of a request to the commission to transmit it to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to suggest that we can accomplish the purpose by the adoption of a simple Senate resolution ordering the publication of the manuscript as a Senate document.

Mr. JONES. Yes; if that is what is desired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then, what I am curious to know is, Why would the Senator from Washington suggest that the resolution be put in the form of a concurrent or joint resolution?

Mr. JONES. I am not suggesting that finally, but I am suggesting that we ask the commission to transmit to the Senate what they have already gathered together. This is what I have in mind: Suppose the commission had not done anything of this sort, and then the Senate adopted a resolution requesting the commission to do it. They would have to go to very considerable expense, probably, to employ a force, and all that. The question in my mind is whether or not we could do that by a simple Senate resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Why suppose the commission have not done it when we are assured that they have?

Mr. JONES. This resolution is framed apparently, from its wording, on the idea that they have not done it; and the resolution really directs and authorizes them to do it now. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] says the data have already been prepared and gathered together.

Mr. FESS. At the last session a resolution relative to the subject was adopted. The commission then, however, suggested that in the form in which the resolution was framed it was almost impossible for it, with its force, to do the work, because the resolution limited the time within which it should be done. The commission thought it was an important thing, and notwithstanding that the resolution was withdrawn the commission thought it was of such importance that they proceeded at once to assemble the data. I have word from the commission to the effect I have stated, because I refused to report the resolution until I got word from the commission. They recommend that this work shall be done, and, I repeat, it is now 50 per cent completed.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to the resolution, except it does seem to me that we have not any authority by a mere Senate resolution to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other governmental body to go to considerable expense in preparing matter for publication.

Mr. FESS. We have frequently, however, asked for reports from various departments of the Government.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but I do not remember of our ever having asked for anything like this. This resolution requires the commission, if it requires anything, to proceed to gather together in manuscript form all the provisions of law administered by the commission or which affect the commission's work, powers, or duties, and decisions of the Federal courts and of the commission. The resolution also provides that the publication must be "suitably annotated as the commission deems to be of public interest and value with digests, following each section or paragraph of pertinent decisions of the Federal courts"; and all that sort of thing. I think that is very desirable and I should be glad to get such a work. All that I had in mind, however, was that we ought not to ask the commission to do a thing like that by a mere Senate resolution. We can not authorize the commission to do anything of that kind; we can not authorize the expenditure of money for that purpose. It takes the concurrent action of the two Houses to do that.

Mr. FESS. I assume that the commission itself could proceed to collect or assemble this information if it thought that it was important, but could not print it unless authority was granted.

Mr. JONES. I doubt very much if it could do that without authority from Congress; but I do not make any point about that. I am not going to object to the resolution, but it does seem to me that we are going quite a long way in directing—for that is what it is—the Interstate Commerce Commission to prepare a very extensive publication such as is contemplated by the resolution.

Mr. FESS. I urge the Senator to read the report on the resolution, because I think he will find it entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Washington does not object to the consideration of the resolution. Is the Chair correctly advised?

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Washington does not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 620) for the relief of Russell & Tucker and certain other citizens of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this bill is of interest to my State. The author of the measure [Mr. MAYFIELD] is not in the Chamber. I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to secure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. We can not dispose of that bill this morning, so I will ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Under an order heretofore entered, Calendar Nos. 39, 40, 41, 42, and 43 will be passed over without prejudice. The next bill on the calendar will be stated.

TIME EXTENSIONS UNDER OIL AND GAS PERMITS

The bill (S. 1155) to grant extensions of time under oil and gas permits was announced as next in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "the," to strike out "acts" and insert "act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think we ought to have some explanation as to the need for the bill. I see the Senator who introduced it is not now present, and I will therefore ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

UTAH NATIONAL PARK

The bill (S. 1312) to change the name of the Utah National Park, the establishment of which is provided for by the act of Congress approved June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 593), to the "Bryce Canyon National Park," and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the area within the State of Utah described in the act of Congress approved June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 593), providing for the establishment of the Utah National Park, shall be, when established as a national park, known as the Bryce Canyon National Park.

SEC. 2. That the east half east half section 25, township 36 south, range 4 west; the east half southwest quarter section 20, and all of sections 21, 29, and 30, township 36 south, range 3 west; all of sections 24 and 25, township 37 south, range 4 west; and all of sections 19 and 30, township 37 south, range 3 west, Salt Lake meridian, be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the Powell National Forest and made a part of the Bryce Canyon National Park, subject to the provisions of the aforesaid act of Congress approved June 7, 1924.

SEC. 3. That unsurveyed sections 28 and 33, township 36 south, range 3 west, and section 20, township 37 south, range 3 west, Salt Lake meridian, public lands of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, added to and made a part of the Bryce Canyon National Park subject to the provisions of the aforesaid act of Congress approved June 7, 1924.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the title of this bill is to change the name of the Utah National Park, but apparently it has some other provisions. I do not know how important those provisions may be, but I should like to have an explanation as to the full extent of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES. I think it had better go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go over. The Senator who introduced it is not now present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

Mr. JONES subsequently said: Mr. President, when Senate bill 1312 was reached, I asked that it go over. I have since had an opportunity to examine the bill, and desire to withdraw my objection and request that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL PARK AND PLANNING COMMISSION

The bill (S. 1284) amending the act approved April 30, 1926, entitled "An act amending the act entitled 'An act providing for a comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capital,' approved June 6, 1924," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in section 1 (a) in the act approved April 30, 1926, entitled "An act amending the act entitled 'An act providing for a comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capital,' approved June 6, 1924" (Stat. L., vol. 44, p. 374), is hereby amended by striking out the words "subsistence not in excess of $10 per day and of travel when attending meetings of said commission or engaged in investigations pertaining to its activities," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "travel when attending meetings of said commission or engaged in investigations pertaining to its activities and an allowance of $8 per day in lieu of subsistence during such travel and services," and is hereby reenacted so as to read as follows: "Provided, That the first members appointed under this act shall continue in office for terms of 3, 4, 5, and 6 years, respectively, from the date of the passage of this act, the terms of each to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed. All members of the said commission shall serve without compensation therefor, but each shall be paid actual expenses of travel when attending meetings of said commission or engaged in investigations pertaining to its activities, and an allowance of $8 per day in lieu of subsistence during such travel and services. At the close of each Congress the presiding officer of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall appoint, respectively, a Senator and a Representative elect to the succeeding Congress to serve as members of this commission until the chairmen of the committees of the succeeding Congress shall be chosen. The Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital shall be executive and disbursing officer of said commission."

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas what is the object of that bill?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the bill merely provides that the members of the National Park and Planning Commission shall be paid on a flat per diem basis of $8 per day. They now have a per diem allowance of $10 per day, but have no salary, serving without pay. They are required, however, to make a detailed report at each meeting of their miscellaneous expenses, which is a great annoyance. It is desired that the new arrangement shall be made in order to bring about a better handling of the accounts. The proposed legislation is asked for by the National Park and Planning Commission. The bill has been referred to the Director of the Budget, who approves it; it involves only a few hundred dollars a year and is in the interest of better bookkeeping. I see no possible objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT TO OREGON FOR PARK PURPOSES

The bill (S. 1193) granting certain rocks or islands to the State of Oregon for park purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the State of Oregon for use and maintenance for public-park purposes those certain rocks or islands locally known as Castle, Tourist, and Elephant Rocks, situated in the Pacific Ocean near the town of Seal Rock and located approximately in fractional section 25, township 12 south, range 12 west, Willamette meridian, Oregon, on condition that same be maintained in their present condition as natural monuments or objects of scenic interest. In the event of failure on the part of the State to comply wih the conditions imposed in this act title shall revert to the United States, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to determine the facts and declare such forfeiture and such reversion and restore said lands to the public domain, such order of the Secretary to be final and conclusive.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HORACE A. CHOUMARD

The bill (S. 511) to reimburse Horace A. Choumard, chaplain in Twenty-third Infantry, for loss of certain personal property, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a brief statement?

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection for the time being.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this bill has passed the Senate, I think, four times, and is a very worthy measure. It involves a case where a chaplain of the Army, stationed in Texas, lost all of his household goods because of a storm which occurred there. The bill has been recommended by the department; it has passed this body, as I have said, four times; and I hope that the Senator will let it pass on this occasion.

I wish to say that I am not interested in it by reason of any personal acquaintance, for I never saw the chaplain in my life; he does not come from my State; but I think it is a worthy measure.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator upon what theory is the Government to be held liable for what might be denominated in law "acts of God"? If we pay a chaplain for his personal property that has been lost because of a flood, why not, then, pay everybody who may be in the employment of the Government—every soldier, every sailor, every officer, every person who is in the Reclamation Service—if a flood comes or if lightning strikes his house and burns his property or an earthquake occurs or some other catastrophe destroys it? If the Government is to be held liable for the loss of property by reason of catastrophes of that character it would be held liable morally, if not legally, for physical injuries received from floods and fires and earthquakes, and so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, Mr. President, if there was a legal liability capable of enforcement this bill would not be in the Senate, but there is moral liability upon the Government. This man was there in the employment of the Government. The Senator talks about others who might incur the loss of property under similar circumstances. As a rule, however, those who have suffered losses as has the beneficiary of this bill are compensated, but there is not any law for the compensation of a chaplain in the Army for a loss of this kind. That is the difference. Nearly all of those in the classes to which the Senator has referred who have lost property under similar circumstances have been paid by the Government where they were working for the Government. I repeat, I think that it is a very worthy case. The Senate thought so four times. This is the fifth time that it has been asked that the bill be passed, and I hope the Senator will allow it to be passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I do not understand that his statement is quite accurate—and, of course, I do not challenge it at all, because what the Senator says may be correct—wherein he states that other employees of the Government do receive compensation for loss of property. I can conceive of cases where, perhaps, there would be not only a moral but a legal liability, but if the Government is to become an insurer of the property of every employee from acts of God I do not know what the limit would be. Take the railroad companies which are carrying the mails; a flood comes and carries away the bridges, and cars which carry the mail are lost. Certainly the Government will not be held responsible for such catastrophes. An officer is stationed at a certain place and an earthquake occurs. He has thousands of dollars' worth of property there. Why should the Government reimburse him for his antiques and for his other personal property, perhaps of very great value, or for his house—he may have wealth and occupy a house of his own—which may be destroyed? I merely call attention to the comprehensiveness of this measure, and the lack of limitations, and the obligations which, if this is to be a precedent—and it would be—the Government inevitably would assume.

I ask the Senator himself if he regards this measure as wise. It may be entirely proper, but it strikes me that we ought to consider it very carefully. I will ask the Senator not to put me to the necessity of objecting, but let it be passed over until we can look into it a little further, and it may be taken up at the next meeting of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I shall be glad to do that; but I want to say that the War Department reported this as being an entirely just claim. The War Department did suggest that there ought to be a general law on the subject, but this seemed to me to be an exceptional case; and in view of the fact that not all of the losses were paid, but only a portion of them, and this man being a chaplain in the Army, I thought we might well pay this claim. As I say, the committee thought so, too. This is the fifth time they have thought so, and the Senate itself has thought so four times; and I am sure when the matter comes up again the Senator from Utah will agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

W. H. PRESLEIGH

The bill (S. 593) for the relief of W. H. Presleigh was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 2, after the enacting clause, to strike out "That there be paid" and to insert "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. H. Presleigh, of Meadow Creek, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $900, for damages suffered by him on account of injuries received while performing his duties as janitor of the North Yakima, Wash., office of the United States Reclamation Service on October 1, 1907.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let there be an explanation of that bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, apparently Presleigh was a janitor in the North Yakima, Wash., office of the United States Reclamation Service, and he was directed by one of the officers in charge to take a team and a hack—this is a report from Charles H. Swigart, who had charge of the reclamation work—and, he thinks, a couple of engineers, out to the engineers' camp on sections 27–13–17 in the Wide Hollow district of Tieton unit. His instructions were to leave the hack there and bring the team back. Presleigh states that after he had unhitched the horses he went to get on one of them, and the horse was a little bit frightened, and some one fired a gun at the same time; that frightened the horse more, and he threw Presleigh off and kicked him, and the injury apparently resulted from this cause.

Those, in brief, are the circumstances.

The report from the department is that as far as any information they have is concerned, this man was entirely without fault in the injury he received. The bill has passed the Senate twice.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, if this man was an employee of the Government, why should he not present his claim to the Employees' Compensation Commission?

Mr. JONES. It occurred prior to the passage of that act. The report says:

The alleged injury occurred prior to the passage of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. 556), which provides for compensation of laborers and mechanics injured while in the employ of the United States.

So he did not come under the terms of that act.

Mr. KING. When was his claim first presented to the Government?

Mr. JONES. The injury occurred——

Mr. KING. The injury occurred in 1907; but when was the claim presented to the Government for the first time?

Mr. JONES. I do not remember when it was. In 1916, I think, the first letter from the department was written. The bill was introduced in the Sixty-fourth Congress, and favorably reported. There was not any authority to present it to the Government, because the act providing for such a commission had not been passed. Whether or not the claimant took it up with any of the members of the delegation before I do not know. The bill has passed the Senate twice heretofore.

Mr. KING. I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM MORTESEN

The bill (S. 1219) for the relief of William Mortesen was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Mortesen the sum of $1,000 for assistance rendered to the United States Government in land cases in Oregon.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to know whether the Department of the Interior recommends payment, and if so, upon what theory, and what services were rendered by this claimant?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to inform the Senator.

Mr. KING. Turning to page 3 of the report made by Judge Finney, the Acting Secretary, I find this language:

The agent, as you see, thinks the Government would be justified in paying Mr. Mortesen something, say, $500, because of his services and because it would encourage others to render the Government assistance in such cases. I am constrained, however, to the conclusion that the precedent which would be created by the passage of this bill would result, not in benefits but in most injurious consequences, both to the Government and to the citizens of the public-land States. I therefore conclude that the bill in question should not become a law.

I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

GROVER ASHLEY

The bill (S. 1121) for the relief of Grover Ashley was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Whereas Grover Ashley was a private in the Eightieth Field Artillery, American Expeditionary Forces; and

Whereas while under arrest he was relieved of a sum of money amounting to $815.15 by officer of the day, Second Lieut. Charles S. Allen; and

Whereas said officer either stole said money, or permitted it to be stolen: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Grover Ashley the sum of $815.15.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

JOHN F. AND MARY L. WHITE

The bill (S. 1133) for the relief of John F. White and Mary L. White was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain and determine the claims of John F. White and Mary L. White, of Riverton, Wyo., for compensation for alleged damages and injuries to the property and persons of said claimants and their children sustained in an automobile accident on August 7, 1918, in the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indian Reservation, Wyo., and to certify to Congress the amounts so determined, if any, as just claims for payment out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor.

Mr. KING. I move to amend the bill by striking out, on lines 11 and 12, the words "for payment out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY SIMPSON

The bill (S. 1362) to extend the benefits of the employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Harry Simpson was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Harry Simpson, on account of the results of an injury sustained March 9, 1915, while in the performance of duty as an employee of the navy yard at Norfolk, Va., the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like a brief explanation of that bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I reported this bill on behalf of the Claims Committee. It seems that the claimant was employed in the navy yard at Norfolk and suffered a very severe injury on account of the falling of a 1,500-pound weight on his hand.

Mr. JONES. The main point I had in mind was why it was necessary for us to pass this bill. Would not the claimant come under the terms of the employees' compensation act?

Mr. TRAMMELL. At the time the accident occurred the law was not in operation, but it was put in operation very shortly thereafter. The Secretary of the Navy, upon consideration of the case and the serious injury which resulted to this man, handicapping him because of the fact that all of his fingers were removed as a result of the accident, said that this was such a case that he thought an exception should be made, and he recommended that the bill be passed.

Mr. JONES. It is all right so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT WOOD

The bill (S. 1217) for the relief of Albert Wood was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I note the concluding paragraph in the report of the Postmaster General, found on page 3:

The action taken was strictly in accordance with the law and the terms of Mr. Wood's contract. It is believed, therefore, that this claim is without merit.

I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over under objection.

ELIZABETH B. EDDY

The bill (S. 457) to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in the claim of Elizabeth B. Eddy was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth B. Eddy, widow of Charles G. Eddy, of New York, N. Y., the sum of $602.92, and the said sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. ZINGARELL AND WIFE

The bill (S. 496) for the relief of M. Zingarell and wife, Mary Alice Zingarell, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$1,140," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to M. Zingarell and his wife, Mary Alice Zingarell, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,140, to reimburse the said M. Zingarell and wife for the taking by the United States, in September, 1917, of three certain lots, namely, lots 9, 10, 11, in block 502–B on Furnace Hill, Sheffield, Ala., and the loss sustained thereby, said lots being included in the site required in the building of an experimental nitrate plant, and which said three lots were taken without adequate reimbursement to the owners thereof, said M. Zingarell and wife, Mary Alice Zingarell.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLA H. SMITH

The bill (S. 1120) for the relief of Ella H. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "pay," to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ella H. Smith, postmistress at Wynne, Ark., an office of the second class, the sum of $3,700, which amount was lost by burglary without fault of hers, and which she repaid to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas explain whether there was any negligence on the part of this claimant?

Mr. CARAWAY. There was none at all. She was a widow, and gave her entire time to the post office.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD RIGGLES

The bill (S. 2363) for the relief of Richard Riggles was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 to Richard Riggles, in full payment for injuries sustained by him on the 6th day of February, 1885, while in the discharge of his duties at the navy yard, Washington, resulting in the loss of his right leg.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it seems strange to me, if this man lost his leg without any fault on his part, that the committee should cut this amount down to $500, and I should like a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, the bill was introduced by me. The committee cut it down because $500 was the amount that would have been paid to the claimant had the accident taken place after May 30, 1908.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, as I understand, the committee allowed this man a year's compensation?

Mr. BRUCE. It allowed him the usual amount. I am not asking for an increase.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Which is what would have been allowed him under the compensation act?

Mr. BRUCE. That is the point.

Mr. JONES. Five hundred dollars would have been his year's compensation?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes. He got $1.60 a day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINTA GOIKE

The bill (S. 516) for the relief of Minta Goike was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Minta Goike, from any funds not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100, expenses incurred by her in going from Memphis, Tenn., to Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Mo., and returning, for the purpose of having her son, Sergt. Bruce L. Crossley, properly buried.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPHENE M. SCOTT

The bill (S. 1542) for the relief of Josephene M. Scott was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Josephene M. Scott, widow of Harry Scott, of Opheim, Mont., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, to reimburse her for the loss of a valuable registered Percheron stallion, the death of which was caused by a test for dourine made by Dr. Perry Zenor, a veterinarian and representative of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we have had a large number of claims against the Government for the alleged negligence and incompetency of the experts and doctors and veterinarians of the Department of Agriculture. I wonder if there is any way by which this can be avoided and whether the Government is liable for these accidents. Why does not the Department of Agriculture employ competent men?

As I recall, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] had some difficulty and had to prosecute a case in the courts, and did show negligence. He brought an action against either the State or the negligent veterinarian. I repeat, we are having these claims against the Government constantly because of the negligence and incompetency of these people; and it is conceded, as I understand, that the department's own employees are negligent and incompetent, or else we would not be responsible.

I would like some explanation as to why the Government should pay or what steps are being taken by the Department of Agriculture to protect the Government against the incompetency and negligence of its own employees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana subsequently said: Mr. President, when Senate bill 1542 was reached, objection was made to the consideration of it by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I trust he will withdraw his objection. The only fault he finds with the measure is that it is founded upon the negligence of an officer of the Government. The beneficiary of the bill is the widow of Harry Scott, who owned a very valuable stallion. A representative of the Bureau of Animal Industry went to see the stallion for the purpose of testing it for some contagious disease, and so handled the case that the stallion died. This official was required to give the stallion a certain test under the law. The committee finds that he was negligent in making the test, and the stallion died. Why should the estate of that poor man have to bear the loss of that valuable animal under those circumstances?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I may say that there is a very valuable precedent on which he can rely in this connection, with which I happened to be familiar some years ago. An agent of the Department of Agriculture went to Laurel, Md., and he handled various disinfectants in such a way as to kill some cattle. Claim was presented for their value, the claim was thoroughly considered, and was allowed, and passed both the House and the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not see why it should not have been.

Mr. BRUCE. The owner of the cattle was made good for their loss.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to my friend from Montana that my objection was more for the purpose of eliciting information as to what steps are being taken by the Agricultural Department to purge itself of these incompetent and negligent officials. We are having claims presented here at every session for large damages because of the negligence of officials of the department. I am wondering why the Department of Agriculture does not get competent men instead of these incompetent persons.

Under the statement of the Senator, I am inclined to think that the Government ought to make payment in this case, and if the Senator from Montana will join with other Senators in trying to protect the Government by having some legislation passed that will compel the Department of Agriculture to employ competent veterinarians to handle these cases, I shall be very glad to cooperate with him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be very glad to join with the Senator in any legislation that seems necessary; but, of course, the Government must choose its agents, and we have a Civil Service Commission that we entrust with determining the qualifications of applicants for these positions. I do not know what else can be done.

Mr. KING. A bill was presented here to-day which would involve the expenditure of many thousands of dollars, growing out of the negligence of these so-called public officials.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of Senate bill 1542?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GUNNISON-MAYFIELD LAND & GRAZING CO.

The bill (S. 1856) for the relief of the Gunnison-Mayfield Land & Grazing Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to accept title to the following-described lands either in whole or in part upon ascertainment that said lands are equal in value to the lands to be given in exchange therefor: The south half of sections 1 and 2, township 20 south, range 2 east of the Salt Lake guide meridian, and to issue to the Gunnison-Mayfield Land & Grazing Co., a corporation, in lieu thereof patents to the following-described areas or to such part thereof as is approximately equal in value to the lands conveyed: The southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 22, the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 21 and the north half of the northwest quarter of section 33, township 19 south, range 2 east, and lot 4 and the north half of the southwest quarter of section 3, the northeast quarter, the southeast quarter and the southwest quarter of section 4, the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 5, the east half of the northeast quarter and the east half of the southeast quarter, the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 8, township 20 south, range 2 east, Salt Lake meridian: Provided, That the lands conveyed to the Government shall thereupon become parts of the Manti National Forest and subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto: Provided further, That patents be issued only on the surface rights of any of said lands which are included in coal-land withdrawal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES B. FITZGERALD

The bill (S. 1114) for the relief of James E. Fitzgerald was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "E" and insert in lieu thereof "B," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized to extend to James B. Fitzgerald, a former employee in the Postal Service, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of James B. Fitzgerald."

AIRPLANE ACCIDENT AT MOUNDSVILLE, W. VA.

The bill (S. 1164) to provide relief for the victims of the airplane accident at Langin Field, Moundsville, W. Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask whether this bill provides for the payment of the same amount to the representatives of each decedent? I should like also to ask what is probably the amount involved. The bill seems to place all decedents in the same category, and the right of relief to the representatives of each decedent in the same category. May I have some explanation of this bill? I do not want to object to it. Is the Senator from Kansas familiar with the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. I am not. I think it would be better to have the author of the bill here when it is considered.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

ACTIONS FOR DEATH OR PERSONAL INJURY

The bill (S. 1798) concerning actions on account of death or personal injury within places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of the death of any person by the neglect or wrongful act of another within a national park or other place subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, within the exterior boundaries of any State, such right of action shall exist as though the place were under the jurisdiction of the State within whose exterior boundaries such place may be; and in any action brought to recover on account of injuries sustained in any such place the rights of the parties shall be governed by the laws of the State within the exterior boundaries of which it may be.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think there should be an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. A similar bill has passed the Senate many times, at least three or four, but for some reason or other it has not succeeded in securing the approbation of the House. It is intended practically to make the application of what is known as Lord Campbell's Act to places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Practically every State now has given a right of action to the legal representatives of the dependent relatives of one who has suffered a death by reason of the neglect or wrongful act of another, there being no such recovery, it will be recalled, at common law.

There are a great many places in the United States under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States—the national parks, for instance. If a death should occur within those places, within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, there would be no right of recovery on the part of the representatives or dependents of the person who thus suffered death as a result of the wrongful act or neglect of another.

In the State of the Senator I suppose a right of action is given by the act of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas to the representatives of one who thus suffers, but if the death occur within the Hot Springs Reservation, being entirely within the jurisdiction of the United States, no recovery could be had, because recovery can be had there only by virtue of the laws of Congress. The same applies to the Yellowstone National Park in Wyoming and the Glacier National Park in Montana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This act would make the State law applicable?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would; so that if under the law of Arkansas a right of recovery could be had if the death occurred outside of the national park, the same right of action would exist if it occurred in the national park.

Mr. BRUCE. In other words, as I understand it, it is intended to meet the common-law principle that a personal action dies with the death of the person?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WRITS OF ERROR

The bill (S. 1801) in reference to writs of error was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the writ of error in cases, civil and criminal, is abolished. All relief which heretofore could be obtained by writ of error shall hereafter be obtainable by appeal.

SEC. 2. That in all cases where an appeal may be taken as of right it shall be taken by serving upon the adverse party or his attorney of record, and by filing in the office of the clerk with whom the order appealed from is entered, a written notice to the effect that the appellant appeals from the judgment or order or from a specified part thereof. No petition of appeal or allowance of an appeal shall be required: Provided, however, That the review of judgments of State courts of last resort shall be petitioned for and allowed in the same form as now provided by law for writs of error to such courts.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may say that this is a bill recommended by the American Bar Association for the purpose of simplifying the practice of getting appeals into the Supreme Court of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FANNIE M. HOLLINGSWORTH

The bill (S. 1795) for the relief of Fannie M. Hollingsworth was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to grant permission to Fannie M. Hollingsworth to divert, through a 1-inch pipe, for use for domestic purposes and fire protection on the property hereinafter described, water from a spring in a westerly direction from the said property approximately 450 yards, the said spring being the only one within such distance of the house on the said property, which is described as follows: Lot 4 of section 15 in township 33 north of range 18 west of the Montana principal meridian, in Flathead County, State of Montana, containing approximately 11 acres, according to the Government survey thereof, subject to such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe and subject further to the right of said Secretary to terminate any permit granted hereunder when, in his judgment, the particular water shall be needed by the Government in the administration and protection of Glacier National Park.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JURISDICTION OVER OIL AND GAS LEASES

The bill (S. 1959) to transfer to the Secretary of the Navy jurisdiction over oil and gas leases, issued by the Secretary of the Interior on lands in naval petroleum reserves, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction over and the administration and enforcement of all oil and gas leases on lands in naval petroleum reserves issued pursuant to the provisions of section 18 and section 18(a) of the act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 437), entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," are hereby transferred to the Secretary of the Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES E. VAN HORNE

The bill (S. 601) for the relief of James E. Van Horne was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James E. Van Horne, bailiff of the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, the sum of $507, on account of services rendered as bailiff of said court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

G. W. ROGERS

The bill (S. 2365) for the relief of G. W. Rogers was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to G. W. Rogers, former captain, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $400, representing the amount of deductions, during the months of May, June, July, and August, 1919, from his pay as captain, Quartermaster Corps, toward the settlement of a shortage in his accounts as disbursing officer in France during the period from December 23, 1918, to April 26, 1919, such shortage having been subsequently credited in his accounts by certificate of settlement No. M-19682-W.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REDUCTION IN CERTAIN TARIFF SCHEDULES

The resolution (S. Res. 52) favoring a reduction of tariff schedules and the consideration of tariff legislation at the present session of Congress was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being the unfinished business, the resolution will go over.

EXEMPTION FROM PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX

The bill (S. 789) to amend the merchant marine act, 1920, approved June 5, 1920, by insuring the exemption from income taxes during the 10-year period there provided of profits on the sale of certain vessels when the proceeds of such sales are invested in new American vessels approved by the Shipping Board, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. May we have some explanation of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it go over.

Mr. WILLIS (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Mr. President, I desire very briefly to explain the bill, which has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce.

The situation giving rise to the necessity for this bill is as follows: The original merchant marine act of 1920 provided that when a vessel owner sold a ship, and immediately reinvested the proceeds of such sale in other ships built in American shipyards, the provisions of the then income tax law, namely, the act of 1918, titles 1, 2, and 3, should not apply. In other words, as an encouragement to the American merchant marine, shipowners should be exempt from the income tax law if the proceeds of sales, as I said, were immediately invested in other American-built ships.

We passed another income tax law in 1921, and the Internal Revenue Bureau held, and I think correctly, that by that act, the act of 1918 ceased to exist as such, and that therefore the intended privilege that should go to shipowners for the 10-year period from the date of the enactment of the merchant marine act could no longer be enjoyed.

The purpose of this legislation is to carry into effect the clear intention in the merchant marine act of 1920, namely, that for the period of 10 years following the enactment of the law vessel owners who thus reinvested the proceeds of the sales of their ships in other American-built ships should have that advantage. I might say that the matter was first brought to my attention by the former distinguished Secretary of War, the Hon. Newton D. Baker, who has given the matter much study, and was very much interested in the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, as I understand the object of the bill, it is to relieve shipowners who fall within that class of income tax upon the gain on resales?

Mr. WILLIS. Precisely. The original act provided that the proceeds when invested in other ships should be exempt from the provisions of titles 1, 2, and 3 of the act of 1918. It is a mere technicality. I think the bureau was absolutely right in its decision; but we want to carry into effect, if we can, the original purpose of the act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Was this ever referred to the department?

Mr. WILLIS. It never was.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know anything about how much is involved in it?

Mr. WILLIS. I am glad the Senator asked that question. It was the opinion of the members of the committee that that was not a matter which concerned the department. Congress passed the act of 1920, making a very clear, definite statement of purpose. The question is, Do we want to abandon that or not? It seemed to the members of the committee that the purpose should be carried into effect.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to know how far this goes, and I can not say just offhand whether it is legislation that ought to be approved, in my opinion. I do not say that it is not, but I want the bill to go over to-day, and I will look up the details and learn more about it. I do not want to have it passed to-day.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK

The bill (S. 1285) to provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to have some explanation of the bill, because it seems to me that there is a large amount of money involved in this. It may be perfectly justified, but I want to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. CAPPER. I think perhaps it would be well to have the bill go over, because the committee has had quite an extensive hearing, and the hearing has not yet been printed. The printed report will probably be here Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. SMOOT. I have received numerous telegrams and letters for and against the subject matter of the bill. I do not know that they refer to this particular bill, but they refer to the same subject matter. I really do not think the measure ought to be passed with no discussion whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The bill will go over, under objection.

THE TARIFF AND AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 52) submitted by Mr. McMASTER, favoring a reduction of tariff schedules and the consideration of tariff legislation at the present session of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of completing the calendar, and that we recur to Order of Business 26, Senate bill 2032, for the relief of certain officers and former officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PUNISHMENT FOR FALSE REPORTS TO THE POLICE

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is but one bill remaining on the calendar that has not been called. I ask that it may be stated under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated.

The bill (S. 2277) relating to giving false information regarding the commission of crime in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. In line 6, after the word "Columbia," I move to insert:

And that all officials of the District shall enforce all laws as to all persons alike, regardless of their citizenship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In line 6, after the word "Columbia," insert the words: "and that all officials of the District shall enforce all laws as to all persons alike, regardless of their citizenship," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons willfully or knowingly to give, or send, or cause to be sent, or to make a false or fictitious report to the police of a commission of any crime within the District of Columbia, and that all officials of the District shall enforce all laws as to all persons alike, regardless of their citizenship. Anyone violating the provisions of this act shall be liable to a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100, or to imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I noticed in this morning's Washington Post the following statement:

SENATOR ASSAILS 40-MILE SPEEDING WOMEN MOTORISTS—TRAFFIC POLICE IGNORE RECKLESS DRIVING, WATERMAN TELLS DISTRICT COMMITTEE

Women motorists who drive around Washington at a speed of "upward of 40 miles an hour" have aroused the ire of Senator WATERMAN, of Colorado, a new member of the Senate District Committee. At a meeting of the committee yesterday, Senator WATERMAN said there was need of "drastic legislation" to punish speeding and reckless driving.

"Women drivers are particularly reckless," said Senator WATERMAN. "I see them driving around the streets at a speed upward of 40 miles an hour. No attention is paid to them by the traffic police. They are apparently without restraint."

In the Washington Times of yesterday afternoon, January 13, appeared an article which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Times, January 13, 1928]

SIR ESME'S SON SENT HOME

Henry Howard, the 14-year-old boy who, while driving the automobile of his father, the British ambassador, ran down 12-year-old Beatrice De Forest, sailed on the Majestic to-day for England.

Young Howard was accompanied by another brother, Edward. Their parents, Sir Esme Howard and Lady Isabella Howard, accompanied them to New York.

The boys will reenter school in England, it was stated to-day at the British Embassy.

Traffic Director William H. Harland, who had an investigation made of the accident caused by young Howard's ignorance of traffic regulations, said the matter was a closed incident as far as his office was concerned.

The traffic director filed his report with the District Commissioners, recommending that the affair be turned over to the State Department. The boy is too young to have an operator's permit. The ambassador, who was in the car at the time of the accident, claimed "diplomatic immunity" for his son, and said he himself was to blame for permitting the son to drive in violation of the law.

Mr. BLEASE. In the Washington Star of yesterday appeared an article, "Attack on judiciary features court trial." I ask that this may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star, January 13, 1928]

ATTACK ON JUDICIARY FEATURES COURT TRIAL—PRISONER REFUSES TO PAY FINE AFTER CONVICTION ON TRAFFIC CHARGE

Traffic court became a forum for a dissertation on the alleged corruption of judges in general and several New York judges in particular when Charles Bright, of New York, was arraigned yesterday afternoon before Judge Isaac R. Hitt on a charge of using a motor vehicle solely for the purpose of advertising. He was convicted and fined $25, which he refused to pay, evidently intending to serve a jail term instead.

Alleging that the trial was a conspiracy to keep him from appearing before the subjudiciary committee of Congress to air his troubles, and attacking John D. Rockefeller, Bright kept the court in a continual uproar. He refused the assistance of counsel that the judge assigned to him, saying that he would defend himself.

Bright said he is a member of the Equality League and that his placarded automobile truck is for the purpose of disseminating its propaganda. On the truck are large signs denouncing the judiciary of New York and Rockefeller.

Mr. BLEASE. I also ask that another article may be printed in the RECORD at this point entitled "Howards visit car victim."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

HOWARDS VISIT CAR VICTIM

Traffic Director William H. Harland to-day took cognizance of the traffic accident in which Henry A. Howard, 14-year-old son of the British ambassador, Sir Esme Howard, drove the embassy car Saturday and knocked down and seriously injured a 12-year-old girl.

The boy has no driver's permit. The regular chauffeur was by his side. His mother and father were in the rear seat.

Assistant Traffic Director M. O. Eldridge is preparing to-day a detailed report of the affair.

The question of diplomatic immunity in a case of this kind has never arisen and the State Department has taken no action. Whether the fact that the chauffeur, carrying a permit and sitting next to the boy at the wheel, complied with the traffic regulations will be inquired into.

The injured girl is Beatrice Mae De Forest, daughter of John S. De Forest, 3038 Portner Street NW. The accident occurred at Connecticut Avenue and Portner Street when the girl alighted from a street car.

The child's condition is said to be improving. She is suffering from possible concussion of the brain and an X ray will be taken to-day to learn if her skull is fractured.

Sir Esme and Lady Howard called at the De Forest home late yesterday and, expressing their regret, left flowers.

Police of the fourteenth precinct made an incidental report of the accident but took no further action in the matter because of the diplomatic immunity enjoyed by foreign representatives and their families.

Mr. BLEASE. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article appearing in the Washington Star of January 13, 1928, entitled "Sir Esme Howard's sons returning to England."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star, January 13, 1928]

SIR ESME HOWARD'S SONS RETURNING TO ENGLAND—LAD WHO FIGURED IN AUTO ACCIDENT AND HIS BROTHER WILL REENTER SCHOOL

The final episode in the accident case involving Henry Howard, 14-year-old son of Sir Esme Howard, British ambassador to the United States, was written to-day when the boy sailed from New York aboard the Majestic for England. Young Howard was accompanied by his brother Edward, both of whom are going home to return to school, it was said.

The ambassador's son was operating the British Embassy automobile Saturday when it struck and injured 12-year-old Beatrice Mae De Forest. A report on the accident submitted to the commissioners by Traffic Director William H. Harland held the boy responsible. No action was taken by the police because of diplomatic immunity, which protected him. The ambassador, however, showed every consideration for the injured child.

Sir Esme and Lady Howard accompanied their two sons to New York and are expected to return to Washington Monday.

Traffic Director Harland said that the accident case is closed so far as he is concerned.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, it seems to me it is about time for the Senate to go on record in these matters.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLEASE. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. If this matter is to be discussed at length, would it suit the Senator to have the bill go over until a future day?

Mr. BLEASE. Absolutely. I merely wanted to get these matters in the RECORD. It is perfectly satisfactory to me to have the bill passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INVESTIGATION OF SINKING OF "S-4"

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131) providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S-4, and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines, was announced as the last entry on the calendar.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the joint resolution may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I now ask that we recur to Calendar No. 26, the bill (S. 2032) for the relief of certain officers and former officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

When that bill was called its author was not present, and I myself was unfamiliar with its provisions. I understand that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is thoroughly familiar with the provisions of the bill and with a similar bill which has heretofore passed the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as the report indicates, a similar bill originated in the House of Representatives and unanimously passed the Senate at its last session.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I understand the bill now on the calendar is in exactly the same form and contains no new items?

Mr. GLASS. None at all.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is identical with the bill which we passed unanimously last year?

Mr. GLASS. Exactly. That is the full explanation of it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of the following officers and former officers of the Army of the United States in the sums herein stated which now stand as disallowances on the books of the General Accounting Office:

(2) Herman H. Birney, jr. (formerly second lieutenant, Air Service), the sum of $1,403.50, being the amount of public funds for which he was accountable, lost or stolen on or about December 1, 1919.

(4) Capt. L. C. Brinton (now major), Coast Artillery, the sum of $1,398.66, being the amount of erroneous payments made by him during the summer of 1916 while acting as finance officer at Brownsville, Tex.

(5) Col. Earl I. Brown, Corps of Engineers, the sum of $9,341.35, being the amount paid by him in April, 1920, to the Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co., in connection with the construction of Lock and Dam No. 31, on the Ohio River, under contract dated November 6, 1912, and disallowed because the release, executed prior to such payment, terminating such contract prohibited such payment.

(7) Maj. Walter S. Drysdale, Infantry, the sum of $5,162.58, being the amount which he, as disbursing officer at Peking, China, credited in his accounts for the loss resulting from exchanges between United States and Chinese currency.

(8) Joe P. Esslinger (formerly captain One hundred and sixty-seventh Infantry), the sum of $499.56, being the amount of public funds for which he was accountable, and which he had not refunded to the United States, stolen on or about August 9, 1918.

(10) Maj. William F. Grote, Quartermaster Corps (now colonel, retired), the sum of $294.37, being the amount of erroneous payments made by him as disbursing officer at Fort Sheridan, Ill., from October, 1916, to July, 1917.

(14) Paul C. Hunt (formerly major, Adjutant General's Department), the sum of $1,177.54, being the amount which he, as disbursing officer at Berne, Switzerland, credited in his accounts for the loss resulting from the conversion of French francs into Swiss francs.

(19) Maj. F. G. Stritzinger, jr. (now colonel), General Staff, the sum of $30.34, being the amount of overpayments made by him as disbursing officer at Deming, N. Mex., in 1916.

(20) First Lieut. W. W. Jenna, Infantry, the sum of $11,276.63, being the amount which he, while assistant United States military attaché and acting quartermaster at Athens, Greece, and Belgrade, Yugoslavia, credited in his accounts for loss resulting from exchanges between United States and local currency.

(21) Maj. Wallace C. Philoon, Infantry, the sum of $4,945.64, being the amount which he, as disbursing officer at Peking, China, credited his accounts for the loss resulting from exchanges between United States and Chinese currency.

(22) Lieut. Col. C. E. N. Howard, retired, the sum of $639.29, being the amount paid by him in June, 1917, to Findlay and Taylor Bros. on account of shipment of Government property and supplies to the Pershing Expeditionary Forces in Mexico.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following officers and former officers of the Army of the United States the sums herein stated:

(1) Maj. Earl J. Atkisson, Chemical Warfare Service, the sum of $500, to cover the loss of his automobile shipped on a Government bill of lading on August 30, 1917, and not subsequently delivered to him, but later salvaged as Government property and sold for $291, which sum was deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

(2) Maj. Delbert Ausmus (now captain), Coast Artillery, the sum of $853.60, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss of public funds, for which he was responsible, stolen in February, 1920.

(3) William A. Bailey (formerly first lieutenant, Signal Corps, agent officer), the sum of $936.16, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to partially cover the loss of public funds, for which he was responsible, stolen between October 30, 1919, and December 20, 1919.

(4) Capt. Ralph E. Bower, the sum of $135.10, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss by fire, on or about March 6, 1920, of public funds for which he was responsible.

(5) Capt. William Bowman, Quartermaster Corps (now warrant officer) the sum of $450, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to partially cover the loss of public funds, for which he was responsible, lost in February, 1919.

(6) Henry C. Chappell (formerly captain, National Guard, retired), the sum of $58.50, being the amount paid by him to various newspaper companies for advertisements published in May, 1917, soliciting enlistments in the Quartermaster Reserve Corps.

(7) H. D. Cory (formerly captain, Quartermaster Corps), the sum of $600, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss of public funds, for which he was responsible, stolen between March 27, 1918, and May 4, 1918.

(8) Capt. Richard D. Daugherity, Forty-eighth Infantry, the sum of $256.91, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss of public funds, for which he was responsible, stolen on December 7, 1918.

(9) Maj. Charles B. Elliott, Infantry, the sum of $15.60, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the amount of overpayments made by him, through a misinterpretation of regulations, to members of the National Guard of New Jersey from September 1, 1916, to November 30, 1916.

(10) Capt. Lewis J. Emery, Quartermaster Officers' Reserve Corps, the sum of $139, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss, through an unavoidable accident, of public funds, for which he was responsible, during the transfer of funds at Cristobal, Canal Zone, on August 6, 1917.

(11) Joe P. Esslinger (formerly captain, One hundred and sixty-seventh Regiment, Infantry), the sum of $120.44, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to partially cover the loss of public funds, for which he was responsible, stolen on or about August 9, 1918.

(12) Capt. Thomas Feeney, Cavalry (now sergeant, detached enlisted men's list), the sum of $7.50, being the amount he paid on or about November 29, 1919, toward settling a claim for civilian clothing furnished general prisoners upon their discharge at war prison barracks No. 12, Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., in excess of the amount authorized for such clothing at that time.

(13) John H. Hall (formerly first lieutenant, Thirty-third Regiment, Infantry), the sum of $200, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss of public funds, for which he was responsible, lost by him on or about July 6, 1918, while crossing the Aguadulce River, Panama.

(14) Capt. John Heilich, Quartermaster Corps (now technical sergeant), the sum of $1,960, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to partially cover the loss of public funds for which he was responsible, stolen on or about December 10, 1919.

(15) Nelson Keys (formerly second lieutenant, Infantry), the sum of $238.75, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss of public funds for which he was responsible, stolen on or about December 10, 1918.

(16) Capt. James T. MacDonald, Quartermaster Corps, the sum of $39.33, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss of public funds for which he was responsible, stolen on about April 8, 1920.

(17) William D. Nicholas (formerly first lieutenant, Quartermaster Corps), the sum of $226.84, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss of public funds for which he was responsible, lost by the cashing of a check, on a forged indorsement, for such amount between May 2, 1919, and August 4, 1919.

(18) Alexander Perry (formerly captain, Coast Artillery Corps), the sum of $1,521.84, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to cover the loss on the United States Army transport Princess Matioka between December 9, 1919, and January 31, 1920, of public funds for which he was responsible.

(19) Capt. Talmage Phillips, Quartermaster Corps, the sum of $4,727.57, being the amount he has refunded to the United States to partially cover the loss of public funds for which he was responsible, stolen at Gatun, Panama Canal Zone.

(20) Charles F. Risler (formerly captain, Ordnance Department), the sum of $57, being the amount paid by him for advertising, on July 7, 1919, the sale of surplus ordnance supplies.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Berwind-White Coal Mining Co. the sum of $118.40. Such sum represents the amount of the damages sustained by such company as a result of a collision between the United States Army chartered barge Eureka No. 12, owned by such company, and the United States Army chartered tug Reliable, in New York Harbor, on August 23, 1918, due to defective steering gear on such tug.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Clarence W. Hengen (formerly private, Machine Gun Company, One hundred and sixty-first Infantry), the sum of $55. Such sum represents the amount of pay due the said Clarence W. Hengen as private, and mailed to him on or about February 21, 1918, but which he failed to receive.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George G. Motter (formerly corporal, Company E, Three hundred and twenty-ninth Infantry), the sum of $50. Such sum represents the amount deducted from the pay of the said George G. Motter for the purchase of a Liberty bond which he has not received.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Schmidt, of Fort Leavenworth, Kans., the sum of $216.75. Such sum is equitably due him on account of the cancellation by the United States on November 1, 1917, of a contract granting him the privilege of grazing stock on a certain portion of the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation for one year beginning July 1, 1917.

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following newspapers and publishing companies the sums herein stated:

L. 376), and all other nonintercourse laws, or section 179, Judicial Code, to the contrary notwithstanding, and report to Congress: Provided, That the sum so paid shall be in full settlement of all claims and demands whatsoever growing out of any judgment so rendered in said claim of Robert Dillon, deceased, and in full of any claims and demands whatsoever growing out of said transaction, and that no interest shall be paid thereon.

SEC. 18. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Zeiss, administrator of William B. Reaney, survivor of Thomas Reaney and Samuel Archbold, the sum of $34,161.63.

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Governor of the State of Massachusetts, or his duly authorized agent, the sum of $233,885.82, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edward I. Gallagher, administrator of the estate of Charles Gallagher, deceased, of New York, the sum of $23,387.03.

SEC. 21. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $173,073.60.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CURTIS. The call of the calendar has been completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call of the calendar has been completed.

TAX REFUNDS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 110), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate a list, by States, of the names of people to whom taxes have been refunded in the last refund of taxes made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I understand this list has been completed, but that it is not in the form which I suggest in the resolution. It will not be long until Congress will be asked to appropriate money to pay these refunds. If these names can be submitted by States, it will be quite a convenient thing for Senators and for the use of the press.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, we have not had time to study the terms of the resolution. I ask the Senator to let it go over under the rule, so we may look into it and see just what it covers.

Mr. HEFLIN. It would not cost very much.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that it go over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senate is going to be asked for about $103,000,000 to pay these refunds soon, and if it were to cost a considerable sum to furnish the information in the form that I have requested it would be money well spent.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator, but the chairman of the committee wants to have an opportunity to study the resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well; let it go over until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over under the rule.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bingham	Fess	La Follette	Schall
Black	Fletcher	McKellar	Sheppard
Blaine	Frazier	McMaster	Shortridge
Blease	George	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Gerry	Metcalf	Steck

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

THE TARIFF AND AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief prepared by Benjamin C. Marsh, managing director of the Farmers National Council, touching upon the resolution affecting the tariff which is now before the Senate.

The brief is as follows:

1. THE FORDNEY-M'CUMBER TARIFF ACT WAS ENACTED UNDER WAR-TIME FEAR, AND CONDITIONS HAVE CHANGED—MASS PRODUCTION IS NOW THE AMERICAN WAY OF MANUFACTURING

The Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act was enacted under the impression that European nations would manufacture so cheaply that they would not only flood America with their goods under the Underwood tariff rates but would evict American manufacturers from European and other markets. Just the reverse has been true. Not only were many American manufacturers extremely prosperous under the Underwood Tariff Act, after the war and up to 1922, but they were developing enormous productive capacity and what is known as mass production.

The man shortage during the war compelled American manufacturers to use their ingenuity and develop new types of machinery to substitute for man power, and this reduced the costs of production. Dr. Julius Klein, Director of the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, states in the annual report of the Secretary for 1927: "The value of our exports to Europe in 1926–27 was 77 per cent greater than the pre-war average—1910–1914. Our exports to all other parts of the world, taken together, increased during the same period by 215 per cent in value, and by 125 to 150 per cent in quantity. * * * Most remarkable has been the expansion of our sales in Asia, Oceania, and Africa. To each of these continents the value of our exports in 1926 was between four and five times greater than before the war. Even since 1921–22 we have rapidly increased our sales to practically all non-European countries in the face of the marked recovery of Europe's production and export capacity. With prices on a somewhat lower level our exports to the entire world, apart from Europe, were 51 per cent greater in value in 1926–27 than six years before. Apart from Europe, Asia is the only continent to which our exports during this period increased by less than 45 per cent; the slower growth in the case of Asia is due largely to the exceptional conditions in Japan and especially in China. It is encouraging to observe, however, that our sales to Asia have increased very materially in the last two years.

"There is every reason to believe that American export trade will continue to grow along with the expansion of our production."

The same report presents statistics showing that in 1927 the value of foodstuffs exported was 23 per cent less than in 1922, of raw materials 42 per cent more, but of semimanufactures 68 per cent, and of finished manufactures 63 per cent more than in 1922.

2. THE TARIFF HAS NOT BENEFITED ALL MANUFACTURERS

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1925 shows that in that year:

Of 5,479 corporations manufacturing textile and textile products, other than clothing, only 3,359, or about three-fifths, reported net income.

Of 6,792 corporations manufacturing clothing, 4,145, also about three-fifths, reported net income.

Of 2,359 corporations manufacturing leather and leather products, 1,373, also about three-fifths, reported net income.

Of 21,529 corporations manufacturing metal and metal products, 12,760 reported net income; again about three-fifths.

On the other hand, many individual corporations, particularly large ones, are making enormous profits as shown by the increase in the value of their common stock as reported in the New York Times for 1927:

	High	Low
American Bosch Magneto	26¾	13
American Linseed	72½	20⅛
American Sugar Refining	95¾	65¼
Baldwin Locomotive	265¾	143½
Chrysler Corporation	63½	38⅛
du Pont de Nemours	343⅞	168
Eastman Kodak	175¼	126¼
Kelly-Springfield Tire	32¾	9½
Otis Elevator Co	155¾	103
Pressed Steel Car	78¼	36½
Underwood Typewriter Co	70	45
United Dyewood	10	3¼
Victor Talking Machine	54⅝	32
White Sewing Machine	53¼	21½
United States Steel	160½	111⅜

3. FARMERS DO NOT SECURE BENEFITS FROM TARIFFS

The vigorous campaign for "farm relief" legislation has been largely based upon the conviction that the tariff upon most farm products, at least, is not effective, and can not be effective without a coordinate and practically inclusive control by a Government or farmer controlled corporation to direct the marketing and export of farm products. Certain farm organizations ask in addition an export bounty out of the Public Treasury to be paid upon farm products exported.

Either and both proposals are proof that a tariff of itself is not an advantage to farmers on most farm products which enter international commerce, and the producers of all farm products want to export part of them at least.

The criticism of the disparity between the rates upon farm products and manufactures of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act is not conclusive. It is a fight between two competing classes of producers as to which is more entitled to Government aid. The consumer, as such, naturally asks why either class is entitled to Government subsidy and more than preachers, doctors, lawyers, clerks, teachers, diggers of sewers, and those employed in the building trades, etc.

While the rates on farm products in the Fordney-McCumber Act are not as high as some farm leaders asked, it is almost certain that had higher tariff rates been imposed upon farm products at least equivalently higher duties would have been imposed as compensatory duties upon manufactures affected by these tariff duties.

The western Senator who demanded a high tariff on wool, with the assertion that it was time for the wool producers to have the iniquitous Schedule K of the wool manufacturers, gave the manufacturers their long-wanted excuse.

"Differences in the cost of production" are as much a myth of the economic mind, with respect to farm as to manufactured products, as between domestic costs and those of chief foreign competing nations.

As a prominent cotton manufacturer inadvertently admitted, such differences are not vital or important, because such costs differ as between foreign and domestic producers at different times and between domestic producers at the same time.

4. THE PRESENT TARIFF IS CUTTING OFF THE FOREIGN MARKET FOR FARM PRODUCTS

The Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act was the first act in the drama which signalizes the emergence of the United States as the world's greatest industrialist and imperialist nation. The second act will be the assumption by the international investment bankers of complete control of the Government of the United States. This is forecast by the appointment and confirmation of Mr. Dwight W. Morrow as ambassador to Mexico to control and determine our policy toward Latin America and probably shortly to become an efficient Secretary of State and control our entire foreign policy.

In that order of society which will be fully operating in the United States within 5 to 15 years there will not be any place for the high production cost, inefficient farmer. He is doomed.

The Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act was passed not exclusively because of the cupidity of manufacturers, but because, as indicated above, labor feared the competition of European factory workers. The skilled and astute general and investment bankers saw the opportunity to utilize the huge manufacturing plant, constructed during the war, in order to meet the demands of a world under arms, to put the world under debt to them as private bankers, as well as under debt to the Government of the United States. In six postwar years the total value of exports from the United States was over $12,000,000,000 more than the imports. American bankers loaned a major part of the funds to enable poverty-stricken Europe to buy food and machinery for rehabilitation and reconstruction.

America is perfectly equipped for this rôle. We originate or control two-fifths of the world's mineral resources, our people do about two-fifths of the world's work, and America has about two-fifths of the world's wealth.

Under this scheme of "America uber alles," however, there is no need for the export of farm products, not even to have America's requirements for foodstuffs, clothing, and forest products raised in America. They are to be largely imported to pay part of the principal and most of the interest on the loans and surplus exports of American manufacturers.

The American farmer has been warned of this.

Nearly four years ago President Coolidge stated that in a few years we should be an agricultural deficit-producing Nation. The late Secretary of Agriculture Wallace warned of the impending doom repeatedly from 1922 to his death.

Secretary Jardine recently said:

"All in all, agricultural exports are decreasing and other exports are of increasing relative importance, whether compared with total exports of all products or with total domestic production."

Twenty-five years ago exports of farm products were about two-thirds of the value of all exports, but in 1926 the value of annual products and of crops not fed, exported, was only 14.7 per cent of the total value—about one-seventh—and was only 41 per cent of the value of all exports—about two-fifths.

Farmers are not, as a body, highly efficient, and have little to gain with our present fiscal policy and present production costs from greater efficiency with the present farm plant.

The transferred position of crude materials and crude foodstuffs in imports and exports is shown by the following percentages for 11 months ended November, 1927:

	Per cent
	Exports	Imports
Crude materials	24.7	38.4
Crude foodstuffs	9.1	11.7
Manufactured foodstuffs	9.7	11.0
Semimanufactures	14.7	17.9
Finished manufactures	41.8	21.0
Total value	100.0	100.0
Total value exports (11 months)	$4,457,226,000
Total value imports (11 months)	3,852,536,000
Excess exports over imports (11 months)	604,690,000

The farmer's foreign market is going, while the present farm plant will produce at least two and a half times as much as it does now. A permanent large increase in export of farm products would disturb the schemes of the 228 gentlemen planning world domination, who in 1926 received incomes of $1,000,000 and over. It will not be permitted. Incidentally the increase in domestic demand for farm products will be very slow, while the rise of machinery will increase production very rapidly.

United States marines and warships are now being employed to subjugate nations in which American financiers have large investments producing farm products to compete with American farmers.

5. LABOR GETS A SMALLER PROPORTION OF THE VALUE OF MANUFACTURES THAN PREVIOUSLY

Nearly every manufacturer asking for a protective tariff or an increase thereof claims that it is necessary because labor is a chief or at least important cost of production, and the standards of American wage earners must be maintained against the low wages paid by foreign competitors.

Were that the case, wages paid in highly protected industries should be an increasing proportion of the value of such protected manufactures. The censuses of manufactures for 1921 and 1925 show the reverse to be true; that wages constitute a smaller proportion of the value of general groups of manufactures in 1925 than in 1921, the year before the Fordney-McCumber Act was passed.

For all manufactures wages were only 17.1 per cent of the total value in 1925 and 18.6 per cent in 1921. In textiles and their products the percentages were: 1925, 18.1 per cent; 1921, 21.1 per cent. The average wage was $1,108 and $976.

In iron and steel and their products, not including machinery, the percentages were: 1925, 19.8 per cent; 1921, 20.9 per cent. The average wage was $1,509 and $1,282.

In metals and metal products other than iron and steel the percentages were: 1925, 13.4 per cent; 1921, 18.3 per cent. The average wage was $1,421 and $1,209.

In machinery, not including transportation equipment, the percentages were: 1925, 24.4 per cent; 1921, 26 per cent. The average wage was $1,426 and $1,255.

In transportation equipment—air, land, and water—the percentages were: 1925, 16.6 per cent; 1921, 19.6 per cent. The average wage was, respectively, $1,622 and $1,456.

In every case labor received a materially smaller per cent of the value of the manufactures four years after the enactment of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act than the year before. In not a single case was the average wage paid in any of these industries in 1925 within $400 of the minimum requisite for an American standard of living for a family of four in any large industrial city.

6. LABOR GETS LOWER WAGES IN PROTECTED THAN NONPROTECTED INDUSTRIES

Union wages are reported on an hourly basis for principal cities. The following annual wage for 1925 is based on an eight-hour day and 250 days' work a year, necessarily an estimate, except for the five groups of protected industries mentioned above:

Textiles and products	$1,018
Iron and steel, except machinery	1,509
Metal products, other than iron and steel	1,421
Machinery, not including transportation	1,426
Transportation equipment	1,622
Asbestos workers	3,320
Bricklayers	2,940
Building laborers	1,466
Carpenters	2,368
Wharf and bridge workers	2,350
Hod carriers	1,840
Plasterers	2,970
Plumbers and gas fitters	2,562
Structural-iron workers	2,542
Average building trades	2,398
Average printing and publishing, book and job	1,950
Average printing and publishing, newspaper	2,260
Chauffeurs	1,298
Freight handlers	1,656
Granite cutters	2,220
Stonecutters	2,576
Linemen	1,870

7. OUR PRESENT TARIFF POLICY IS CREATING ANTAGONISM AMONG THE NATIONS OF THE WORLD

Mr. Frank H. Simonds, writing in the January Review of Reviews, comments:

"When all is said and done to establish the bases of optimism, I do not see any escape from the conclusion that Europe is moving toward another catastrophe."

The one probability of averting such a catastrophe is the fact that Europe is united in hatred or distrust of the United States. Our entire fiscal policy has been directed to deserve this. Central and South American countries have a similar bond of union against our fiscal policy. The Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act was an informal but effective declaration that a state of trade war existed between the United States and the rest of the world. The increased duties proclaimed under that act by the President have made the declaration even more positive. The results are only natural and will be increasingly serious.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, when I called for a quorum I had been advised that at least one Senator wished to address the Senate this afternoon on the pending resolution. I have since been advised, however, that he does not desire to do so, and if there is no other Senator desiring to address the Senate, I wish to move an executive session.

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, if there is nothing else before the Senate, and we are not going to take up the unfinished business, I desire to address the Senate at this time upon the significance of the visit of the American Legion to France last year.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Tennessee.

VISIT OF THE AMERICAN LEGION TO FRANCE IN 1927

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, at this time, when our minds are still occupied to a large extent on the problems of peace and war in the world, and when a treaty of perpetual peace and friendship is now being considered between the United States and the Republic of France, and realizing the value and even necessity of doing what we can to maintain peace and good will among the nations of the earth, we should publicly commend every important act or movement which tends to promote peace and good will.

Believing it will be of interest and value to the Senate, I wish to take this opportunity to give a brief account of one of the most important events which has occurred, in my opinion, in a very long time—an event not only national but international in its scope and one which I had the opportunity to observe and one which I believe will have a far-reaching influence upon the friendly relations between the United States and her allies of the World War.

When the historians and chroniclers come to record the noteworthy happenings which transpired during the year 1927, particularly with regard to our own Nation and its relationship to the nations of the world, two events, at least, I am sure will be entered on history's pages.

In May of the year just passed the world applauded the heroic and successful flight from New York to Paris of that intrepid hero of the air, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. No other individual has the world ever applauded with such universal acclaim. No other individual has ever accomplished such a marvelous and spectacular feat.

All of our people take an extraordinary pride in the fact that Colonel Lindbergh is an American citizen, and they like to believe that he typifies the true spirit of America.

The results of his historic flights have been far-reaching in their significance and they have already done much to bring about a more friendly attitude of many of the nations of the world toward each other.

Of his remarkable feats and flights the whole world is fully informed, and his services and his courage have been recognized by the Congress of the United States in awarding to him the congressional medal of honor, the highest honor it can bestow.

Following close upon Colonel Lindbergh's first historic flight to Paris last year, in keeping with the invitation which had been extended some two years before, the national organization of the American Legion went to France to hold its ninth annual convention in the city of Paris.

This undertaking by the organized veterans of the World War, it was hoped, would help to cement the spirit of friendliness between Europe and America, which apparently had lain dormant for some years, but which through the heroism and diplomacy of Colonel Lindbergh had been awakened and rekindled among the allied nations.

The invitation previously extended to the American Legion was renewed by the President of the French Republic in the following letter:

I address my very cordial greetings to the American Legion, and I rejoice to think that its next yearly convention is to be held in 1927 at Paris.

All the French will applaud you, the soldiers of the Great War, when you land next year in our ports, remembering the tragic hours when, nine years ago, you came with an admirable enthusiasm and outburst, bringing all the strength of your country to the service of right. In place of the battle fields you will find fertile plains, and instead of heaped ruins you will find now cites and villages; but the traces of the war, if they have partly disappeared from the surface of the earth, are engraved in our hearts, and all the French will welcome with joy those who but lately came to pour out their blood at their sides and hasten with them to victory.

This pilgrimage of your 30,000 veterans will therefore be to the country that guards the graves of your heroic soldiers; it is one of those events which count in the relations of peoples, which bring them closer together, and which help toward the ideal of peace which our two countries and their Governments wish to attain.

GASTON DOUMERGUE.

In September, 1927, 10 years after the first contingent of American Expeditionary Forces had landed in France, some 20,000 members of the American Legion and the American Legion Auxiliary sailed from our country to the countries of Europe on a pilgrimage of peace and a tour of good will.

On the eve of their sailing the President of the United States addressed to them, through their national commander, Howard P. Savage, the following message:

To the convention of the American Legion there is attached a significance far greater than that which is given to the gatherings in this country, important though they may be. Ten years have passed since the American Expeditionary Forces crossed to France following our decision to enter the great struggle then going on for the preservation of the ideals of democracy.

Now the members of the Legion, upon the generous invitation of the Republic of France, are returning to those scenes as a symbol that the bonds of respect, friendship, and affection existing from the very foundation of our country and cemented during the World War are as firm and strong now as in the past.

To hold your ninth annual convention in Paris, where in the spring of 1919 your great organization was conceived, was a happy thought. Not only do you carry with you the good will of America but it is your privilege to lay at the graves of your comrades there the tribute of a grateful country which will never cease to hold them in hallowed memory. Nor will you fail to remember also the sons of France who freely gave their lives to a great issue.

This honor the people of our country gladly bestow upon you, and speaking for them I want to express my sincere belief that your mission will be of highest value in further emphasizing the cordial relations which exist between our two Republics and the lofty principles which they have fought to preserve and which they will always cherish.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

These legionnaires were ambassadors without portfolio, but they were enjoined by the President of our country to carry with them the good will of America, to lay at the graves of our comrades the tribute of our country, and to take our remembrances to the sons of France who gave their lives to a great cause.

On the flagship of the second American Expeditionary Forces, with the national commander of the Legion, was also the commander of the first American Expeditionary Forces, General Pershing. He, too, had the vision and the true conception of the importance and beneficent results of the undertaking. General Pershing said:

The assembling of the American Legion in France is not merely a reunion of veterans, but the joining together of two great nations having the same passionate love of peace, and there is strong reason to hope that the feelings we see manifested here may spread out in new directions and eventually help to protect other lands from the storms of hatred and violence.

It was also fitting that they should be welcomed by the generalissimo of the allied armies, and to them Marshal Foch addressed the following note of welcome:

MY DEAR COMRADES: No other country will understand you better than France. In the days of anguish Pershing came, leading the American army, and said "Lafayette, we are here!" And to-day, when France dresses her wounds the American Legion says, "For peace and liberty—together and forward!" Who is the Frenchman who would not answer this call?

(Signed) MARSHAL FOCH.

But the welcome which they received from Marshal Foch, from the rulers of the allied countries, from the peoples, and their former comrades, while at times attended with much formality and ceremony, was at all times whole hearted and genuine. At Cherbourg, at Antwerp, and at every port where ships carrying members of the Legion landed, there was a wonderful reception, which saw no let up in its sincerity throughout their entire stay in Europe.

It has been 10 years since the first American Expeditionary Forces landed on the shores of France to engage in a great war for justice and the liberty of the world. That expeditionary force arrived at a grave hour, when the hopes of free peoples hung in the balance. By its coming the balance was turned and the war brought to a victorious end.

The eyes of the world were upon the Legion upon this pilgrimage, and there was a solemnity about that endeavor that can hardly be expressed.

No such pilgrimage as this has ever been made before, where 20,000 ex-soldiers, subject to no restraint, but guided by self-imposed rules of self-respect, journeyed 3,000 miles from their homes, far across the sea, to meet their comrades of other days and to visit the scenes of their past experiences on the battle fields of a great war.

They went to meet and to mingle with their comrades and allies of other nations, and to do homage and to mourn at the shrine and graves of our heroic dead, where sleep in the sacred soil of France 30,000 of our comrade soldiers of America who died there on the field of battle.

It was for them an inspiring and a heart-swelling time. They thought of the honor and glory and pride that was theirs in having the privilege of returning under those hallowed circumstances to the land of their comrades in arms of the greatest war of all the ages, and of being received with such manifestations of enthusiasm and friendship as were given them by the people of France.

It is impossible to express their happiness and joy in going back to that wonderful country; that country where they fought in the Great War and where they felt was, in a sense, their second home; to that land, the most battle scarred of all the world, where life has been one long struggle to hold their land from the invader; where the passion of the people is love of country and love of liberty, fraternity, and equality, and where the proudest honor a man can have is to be a soldier of France and in time of need to die for his country.

In that old city of Paris they viewed the great and towering monuments which are to be seen on every hand, erected to the memory of the gallant and brave sons of France who have fought and bled and died for their country on every battle field of Europe and in the greatest wars of the world for more than a thousand years.

That land where the tombs alike of Napoleon and of Lafayette are to be found.

They realized that France was the cradle of liberty for Europe, for there was fought the great French Revolution, which made it possible for all Europe at last to be free.

They remembered that it was France that originated the idea of honoring the unknown soldier.

They had the great privilege of visiting the spot where the remains of that unknown French soldier lie in a simple tomb under the magnificent Arc de Triomphe, buried there with the highest honor, ceremony, and love that soldier or citizen had ever received before in France, in order to show the new idea and conception of service and sacrifice and honor and justice in the world.

They looked down those avenues extending from the Arc de Triomphe in all directions and they felt a glow of admiration for that mighty, that brave and artistic people who have outdone the world in that beautiful city.

But they felt and knew that the greatest thing France has done is through untold suffering and blood to carry highest and longest and farthest in Europe the torch of liberty and freedom and equality for mankind.

They recalled that 150 years ago France saw America struggling, 3,000 miles away, and attempting to be free, and though she had not yet attained freedom for herself, the people of France saw their opportunity to forward and help the cause of freedom in the world, and they gave us their ships and their money and their men and fought and died on land and sea for us and helped America to gain the priceless blessing of freedom and liberty and independence.

As members of the American Legion and as soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces, who had the privilege of fighting on the battle fields of France and who helped to drive the invader from her soil in the great World War, they were glad to acknowledge the eternal devotion and gratitude of the people of the United States of America to France for all she did for her in the Revolutionary War of 1776.

They remembered that she sent America that priceless patriot and blessing—Lafayette; that she sent us D'Estaing, De Grasse, and Rochambeau; and that in the changes and vicissitudes of time there came a day when we had an opportunity to show our gratitude, and when the soil of France was deeply invaded, 150 years after she had helped us to gain our independence, that America declared war upon the enemies of France, and that we made her war our war; that we said to her, "We offer you our services; we are ready to help to the last drop of our blood"; that we sent her then our own John J. Pershing; that we sent her 2,000,000 of our men, 3,000 miles across the sea.

That these soldiers of America arrived, and, fighting side by side with the weary, the worn, the maimed but dauntless, indomitable, and unconquerable veterans of France and her allies, who had been holding the battle line of hell for four long and terrible years and under the most dreadful engines of death and destruction that have ever been known, under the leadership of that great military genius, Marshal Foch, the enemy was at last hurled back and back, and a great and glorious victory was gained, and the freedom of France and the world was saved.

That visit to France was no holiday outing. It was a pilgrimage of peace to the graves of our dead, to the battle fields where we had fought, and to the capitals of the allied nations with whom we were associated in the World War.

It was my privilege and honor to be permitted to be with these comrades of ours, as I have said, and to those of you who did not go and to those who may have had any misgivings as to the wisdom of the undertaking or as to the kind of reception we would receive, I want to say that reception and the enthusiasm and cordiality of the French people were all that a most ardent friend of France or America could wish.

My own State had a delegation of almost 200 people at that convention, and when the Tennessee delegation, with the thousands of others from every State in the Union and from Alaska, Hawaii, and even from far-off China, marched down the beautiful streets and under the great Arc de Triomphe on the Champs Elysees of Paris, the acclaim and the enthusiasm of the French people knew no bounds.

Every legionnaire in that great parade marched by the tomb of the unknown French soldier, and with bowed head and reverent salute deposited upon the tomb a simple flower for memory and love and respect and comradeship to the man who had given his all, his life, for his country.

It was to me a proud moment to march with the Tennessee delegation and hear the French people on every hand, in every window, lining every street, and crowding every thoroughfare give vent to their feelings and to their love for America.

It was—

Vive Tennessee!
Vive L'États Unis!
Vive les Americains!

Long live Tennessee!
Long live the United States!
Long live the Americans!

Every other State delegation and contingent marching in that parade was received with like acclaim.

The Republic of France, the city of Paris, and the veterans of France gave entertainments in honor of the Legion. It was a personal welcome; it was a national welcome; and the day of our parade was by the French Republic made a national holiday.

I was in Paris during the entire week of the convention, and during that time I saw not one thing nor did I hear of one unpleasant incident to mar the eventful visit.

The French Chamber of Deputies and the Senate appropriated many millions of francs from the public treasury of France for the entertainment of the legionnaires. To give you some idea of the magnitude of the scale on which the Legion was entertained, I will state that 4,000 legionnaires were entertained at dinner at one time in one of the greatest buildings of France, the Hotel des Invalides.

The official welcome to the Legion was given at a banquet of the French Government at the Palais D'Orsay, but the welcome—really stupendous—came at the dinner in the Hotel des Invalides by the French Veterans' Association. It was a magnificent affair, requiring more than three weeks of preparation, and was one of the strongest gestures of French hospitality during the stay of the veterans at the convention. A dramatic touch was lent when hundreds of the French veterans, unmindful of a driving rain that drenched them, massed in the historic open-air court yard and cheered again and again their former comrades of the World War.

Not only did Paris extend every courtesy, but cordial invitations were given by the officials of many cities on the former battle fronts to the legionnaires, through their national commander, urging them to visit their cities and to bring delegations of legionnaires, so that these cities might show the American veterans in some small way their appreciation for what we had done in their liberation and in the saving of their country.

Those invitations came from the cities of Lille, Soissons, Chateau-Thierry, Rheims, St. Mihiel, and Verdun; and to these cities the national commander sent the national vice commanders of the Legion, with groups of legionnaires varying in numbers from 100 to 500.

At every city such receptions and honors were accorded them as befitted the dignity of the occasion and as would show the legionnaires that their sacrifices in the trying days of 1917 and 1918 were still remembered by a grateful people.

Upon the conclusion of the convention the national commander of the Legion and a group of some 250 legionnaires and members of the auxiliary, went on what would most properly be called a good-will tour to other cities of France and to various countries of Europe. This group visited many cities, where they were welcomed and where their reception was as enthusiastic as that which had been accorded to them in the city of Paris.

Newspapers everywhere heralded their coming, and the veterans of the World War of these cities and the city officials had planned splendid receptions for them.

In fact, I may say that the cities of the nations of our allies vied with each other in entertaining and doing honor to our veterans.

This group of legionnaires visited also the cities of Genoa, Pisa, and Rome in Italy.

To give you an idea of the scale on which they were entertained and the effort made to show the Legion respect and good will, not only to them but to America as well, I will state in Italy the program for their entertainment was arranged by the Italian Government, and nothing was left undone to show them that the Government of Italy and their Italian comrades felt signally honored by their visit and deeply grateful to them for their efforts in the waging of the war.

They were received by the King of Italy at his palace at Pisa. They were officially received by the city of Rome and by the Pope at the Vatican.

As an evidence of the favor in which the Government of Italy looks upon the American Legion in Italy, I have only to remind you of an article which appeared in the newspapers of the United States only a short time ago to the effect that in the Palace of Vimenale, in Rome, Premier Mussolini had had sumptuous quarters with every convenience set aside for the Department of the American Legion in Italy; and the Premier has also given the franking privilege in the use of the mails to all legionnaires in Italy in writing to former disabled soldiers of the American Army.

This is the first time that such authority was ever granted a foreign organization, for, as you may know, the American Legion in Italy is composed of Americans and Italians who fought in the American Army during the World War.

In Switzerland, a country which was not even in the World War, the city of Lucerne proclaimed a holiday and entertained our comrades.

In Strassburg, chief city of Alsace, so long torn from France, and in Metz, chief city of Lorraine, nothing was left undone to make their visit pleasant, and to show to the veterans of America that these Provinces, French in sympathy and French at heart, were grateful to us for having helped to liberate them from the rule of the German Government.

I was at Brussels when this group of legionnaires came to Belgium, and the warmth with which they were received assured me that Belgium had not forgotten the men of America who fought on the Belgian front.

They were received there by the King and Queen, were dined by the city of Brussels, by the Belgian Government, and by our comrades of that country.

From there the legionnaires went to London, where the veterans of Great Britain gave a luncheon to them, at which the Prince of Wales presided; the city of London gave a formal dinner to them, at which the lord mayor presided; the Government of Great Britain gave a dinner to them at which the Prime Minister presided, and the King and Queen of England gave a reception to the legionnaires and their wives and other members of the auxiliary at Buckingham Palace, an honor never before accorded on so large a scale by the King and Queen of Britain to any foreign delegation, as I am informed.

It is not easy for our soldiers to describe in words the sentiment that impelled them to an undertaking of this kind.

They went to show their friendliness toward France; their friends were going, they had left some of their comrades over there; they felt the urge of the renewal of that emotion which had stirred them when they went overseas in 1918; they wanted to visit again the scenes where their life's high adventure had been. There was no materialism in their visit.

They sacrificed to make this pilgrimage, and it gave to the world some new light upon the sentiment that is in the heart of every American, but which he sometimes through modesty and self-effacement tries to conceal. Our people are a people of ideals, and they are impelled by noble sentiments.

These legionnaires went together in a spirit of comradeship, and they met the French veterans, the Italian veterans, the Belgian and the British veterans in that same spirit.

They took a sorrowful pride in visiting the graves of their former comrades, but they took great pride in seeing the splendid care with which our Government is looking after those graves. They were pleased at the national spirit of hospitality that welcomed them to the countries of their former comrades, and they came away better citizens and better legionnaires for having made the venture and for having carried it to a successful conclusion.

Their entire trip, while full of pleasure, was at the same time tinged with sentiment and sadness.

On the voyage over, every boat carrying any sizeable contingent of legionnaires held memorial services in mid-ocean in memory of those who had served in the Navy—that illustrious Navy which took our Army over without the loss of a single soldier.

At the capitals of every allied country the national commander of the Legion, speaking for you and for me, and for our whole country, placed a wreath of remembrance upon the tomb of the unknown soldier of that particular country, and this exhibition of reverence shown toward the people of those countries brought forth in return a spirit of the deepest admiration for our Legion and for our country.

I have spoken at some length upon this recent national convention of the American Legion, because I feel that the second "A. E. F." must be classed with the first American Expeditionary Forces, and that these two events were among the highest points of patriotic endeavor to be found in the history of our country.

Being ambassadors without portfolio, but enjoined by the President to carry the good will of America, I can not but feel that the successful accomplishment of the second "A. E. F." was one of the greatest events of all time, and such as to bring the world nearer to peace, and will prove to be the cementing of a new feeling of comradeship and a renewal of that feeling of good will that existed among the allied nations on armistice day, 1918.

The American Legion deserves and should receive the congratulations of the Nation for their fine piece of work in the cause of peace. It was a gigantic undertaking that would have appalled men of less resolute character than those men who had fought and helped to win the great World War—the leaders of the American Legion.

This pilgrimage of this great number of our veterans of the World War was a long step forward for the peace of the world, and now that the way has been so well prepared the wisest and best thing the United States of America can do is to take advantage of this propitious opportunity and to bend our strongest efforts to the outlawry of unjust and unprovoked war. A great step forward to accomplish that much-desired result would be made by bringing about an agreement or treaty between the United States and France which would keep them from making war upon each other, because the ties of friendship between these two nations have been forged and welded so strongly by bonds of blood and service that they should live in peace and harmony until the end of time.

The example thus set by these two nations would extend to other nations, and ultimately might be the means of outlawing war and bringing peace to the world.

SENATE

MONDAY, January 16, 1928

(Legislative day of Saturday, January 14, 1928)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I present a privileged petition, being the amended petition of William B. Wilson, contesting the seat of WILLIAM S. VARE in the United States Senate. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

CLAUDE G. BOWERS'S JACKSON DAY DINNER ADDRESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD an address by Mr. Claude G. Bowers, of New York City, delivered at the Jackson Day dinner in this city on the 12th instant, on the subject "Back to the fundamentals."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Bowers's address is as follows:

BACK TO THE FUNDAMENTALS

One hundred years ago to-day conditions in America had created a paramount issue—shall the government be restored to the people, or shall it be made an instrumentality of monopoly for the exploitation of the average man? One hundred years ago this year, Andrew Jackson rallied the people to a memorable battle for the preservation of popular government and the subordination of money to man. The people responded, and Andrew Jackson won. And now, after just a hundred years, that paramount issue is back again; and the times demand that the party that Jackson led shall dedicate itself anew to the principles he fought for, and the policies he wrought for, and the victory he achieved.

When Andrew Jackson went forth to battle he unfurled no unfamiliar flag, but he marched under the battle-torn banner that was borne by Thomas Jefferson in his 12-year war to win a stake in government for every man and woman in the Republic.

Thomas Jefferson is the founder and philosopher of democracy; Andrew Jackson was the crusader and the sword.

And in Jackson's day, with Jefferson tottering to his tomb at Monticello, the philosophy of Jefferson required no interpreter—he who ran could read. He stood primarily for liberty—liberty of speech, liberty of the press, liberty in worship, and the greatest possible liberty in action consistent with the preservation of stability and order. He stood for the conservation of the rights of the States and local self-government everywhere.

He laid it down as an axiom of freedom, that that government is best which governs least—and that is sound Jeffersonian and Jacksonian democracy to-day. He believed that governments are made for men, and not men for governments; and he did not believe that governments are created to give some men the right to pick the pockets of their fellow men under the cover of the flag. He respected the rights of property, but above the rights of property he placed the rights of man—and that is sound democracy to-day. He was opposed to granting special privileges to the powerful, because he knew that the stability of society and the ultimate safety of property itself rests upon those adjustments of the governmental machinery that make for the greatest good of the greatest number.

Thus from his day on, whenever autocracy of privilege has seized on government the people have invariably restored the party of Jefferson and Jackson to power. And that restoration has meant less supervision of the citizen, fewer parasites upon the pay roll, lower taxes, more equitable laws, less privilege for the plutocracy, and greater opportunity for the masses of mankind.

With the triumph of Jefferson in 1800 the people entered upon their heritage, and then, lulled to sleep by a false sense of security, lost it to the selfish interests that never sleep. When Andrew Jackson assumed the leadership of his party, political power had been concentrated into the hands of a comparative few, acting under the inspiration of the most powerful moneyed institution that this Nation had then known. This invisible government was dictating policies to the representatives of the people. It was maintaining a lobby here in Washington which had become more influential in the molding of legislation than public opinion or the President. Throughout the country it controlled to a considerable extent the press and the agencies of propaganda. In almost every city of any size it had its so-called nonpartisan societies and clubs, responsive to the will of the financial dictator of the Nation. Through the instrumentality of the bank it coerced business men, dependent upon credit, into the doing of its will. Through the subserviency of the protected industries it was intimidating toilers in elections. And by throwing over the system the glamor of snobbery and by superciliously assuming a superiority of culture it had seduced or dragooned a large part of the intelligentsia into its ranks.

Thus the Jacksonians found the financiers against them, the beneficiaries of governmental graft against them, the greater portion of the press against them, a large per cent of the professional intellectuals against them; and against this combination, with all its money and prestige of power, Andrew Jackson led the people to a victory that literally preserved popular government for posterity and gave reality to the Democratic philosophy of Thomas Jefferson.

JACKSONIAN LEADERSHIP

And what sort of man was he who wrought this miracle?

Born in poverty, educated in the university of experience, and obsessed with a passionate faith in the people, he was eager to fight for the faith that was within him.

He was an organization man who believed that the effect of a victory should be determined by the men, down to the precinct workers and the district captains who had borne the brunt of the battle.

He was too wise to enter a conflict with enemies, spies, and traitors in the rear.

He had no patience with the timid or the time server, and he ordered the Miss Nancys and the Sister Sues back with the scullions and the cooks to make way for two-fisted fighting men upon the firing line.

His strategy of battle was to center upon a single issue, brush all extraneous matter out of the line of march, and, the strategy determined, to close debate and concentrate on victory.

Imagine if you can an Iago insinuating himself into Jackson's camp to propose the division of his army on evolution or the theory of relativity and living to report progress to the enemy who sent him.

He never fought with ping-pong stocks—he gave his men battle axes and artillery.

He never soft-pedaled his approach to conflict—he rode to battle waving a warrior's sword and shouting commands, and he rode at the head of the column.

He never inquired whether a policy would be good for the North, South, East, or West, for he knew that were it really good it would be good for the masses of the people everywhere.

He fought the common enemy, he waged no civil wars.

Under his courageous leadership the jingle of golden coin could not intimidate the army that he led, and the money barricades could not stop it, and the machinations of the enemy could not divide it, and thus it moved to inevitable and immortal victories for popular government and the economic rights of man.

JACKSONIAN METHODS

And how did he do it? By giving the people a fundamental issue that had a meaning at every fireside in every home in the country. He pointed to the intrenchments of monopoly and he said, "We will take that." He pointed to the growing power of privilege, and he said, "We will end that." He called attention to the increasing arrogance of class rule, and he asked the masses to follow him to battle for the restoration of a government of equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

Now it is not enough to arouse and mobilize the people unless they are given arms and ammunition and drilled to march all one way, responsive to command. And this he did by doing something never done before, and never better done, from that day to this; he organized the masses down to every precinct in the land. Yes, and he introduced to the American scene that much-abused and most essential class of men in a representative democracy, the practical politician; and he made him the responsible agent of the party in every village in the country. Then, ordering these men to charge the foe, he made it plain that should the fight be won, the victory would belong to those who had battled in the trenches and taken the scars of conflict.

Thus the army that Jackson led was an organized body, with a fundamental issue, marching in harmony all one way, militant and unafraid, tireless and sleepless, and it moved to battle under the Jeffersonian banners and with the Jacksonian audacity and swept the enemy before it.

THE RISING OF THE PEOPLE

But what a fight! Never in American history has any party ever faced a more formidable foe than that which organized greed had mobilized behind Nicholas Biddle, of Philadelphia, and the bank. It was a war between men and mammon, between democracy and plutocracy, and Jackson led his "rabble" if you prefer, against the armed and uniformed forces of "respectability," equipped with the money of the bank.

When the timid trembled he sent them to the rear; when the treacherous betrayed, he kicked them from the camp; when the Hamiltonians who had wriggled somehow into the party of Thomas Jefferson went over to the enemy, as they always do in a fight on fundamentals, he called on his reserves. And they came with waving branches and songs and shouts from the corn rows and the factories and the smaller stores, armed, drilled, munitioned by Jackson's hated practical politicians, and eager to make a frolic of a fight.

And the enemy? He used his control of credit to force the business man to fight with foolish fury against the rising of the people. He tried to intimidate the toiler by reducing or threatening to reduce the working forces of the factories. He tried to debauch the farmer by advertising with bank money that in the event of Jackson's defeat the merchants would pay $2.50 a hundred for pork and in the event of his election but $1.50. And because the Americans of that generation were men, not mice, they rose at that, en masse, and marched. On every hilltop, everywhere, men and women of every class put up their hickory poles, unfurled their flags, and raised their voices in the Jacksonian Marseillaise:

"Hurrah for the Hickory tree
From the mountain top down to the sea
May it wave o'er the grave of the Tory and knave,
And shelter the honest and free."

And when the song died down it was to sound the pæan of triumph; for organized greed had gone down before organized men, money had been made subservient to man, an English-speaking people wise with the wisdom of the centuries had crushed monopoly again, and Jeffersonian Democracy shimmered all the brighter in the reflection of Andrew Jackson's sword.

JACKSON'S FIGHT TO BE FOUGHT ANEW

Ah, but some one says that we have no Philadelphia banker now—why mention him? No—"westward the course of empire wends its way"—even as far as Pittsburgh.

And some one asks what Jefferson and Jackson have to do with present-day problems and conditions; and the answer is that there is scarcely a domestic issue that Jefferson thought for and Jackson fought for and Woodrow Wilson wrought for that is not a living vital issue at this very hour.

If the party that these men stood for stands to-day where these men stood for equal rights to all and special privileges to none—there is an issue. If it stands where these men stood against monopoly and autocracy in government and in industry—there is an issue. If it stands where these men placed it for the rule of the majority and the greatest good to the greatest number, there is an issue. If it believes, as these men did, that the debaucher of the ballot, and the hucksters in high places who sell the Nation's birthright to line their pockets belong to the penitentiary and nowhere else, there is an issue. And to put all in a sentence—if it stands where these men stood for democracy and against the oligarchy of a privileged class—there, there is an issue that can mobolize the people and make them march with waving banners and the will to victory in their hearts.

THE MORAL COLLAPSE

Six years ago the American people, grown weary of right doing, turned from Monticello and the Hermitage to worship for a while at the shrine of the "best minds" in the little dove cot of the Little Green House on K Street. That was the beginning of the most putrid period of official dereliction and corruption that this Nation has ever known. We have seen the Nation's oil reserves bartered away for a song and a bribe; and such has been the lowering of official standards that we saw men high in the State, intrusted with the protection of the Nation's property—and the Nation's honor—stand aside as indifferent spectators of the crime until the party of Jackson, under the brilliant leadership of the Senator from Montana, exposed the infamy and forced the restitution of the Nation's stolen goods.

So complete has been the moral collapse, that when, after the exposure of the scandals in the Department of Justice, the then Attorney General offered his resignation in response to the overwhelming demand of an outraged public sentiment, we had the humiliation of seeing the resignation received with an expression of confidence and regret.

Thus, with commercialized government letting down the bars to commercialized politics, we have seen organized corruption marching in open procession against the integrity of the ballot and going into the market place to treat United States Senatorships as secondhand pieces of furniture to be put upon the auction block and knocked down to the highest bidder. There was nothing vulgar or common about these auctions. They were fashionable affairs; only the very rich could afford to bid.

And now that we have it on the highest authority that contributing to a slush fund is just "like giving money to a church," I suppose we shall soon be paying off the repeaters within the precincts of the cathedral and knocking down Senatorships from the pulpits of the churches.

MONOPOLY AGAIN

We have seen the privileged classes put in possession of the very instrumentalities of government intended for the protection of the people—the Federal Trade Commission set to play in the nursery of big business; the Tariff Commission given to understand that its primary function is to find pretexts for raising the tariff tax on the consumption of the poor. This Tariff Commission was intended as a scientific commission for the service of the public; it has come to be a sentimental lifting derrick for the pig-iron industry.

We have seen the trend toward the monopolization of industry smiled upon by the administration, and have heard the proposal made to break down all restrictions that these monopolies may run amuck and glut their greed upon the helpless. It is said that this is in accordance with Jefferson's idea that there should be no unnecessary governmental interference with business; it is conveniently forgotten that had Jefferson had his way the bill of rights would have included a prohibition against monopoly in commerce.

With every class groaning under the burdens of taxation, we have seen reductions made in the taxes of the very rich, and, thanks to the Democrats and some Republicans in Congress, there is some hope that we may be able to reduce the burdens of the average business man; but the régime in power stands like Gibraltar against the lifting of the penny of the tariff tax upon consumption from the bowed backs of men and women who are forced to struggle for the mere necessities of life.

Where is the issue? asks the enemy. With monopoly encouraged, with corruption flagrant and unafraid, with "big business" in the saddle, booted and spurred, and the farmer in the ditch; and with a tariff system that picks the pockets of the millions to the tune of billions under the protection of the police, if the party of Jefferson and Jackson can find no issue, it is time for it to go into a court of moral and intellectual bankruptcy and apply for a receiver.

"PROSPERITY"

Ah, but they say they have an issue that will overshadow any that you can possibly find, the issue of "prosperity."

What is "prosperity"? One million men out of employment and 3,000,000 working part time. Is that prosperity?

The overcrowded employment agencies of the centers of population; is that prosperity?

Hundreds of thousands of farmers dispossessed by mortgages and taxes and driven to bankruptcy and despair; is that prosperity?

Two thousand nine hundred and forty-four bank failures in the last six years as against 746 during the eight years of Democratic administration; is that prosperity?

Seventeen thousand three hundred and thirty-three commercial failures in the first nine months of 1927, representing an increase of $100,000,000 in liabilities over the same period of the year before; is that prosperity?

You remember that we used to call on the commercial drummer to get an idea of the business conditions of the country. Why is he muzzled now? He knows business conditions, sales, and collections from the cross-roads store to the emporiums of the cities. Why not hear him now? Because we have turned our backs upon the average business man with whom he deals to judge prosperity by the profits of a few monopolistic industries enjoying the paternal privileges of government. The trouble with the official announcer of prosperity here is that he is unable to penetrate the smoke screen of Pittsburgh to the vast empire that stretches thence to the Pacific Sea. When I read these fabulous stories of prosperity without precedent I am persuaded that they must come from Palm Beach where the Aluminum Trust may loll luxuriously on the piazza, and the infant steel industry may dig its little pink toes in the sands. I have more faith in the Hoosier philosopher "Abe Martin," who says that "Til Moots went to Indianapolis Thursday and bought a pair of new boots with money left over from the Wilson administration."

"Prosperity"? Yes; in spots, few and all too far between; but over vast reaches of this continent "prosperity" is as the peace of Warsaw—it blossoms in the midst of ruin and desolation.

Ah, but they say that business is safer in their hands than ours, and we counter with the question, "What business do you mean?" And our answer is that the greatest single service ever rendered honest business in the entire history of this country was when the Wilson administration and a Democratic Congress wrote into the statutes the Federal reserve system—the greatest single piece of constructive statesmanship in the last three-quarters of a century.

THE SUMMONS TO BATTLE

All over the world to-day there is a movement against democracy and toward "the good old-fashioned plan that he may get who has the power, and he may keep who can." Thus the issue in America is as fundamental as when Jackson rallied the people to the defense of their heritage. That battle must be fought anew. Permit the present trend to go on a little longer and everything held sacredly American by the generation of Jackson will be lost beyond recall. We are once more back to the fundamentals. It brings to the fore the eternal and universal conflict of the two great schools of political thought that are greater than parties and greater than countries and as great as humanity, because they go to the placing of the political and economic status of the average man and woman.

The fight we are called upon to make in this centennial year goes to the determination of the very form of government under which we live. It involves the principle of quality before the law and in government. It embraces liberty, monopoly, and home rule. It takes in economy and an equitable system of taxation. Yes; the fight the rank and file demands the party make is for nothing less than the preservation of those fundamentals of Americanism without which no people can be really prosperous or happy and no nation truly beneficent or strong.

Let the word go forth that you fight again for the fundamentals, and the people will respond. They heard it when Andrew Jackson rallied them to the fight against the national bank plutocracy that had the people by the throat. They heard it when Woodrow Wilson summoned all the people to the assertion of political and economic rights with a constructive program resting on the elementals of Jeffersonian democracy.

Let the word go forth—and suit the action to the word—and the independent voters and the liberal republican will come back home after their long unhappy sojourn among the fleshpots in the temple of privilege. The time is ripe. The hour has struck. The duty is imperative and sacred. No time for discords now on nonessentials—and no possible palliation. In this centennial year of Jackson's victory we go forth to meet the common enemy with old Jackson looking on.

Now has come the time for action,
Clear away all thought of faction,
Out from vacillating shame—
Every man no lie contain,
Let him answer to his name—
Call the roll.

THE TARIFF AND AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 52) submitted by Mr. McMASTER, favoring a reduction of tariff schedules and the consideration of tariff legislation at the present session of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is my purpose to discuss the pending resolution. I realize that the time remaining for debate upon the resolution is brief and that a number of other Senators desire to participate in the discussion. For these reasons I do not intend to claim the attention of the Senate for a very long period.

It is my belief and contention that the pending resolution should be agreed to by the Senate. During the course of the debate some Senators have suggested that it constitutes an encroachment upon the body at the other end of the Capitol, the Constitution providing that measures affecting the revenues shall originate in the House of Representatives. It does not seem to me that there can be any objection, under our Constitution and methods of procedure, to the expression of opinion by the Senate on this very important subject. The resolution, of course, does not constitute legislation. It simply defines the readiness of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of legislation affecting the revenues.

Throughout the United States there is a growing sentiment in favor of revision of the tariff downward. This sentiment is in the minds and opinions of many citizens who are protectionists and who believe that the tariff should be employed to promote American industry. It is entertained almost unanimously by those who are not in sympathy with the doctrine of a high protective tariff. Unquestionably excessive tariffs constitute trade barriers. We have seen recently controversies arise between this Republic and the Republic of France, between our country and Argentina, over questions affecting existing tariffs. The tendency of some of the rates in important schedules of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act is to cut down both the import and the export trade of the United States, for it is a maxim that other countries as a rule can not take our products unless we also purchase from them the products which our people require.

It is not my intention now to enter into a detailed discussion of the rates in the existing law which need revision downward. During the course of the debate that subject has been entered into. It has been demonstrated, I think, that there is an intimate relationship between the tariff and the present condition of agriculture. Throughout the Middle West and the West the opinion is gaining ground that one of the most effective ways in which to afford agricultural producers relief is to diminish the cost of the commodities which they consume and the belief is general that this can be accomplished by a material reduction in some of the rates of duty now imposed under the tariff law.

The low prices of farm products are more oppressive than they would otherwise be because of the high prices of many manufactured products due to the tariff, products which farmers find it necessary to consume. Living costs in the United States continue on the whole too high. The logical process would be to cut down all living costs where they appear to be excessive, if that can be accomplished. Farmers would be benefited just as much by having the prices of the things they consume reduced, so long as that reduction does not go below the cost of production and a reasonable profit to producers, as if the prices of their products were substantially increased. It is amazing and amusing to hear in this Chamber the contention made by some of the advocates of farm relief that the country is enjoying an era of prosperity unparalleled in its previous history. I heard the stalwart Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], in an address to this body a few days ago, say at one time that the farmers are poorer now, their labors more unprofitable than ever before in the history of the Nation, and at the same time he insisted that the country as a whole is more prosperous than it has ever been. I take issue with the President, who, in a recent address, said that the "country as a whole is enjoying a prosperity that has never been exceeded." I take issue with the Senator from Indiana and other Senators who made that assertion.

I would not for political advantage or other purpose unfairly state the condition of industry in the Nation; nor would I intentionally give expression to pessimistic sentiments or opinions which are not justified or sustained by existing facts. Let me point out in some detail circumstances which contradict the contention that the country is unusually prosperous.

The Secretary of the Treasury stated in his annual report for 1927:

> While business began to fall below the totals of last year and is not as active as in the most of 1926, it can hardly be said to be subnormal, and the underlying fundamentals appear to be sound.

Now, if there is a man in the United States to whom Republicans generally look as their adviser on economic conditions and economic problems, it is the Secretary of the Treasury. I have quoted his opinion respecting business conditions in the United States, seriously and deliberately made in his annual report. I respectfully submit to Senators that it does not justify either the statement in the President's address or the enthusiastic remarks on the subject of prosperity recently delivered here while the resolution was under consideration by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

The Director of Foreign and Domestic Commerce stated in an address recently delivered that of 100,000 businesses examined by his bureau during 1927, 34,000 of them are not making any profits whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator repeat those figures again?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. They examined 100,000 businesses and found that 34,000 were not making any profits whatever. The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1925 shows that during that year of 5,479 corporations manufacturing textile and textile products other than clothing, only 3,359, or about three-fifths, reported net incomes. Of 6,792 corporations manufacturing clothing, 4,145, also about three-fifths, reported net incomes. Of 2,359 corporations manufacturing leather and other products, 1,373, just about three-fifths, reported net income. Of 21,529 corporations manufacturing metal and metal products, 12,760, again about three-fifths, reported net income.

Now, it is noticeable and notable that the corporations referred to are engaged in producing commodities which are protected by high rates of duty imposed under the Fordney-McCumber Act, so it becomes clear that even the protected interests, many of those enjoying the highest degree of protection they have experienced during the history of the country, are not earning net income. They are not paying income taxes in any amount.

Frequent reference has been made during this debate to bank failures as an evidence of adverse business conditions. In 1918, 20 State banks in the United States failed, having a total liability of $5,131,000. There were no national banks that failed during that year.

In 1919 there were 50 failures of State banks, with total liabilities of $10,520,000; and four national bank failures, with total liabilities of $1,000,850.

In 1920, 119 State banks failed, with liabilities of $50,708,000. Ten national banks failed, with liabilities of $3,350,000.

In 1921, 404 State banks failed, with liabilities of more than $173,000,000; 47 national banks failed, with liabilities of $28,500,000.

In 1922, 277 State banks failed, with total liabilities of $77,735,000; and 35 national banks failed, with total liabilities of $16,453,000.

In 1923, 578 State banks failed, with total liabilities of $203,739,000. During the same year 77 national banks failed, with liabilities of $36,568,000.

In 1924, 613 State banks failed, with total liabilities of $202,926,000; 121 national banks failed, with $69,656,000 of total liabilities.

In 1925, 361 State banks failed, with $100,488,000 total liabilities; 103 national banks failed during the same year, with $64,209,000 total liabilities.

I have only partial figures for 1926. In that year 772 State banks failed, with total liabilities—the greatest of any of the years—of $266,000,000. I have not the figures as to the national-bank failures for the year 1926.

In 1927 there was a diminution to 488 failures of State banks, with total liabilities of $195,000,000.

Mr. President, those figures are significant. They show that from no failures, substantially, in 1918 there occurred in 1925 something like 500 failures of State and national banks in the United States. In 1926 there were 772 failures of State banks alone.

Why does the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] insist and why does the President assert that, notwithstanding the conditions which I have described, the country is prosperous to a degree that justifies making it the sole issue of the Republican Party in the approaching campaign? Do they believe that the people of the country are so ignorant that they do not know when facts of this kind are misstated? Do they believe that any number of repetitions of a false assertion will delude and deceive the people of the country into maintaining the party now in power?

Let me continue the discussion of this very interesting and important subject for just a few moments. Bradstreet's report for the first nine months of 1927 shows 15,125 failures of commercial business houses, with liabilities of $462,810,996—an increase of 29 per cent in the amount of liabilities as compared with the same period of 1926. The increase, comparing 1927 with 1926, is 29 per cent, or almost one-third.

The relative figures for commercial failures for the first six months of 1927, by R. G. Dun & Co., disclose 12,292 failures, with liabilities amounting to $281,527,518, as compared with 11,476 failures, with liabilities totaling $209,888,501 during the corresponding period of 1926—an increase of 700 in number and of $70,000,000 in liabilities.

A decrease in income from farm products from $10,770,000,000 in 1924 to $9,266,000,000 in 1927 in the opinion of some economists is the real cause for the irregularity in the trend of business.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics furnish even more conclusive evidence of the fallacy of this boast of general prosperity. An examination reveals that employment is now 20 per cent less than in 1920 and there has been a decrease in the annual pay roll during the period from 1920 to 1927 by one-fourth. Under the index figure of 100 as of 1923 employment in manufacturing industries during 1920 was 118.8 per cent, while in 1926 it stood at 92.4 per cent, a shrinkage of 20 per cent. The decrease in the pay rolls for the same period is about one-fourth, or 25 per cent.

Mr. President, this is only a partial statement of actual conditions, but it touches many important industries in various parts of the United States. It is amazing beyond the power of the mind to grasp how Republican Senators and a Republican President can boast in the face of these facts and figures that the country is enjoying unusual prosperity.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, as amended the resolution before us reads as follows:

Resolved, That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive, and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive rates, establishing a closer parity between agriculture and industry, believing it will result to the general benefit of all;

Resolved further, That such tariff revision should be considered and enacted during the present session of Congress; and

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the House of Representatives.

It will be observed, Mr. President, that the resolution recites that "many of the rates in the existing tariff schedules are excessive." Upon the very threshold of the brief remarks which I shall undertake to make—briefer if not interrupted—I ask the Senator from South Dakota to which of these schedules does he refer. What specific definite item in these schedules does he consider to be excessive; not pausing for an answer now, I inquire what he means by the word "excessive"?

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, does the Senator wish me to answer the question now?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Senator may do so, but in order that I may not detain the Senate too long the Senator and others will put me under additional obligations if they will not interrupt me unless interruption will serve to develop relevant facts. However, if the Senator wishes to ask me a question, I will pause.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator take a few moments and devote his time to the hearings before the Finance Committee of the Senate in reference to the duties which are imposed on aluminum products. Such an examination, I think, would furnish food for thought. I further suggest to the distinguished Senator from California that the tariff rates affecting an institution which began with a capital of $1,500,000 and in the course of a few years, through the rates accorded it in various protective tariff measures, increased its capital to the staggering sum of $200,000,000, could well bear the inspection of the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, answering briefly, let me say that I have devoted some attention and some little degree of thought to that immediate item. I happened to appear a number of times before the Committee on Finance, but there are certain Senators here, some of whom do me the honor to listen, who have complained—I was about to say whined—over certain rates who did not give the committee the benefit of their wisdom or their suggestions when the act of 1922 was under consideration by the Finance Committee. But be that as it may, I shall approach that item in a moment. Lest, however, I forget to do so in the hurry of getting through, let me inquire, if the rates now imposed upon aluminum under either or any of the sections of the law dealing with that commodity be excessive, why has not the Senator from South Dakota or the Senator from Montana or the Senators from any other of our 48 great States invoked the power of the President under the present act to reduce each and every of those rates fully 50 per cent?

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California further yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. McMASTER. I am very glad indeed that the Senator has asked that question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will be glad to have the Senator answer it.

Mr. McMASTER. When I first came to the Senate two years ago, being interested in the tariff schedules, I sent to the Tariff Commission and asked for definite information with regard to the cost of production in America and the cost of production abroad pertaining to two very important industries in the United States.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Let us hold our minds on aluminum.

Mr. McMASTER. Yes; but permit me to finish.

The Tariff Commission, which has been established here for years, which has 200 employees, which has an unlimited amount of money at its disposal, a commission that is supposed during these years to have been ascertaining with accuracy the very information of which the Senator speaks, sent to me certain information that was wholly inadequate; and, in fact, it admitted that it had no adequate information. We contend that not only the aluminum schedule but hundreds of other schedules in the present tariff act are excessive.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, not to be impolite, I can not wait here all day for the Senator.

Mr. McMASTER. Please permit me to finish. The record reveals that during these years that the Tariff Commission has been in existence, with all of the means at its command to ascertain this information, it has passed upon some 25 cases.

That has taken six years. If there are 200 schedules that ought to be changed, it will take 48 years to bring about the result that the Senator from California suggests ought to be brought about in that way; and the Senators now living will be dead and gone long before that time arrives.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And the Senator from South Dakota thinks that this Congress could correct all those evils during this session?

Mr. McMASTER. They could correct some of them in less than 48 years.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Touching section 315, the so-called flexible section of the tariff act, I am gratified to be informed that the Senator from South Dakota was aware of that section. I had intended to read it. Without taking the time of the Senate, I will ask that that section be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered,

The subdivision (a) of that section is as follows:

SEC. 315. (a) That in order to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States and to put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended, whenever the President, upon investigation of the differences in costs of production of articles wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States and of like or similar articles wholly or in part the growth or product of competing foreign countries, shall find it thereby shown that the duties fixed in this act do not equalize the said differences in costs of production in the United States and the principal competing country he shall, by such investigation, ascertain said differences and determine and proclaim the changes in classifications or increases or decreases in any rate of duty provided in this act shown by said ascertained differences in such costs of production necessary to equalize the same. Thirty days after the date of such proclamation or proclamations such changes in classification shall take effect, and such increased or decreased duties shall be levied, collected, and paid on such articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila): Provided, That the total increase or decrease of such rates of duty shall not exceed 50 per cent of the rates specified in Title I of this act, or in any amendatory act.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. My experience under section 315 has not been so unhappy as the experience of my friend from South Dakota. I invoked the power of the President under section 315 on behalf of the producers of California. We have the products of all zones and all climates that need protection but we are not here whining, not here inveighing against the Republican Party's tariff act, because we did not secure everything we sought. We did not get all we wanted. I thought and I still think, for example, that we should have had higher and adequate tariff rates on Turkish leaf tobacco; and I am going to resume that fight when the tariff bill again comes properly before the committee and the Senate.

Mr. McMASTER. Then I suggest to the Senator that he vote for this resolution, and speed the day when he can accomplish that very purpose.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Senator will find that I am a champion and defender of the true American system of a protective tariff, properly so characterized by great Henry Clay, some of whose speeches I commend to some gentlemen in this Chamber.

I invoked the power of the President in respect to maraschino cherries. There was a hearing. It took some time; but the President, being authoritatively advised as to the facts and perceiving that that product was not adequately protected, exercised his power and increased the rate 50 per cent.

I invoked the power of the President under section 315 in respect to magnesite, a product produced in my State and doubtless in other States of the Union. A hearing was had, facts were laid before the commission, arguments were presented, reasons assigned, and the President within the last 30 days exercised his power and increased the rates on magnesite 50 per cent.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator has been discussing maraschino cherries. For what purpose are those cherries used by the Senator and the people of his State since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, and the enactment of the Volstead law?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I know that West Virginia is greatly concerned in the uses to which certain of our products are put.

Mr. NEELY. I am not greatly concerned. But I am mildly curious to know how this small fruit is utilized. Therefore, I beg the Senator, who is an authority on the subject, to enlighten us.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am a profound student of that branch of industry—theoretically.

Mr. NEELY. And of all other branches. But for what purpose do they use maraschino cherries in California?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, well, I can not hope to instruct the Senator from West Virginia. That were a hopeless task. Not to indulge in levity, however, that is a very important industry, which comes in direct competition with the producers of Italy; and, for reasons which were made perfectly plain, the Tariff Commission reported the fact, and the President exercised his judgment and his power and raised the rates, as I have stated.

Mr. NEELY. Since the able Senator has with such great accuracy and clearness answered my question, I am emboldened to ask him if he will not inform us about the value of the maraschino cherry industry in California?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have not the figures before me, but it is a very important industry; and I dare say cherries are raised in practically all of our States, and I imagine also in the beautiful State represented here by my friend from West Virginia.

On behalf of the California Poultry Association and the National Poultry Association, I have filed with the President, to be referred to the commission, a petition asking for an increase of the rates of duty on certain poultry products. I invite the immediate attention of Senators to the fact that we of the Pacific coast are brought in more direct competition with oriental products than perhaps citizens in other or remote States. I need not consume time in pointing out the importance to South Dakota, to Iowa, to Minnesota, to North Dakota, as well as to my State, of this industry. I repeat that, on behalf of the national association as well as the California association, we have lodged with the President a petition asking for an increase of rates on certain of these products, particularly powdered eggs and frozen eggs, that come from China and other oriental countries. I am hopeful that the commission will soon report the facts to the President and that he will see the necessity and the wisdom of exercising his power and increasing these rates.

There is also pending before the commission the petition adverted to by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in which matter I am deeply interested, namely, the petition for an increase of the duties on onions. The delays in ascertaining and reporting the facts, on which the President acts, are almost intolerable. One of the reasons for the delay, as given by the commission, has been that as they construed the law they were obliged to proceed or send to the foreign countries, there to make individual and personal inquiry as to the cost of production; and we are well aware that producers or manufacturers in certain foreign countries refuse to open their books for the purpose of the examination.

That being so, I have ventured to state to the commission that these facts could be ascertained satisfactorily under the law without the immediate foreign inquiry, and that these facts, sufficient under the law to authorize the President to exercise his power, could be ascertained in other ways and immediately by the invoice prices as revealed at the customhouse. But, be that as it may, I agree with Senators that the rules and the regulations as to ascertaining these facts should be changed, if necessary, to speed the inquiry and to bring about relief—relief by way of raising or lowering a given rate.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I just want to suggest that I think the Senator is quite correct, and that if we proceed to revise the tariff through his methods at the rate that it has been revised in the past it will take nearly half a century to accomplish it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, no; it will not, Mr. President.

Mr. McMASTER. It has taken 6 years to adjust 25 cases; and if there are 200 cases to be adjusted it will take just 48 years to bring about that result. That is a mathematical calculation, and there is no guesswork about that statement.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Senator, as he tells us, has invoked section 315 and sought to induce the President to lower certain rates, as I understand him. I said that my experience had not been so unhappy. There are pending, it is true, many other applications for relief; but this, in my judgment, is not the time to undertake, during this session, to rectify or correct any excessively high or inadequately low rates of tariff.

This resolution speaks in general terms of the schedules. It alleges that many schedules are "excessive" and favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive rates, "establishing a closer parity between agriculture and industry," whatever that may mean.

I do not wish to engage in disquisition over phraseology. Words, of course, sometimes express thought, but we do not always speak with precision; we do not always think with perspicacity or speak with perspicuity—if that be the proper way to express it.

I would like to ask the Senator whether the farmer is not an industrialist, whether farming is not an industry, whether it is not one of the most important industries, upon which the very life of the Nation rests, upon which the very prosperity of every village and city and metropolis rests?

I remember a great speech delivered by a great American, certainly he was a great orator—and I use that word in its original and classic sense. William Jennings Bryan was a great orator. He could make the worse appear to be the better cause. He loved his country well. We differed, but I never questioned his patriotism, his sincerity, his devotion to the people, rich and poor, high and low. In the great speech which brought about his first nomination for the Presidency, delivered yonder in Chicago, he reminded the American people, he reminded the reactionary Democratic Party, that the poor man, the day laborer, the man on the farm, in the mine, on the railroad, in the shop, the poor man who went with his dinner pail to his labor and returned to his cottage, was a business man. I here venture to say and remind the Senate that the farmers of this country are engaged in industry. I decline to accept the differentiation between farming and manufacturing industries of our country. They are all engaged in industry, important industry, the one dependent on the other.

Even as the prosperity of the city depends upon the prosperity of the country, so, conversely, the prosperity of the country, of the producer, the farmer, rests upon the prosperity of the city. Their interests are mutual. They are corelated. You can not separate them and have prosperity for either. Therefore, when I hear in the Senate thoughtful Senators inveigh against the rates on "industry," they will pardon me if I wonder to what they refer, to what branch or division of industry.

I asked one of my learned friends the other day—I think it was the Senator from South Dakota—whether he regarded mining as falling within the term "farming," and he said "No," and technically that may be so. But mining is an industry, and a vastly important industry. When I see the very floor of this Chamber wet with the tears of men describing the dark picture and deploring the conditions of the farmer, I wonder also, Mr. President, why something has not been said on behalf of the miners of our country. In saying that I do not have in mind only the miners for coal. There are other mining industries than the mining of coal. Out in the West, in my own great State, many of the so-called low-grade gold mines are, if not finally abandoned, silent. Certain villages once prosperous are practically deserted. Why? There are reasons which it is not necessary now to state. But mining is a great industry, and every industry of the great city of Baltimore, represented by the scholarly Senator who sits before me [Mr. BRUCE], a great manufacturing city, a great industrial city, is dependent on the prosperity of the mining and other industries. If I analyze his master mind correctly, the Senator from Maryland must agree with me that the prosperity of the country is essential to the prosperity of his own city, for if the country languishes, if other sections of our country falter and become palsied, Baltimore will suffer, even as all other great central manufacturing cities will suffer; and if these great manufacturing cities are industrially paralyzed, the farmer, the agriculturist, will suffer.

I therefore come back to what I set out to inquire, why, when this resolution was introduced, its author did not in direct, plain terms aim at some particular schedule or item in the schedule—for there are hundreds of items in each schedule—where the duties, as he thought, were excessive. During his statement I inquired whether he was not willing to recite in his resolution that there were certain schedules or items in schedules too low, which should be raised, and he declined to accept my suggestion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. With pleasure.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think beyond question there are many items in the present tariff law upon which the tariff ought to be readjusted. I will not take the Senator's time to enumerate them, but will state one as an illustration.

There is a patriotic, public-spirited gentleman living in Pennsylvania who proposes to erect a magnificent carillon on his property in Florida, not for his own entertainment and amusement but for the public culture and for the interest and pleasure of the people. This carillon would involve the importation of 62 bells of a kind manufactured in Belgium, no such bells being manufactured in the United States at all. The duty on all bells under the tariff law is 50 per cent. If those bells should cost, say, $100,000 in Belgium, this man would have to pay $50,000 to get them into the United States.

That is not of any particular concern or interest to any manufacturer of the United States. Bells of that superior tone, which can be heard some 20 miles, are not manufactured in the United States at all. It seems to me that in an instance like that the tariff is certainly out of all reason.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I answer that observation? In such case, assuming the facts to be as stated by the Senator, personally I have no doubt but that if an appropriate petition were filed the President would reduce the duty 50 per cent. Moreover, I would join with the Senator in a case of that kind in asking that the duty be removed entirely.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have introduced a bill to that effect; but the trouble is that the committee evidently hesitates to reduce the tariff on specific items, because, I presume, they apprehend that if they make such a recommendation in one case they would probably find themselves in the midst of a general tariff reduction. Therefore, they have refused to report this bill up to this time. I assume that is the reason.

There is the trouble. If you pick out different items in the tariff law and try to correct those specifically and individually, you will find yourselves, as I have said, in the midst of a general tariff reduction, and for that reason it seems to be opposed. I can figure out no other reason, because there are instances—and I could enumerate many others—where the law is not beneficial to manufacturers in this country, but is really harmful and hurtful to citizens of the country.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Perhaps the reason assigned is a good and sufficient reason.

Mr. President, let me devote a moment longer to this flexible section of the tariff law. A very persuasive argument can be made as to the unconstitutionality of that section. A persuasive argument can be advanced against the policy of that section. But quite apart from the policy or constitutionality of the law, this is not the time to discuss those two propositions.

I will add, however, that I have very seriously questioned the legality of that section, having regard to the Constitution, and I have very seriously questioned the policy of it. But such is the law, and whilst we have that law presumed to be constitutional, presumed to be legal and valid, I have wondered why gentlemen complaining of specific items in the tariff did not invoke the power of the President under that section.

My experience, again to refer to it, has been upon the whole quite satisfactory.

If the Tariff Commission, as now constituted, would adopt the method of taking the invoice prices as they come to the customhouses as indicative of the original cost of production, with certain other information easily gathered, there need not be the long delay in ascertaining the facts upon which the President is authorized to act.

I had set down here to say, and I think I will say it, that if this resolution had not borne the name of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] I should have thought it was launched by some learned gentleman on the other side of the aisle, which, though it may divide, should not estrange us; or perhaps by a disciple of Cobden, or by some unreconciled and unashamed disciple of the old-time international free trader. But the Senator doubtless thinks he was serving his State and the Nation by aligning himself with Senators who repudiate his doctrine.

I digress to inquire whether all the farmers in this country live in North Dakota or South Dakota or Iowa, my native State. With two members in the Cabinet from Iowa, one of them a future President, and one humble son now representing in part the great State of California in the Senate, Iowa is doing pretty well; she is not bankrupt, her farms are not valueless, her people are not hungry or in rags, notwithstanding the direful, doleful picture of Iowa painted by my militant friend from that State [Mr. BROOKHART].

Mr. HARRISON. I did not understand what the Senator said about the future President from Iowa.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The next President, I say, was born in Iowa.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, the next President!

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; the next President! Nothing would please me better, if Democratic misfortune should overtake the Nation, than to see my friend the senior Senator from Mississippi as Vice President.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did the Senator refer to Governor Lowden when he said the next President was born in Iowa?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Need I be more specific, Mr. President? Need I speak to my friend from Alabama in plainer terms? I referred to a son of Iowa now a member of the Cabinet.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not hear that part of it. The Senator must be referring, then, to Mr. Hoover.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I was referring to Mr. Herbert Hoover.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The happy reference to my friend, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], made by the Senator from California, inspires me or causes me to ask whether or not the Senator has in mind the hope that the Senator from Mississippi might be taken from the floor of the Senate so that he would not throw so many barbs at the Republican side of the Chamber?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Far from that, Mr. President; for my life in Washington and in this Chamber has been made perfectly delightful by the good humor, the smiles, the cleverness, the wit, and the wisdom of the Senator from Mississippi. He never embarrasses me. He never angers me. Indeed, the more he talks about the Republican Party the stronger it becomes; wherefore I thank him. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I can not refuse to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. Where does the Senator's candidate for President stand on the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Where does Governor Smith stand?

Mr. COPELAND. I explained at some length the other day where Governor Smith stands and was told by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that he could not support any candidate who was not for the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act. May I ask the Senator in all seriousness where Mr. Hoover stands on this great issue?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Of course, the question is so germane to the present discussion and so material to the pending resolution that I am tempted to answer the Senator's question. But let us reserve that for another occasion. The great Secretary of Commerce will make himself perfectly understood by the American people on all questions. Of course, he will not convince or satisfy my friend from New York, but I am sure he will convince and satisfy an overwhelming majority of the American people.

Mr. COPELAND. That is to say, if I correctly understand the Senator, it does not make any difference where Mr. Hoover stands on that subject; that so long as he is a Republican, that is enough?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. With me; yes. I am like my friend from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], who is not ashamed to say he is a Democrat. I am not ashamed to say that I am a Republican, without a prefix or any suffix. I am a Republican. I do not think I am wiser than all the other members of my party. I do not arrogate to myself an elephantine superiority over all other Republicans. I sometimes follow, rarely lead, but I am here to say that the Republican Party will nominate a worthy American citizen, and I entertain a rational hope and a well-fixed belief that he will be elected and continue the wise policies of this administration, and that citizen will be the great citizen from California.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Pardon me just a moment to finish that thought, utterly irrelevant to this discussion.

I am a Republican. I am very proud to remember that, in the first national convention which the Republican Party held in Philadelphia, California presented John C. Frémont, of California, as its candidate, who became the candidate of the party. We were weak then, it is true, and the great Pennsylvanian, James Buchanan, was elected President. But I am prouder still of the fact that the delegation of 12 from California cast its 12 votes for Abraham Lincoln for Vice President, and that we lived to see him sit in the seat of Washington. From a very early time I took my stand under the banner of the Republican Party, and if I may, without reflection, paraphrase the words of the greatest orator that ever sat in this Chamber, the most eloquent man that ever spoke in the Senate—and I have in mind all of the great Senators who have honored this body—if I may paraphrase the words of Col. E. D. Baker, the great Senator from Oregon, who died yonder at Balls Bluff, Where in youth my feet were planted, there my manhood and my age shall march.

I have been a Republican all my life.

I believe in the principles of the Republican Party. I glory in its achievements. I support its policies. I hurl no anathema at Democratic Members. I have no feeling of hostility toward them. I believe in principles and I try to uphold them. So if there be any doubt lingering in the mind of any one as to my position in politics, let that doubt be forever removed. And I am proud and happy to add that I am one of the great majority of the American people.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. I have listened with the greatest interest to what the Senator from California has said, and I think he makes himself well qualified for the nomination because he said he is a Republican, and admits it and glories in it; but I would like to ask the Senator from California if Mr. Hoover is a Republican?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. Hoover is a Republican.

Mr. COPELAND. How long has he been a Republican?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. A great many years. The Senator from New York was once a Republican, too.

Mr. COPELAND. It seems to me there was once a time when Mr. Hoover was flirting with the Democratic Party for the nomination. Can the Senator tell us when he became a Republican?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I would not be at all surprised if the Democratic Party, which meets in Houston, will nominate him, join with the Republicans, and make his nomination unanimous. Of course, the Senator from New York was once an honored member of the Republican Party and we suffered a great loss, an irreparable loss, but he has become such a distinguished and valiant Democrat that we must congratulate that historic party upon its acquisition.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very much surprised at the Senator. I was a Republican for a while, but I became ashamed of it, and on that account I left the party and became a Democrat. But Mr. Hoover, much more recently than my defection, was uncertain whether he was a Democrat or a Republican. The Senator from California this morning qualified himself for the nomination, and so far as I am concerned, I think he is amply qualified for the office and would grace it, but he has not demonstrated to all the country or his own party that Mr. Hoover is a Republican, and he has not yet satisfied the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] whether Mr. Hoover is for the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment, or is not. Of course, there must be a united Republican Party or Mr. Hoover would not have a chance even for the nomination.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have long since ceased to try to satisfy the Senator from Idaho. The Senator from Idaho was the one, the only Republican who voted against the tariff act of 1922. There were three noble Democrats, upstanding, far-seeing, thoroughbred Democrats who voted for that act. I refer, of course, to the two Senators from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL and Mr. BROUSSARD] and to the splendid Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. They were the three Democrats who, upon the final roll call, voted for this wholesome legislation. But the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], for reasons which doubtless were satisfactory to him, voted against it; and I am afraid he has closed the door of the White House against himself forever.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to propose a unanimous-consent agreement. The time is getting short within which the debate may continue, and several Senators want to speak. I therefore propose that we extend the time of the Senator now occupying the floor 30 minutes longer, that thereafter all speeches be limited to 30 minutes, and that the time for the final vote be fixed at 4 o'clock instead of 3 o'clock.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall not take up the time of the Senate much longer. Of course, it can not be done. To attempt it will only take up time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator from Iowa that his request would necessitate calling a quorum and would only take up a lot of time.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his request.

Mr. BROOKHART. Very well; I withdraw the request.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, returning to the beaten path, having wasted too much time in wandering roundabout and speaking on matters which really have no proper place here at this time for consideration, I repeat that I regret exceedingly that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] felt it his duty to introduce the pending resolution. If he thought that its passage here and by the House would be followed by an appropriate bill introduced into that chamber, and if moreover he thought he could get any aid or comfort from the Democratic Members of either House then—and with apologies I say it—he was deluded. He is now under a fatal delusion. We can not hope for assistance from Members who are opposed to us in theory, honestly opposed, firmly opposed. Whether we call it a tariff for revenue only, a tariff for revenue with incidental protection, or whether we adopt any nomenclature, we know that there are two schools in America, and that there are Members of the Senate and the House who are irreconcilably divided in respect to tariff legislation, and that we can not look to the Democratic Party for relief for agriculture or for any other American industry.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes, but I wish to hasten along and get through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California declines to yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, no, Mr. President; I do not decline to yield; but I do desire to hasten along and get through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California yields to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McMASTER. There may be two schools in regard to the tariff system, but there should not be two schools; there should not be even one school favoring excess rates in tariff schedules.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly not. Wherefore I am opposed to the resolution because I think it untimely and inopportune for reasons which have been stated again and again by others and which need not be repeated by me. This is not the proper place for such a resolution. If we should pass it, it would go to the House and be met with derision. It is conceivable that we have the naked right to express our opinion upon any subject under the sun, but since this resolution relates to a matter which under the law must originate in the House, I am very sure the resolution would not receive any welcome in the House of Representatives, no more of a welcome than was accorded the resolution which the Senate passed the other day in respect to the meeting of Congress.

The pending resolution, if adopted, can not move the House to action; it can not bring about the introduction of a bill; and it would be abortive and utterly without any beneficial or other effect. It can not stampede the House or any protectionist; it can not stampede the Senate, but it can take, as it has taken, much of our time.

I do not wish to say that the resolution was presented for any hidden or ulterior purpose. I do not wish to question the motives of the Senator. It has been rather timidly stated that the resolution was offered in order to bring about a more favorable consideration of another measure hitherto spoken of as the McNary-Haugen bill. My views upon that proposed legislation are known. About the only good thing connected with that bill is the name of the Senator who fathers it. That is about all in it that has any merit, in my poor judgment.

If this resolution should be adopted and the House should agree and a bill should be introduced to revise the tariff schedules downward, what then? It is perfectly plain to all of us that such a bill could not, would not pass the House; could not, would not pass the Senate during this session, even if we devoted all our time to its consideration. In the meanwhile what becomes of other pressing, vital measures, such as the alien property bill, the revenue measure, and flood control, not to mention other vitally important measures which we should consider and dispose of if humanly possible at this session? Time is on the wing and it stays for no man. We should consider the practical situation, and not launch upon one piece of proposed legislation to the exclusion of all others.

I again put the question to thoughtful Senators on this side of the Chamber and to those yonder who know that certain industries need protection, What good would come from the adoption of this resolution? Does any Senator here, particularly does the Senator who submitted the resolution, want another Walker tariff or another Wilson tariff? I refer to the bill introduced by Representative Wilson, of West Virginia. Is there anyone here now on this side of the Chamber who is yearning for another Underwood Tariff Act? Does the Senator from South Dakota wish a Mississippi flood of foreign imports inundating America?

Mr. President, time will not permit me or others to engage in a defense of the American protective-tariff system. Let me ask, however—and I appeal to the historical knowledge of the Senate—is it not a fact that the second bill that was passed by the Congress, signed by George Washington on the 4th day of July, 1789—timed on that day as a patriotic act—was a measure designed to afford protection to American labor? From that second bill which passed Congress in 1789 to this hour we have been in need of protecting American labor as against suicidal competition with the poorly paid labor of other countries? Is it not true and can it not be demonstrated that the American laborer, whether he be in the factory or on the farm, on the railroad or in the forest, in the city or in the village, has stood up for adequate protective tariff laws to protect him as against the poorly paid, the poorly housed, the poorly clad, the unhappy laboring men and women in other less fortunate countries than ours?

On some other occasion, if not here, elsewhere, I shall undertake to show, Mr. President, with respect, however, always for those who differ from me, that the prosperity of industry in factory and on farm in America rests upon adequate protection as against imports from other countries of the east or of the west.

I speak with some feeling upon that subject because we on the Pacific coast were the first to sound the alarm against oriental immigration. We were opposed to such immigration and we are opposed to the products of the cheap labor of the Orient coming into competition with American production. We can not compete with them. Does my friend from South Dakota agree with the learned Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who told us that the farmer was not benefited at all or appreciably by the tariff rates? If the Senator from Tennessee were present, I would put this question to him—and with deference and respect in his absence I put it—Does he think that the Senators from Florida agree with him? Ask the two learned Senators from that State if they agree with him when he says, in effect, that a tariff on agricultural products means nothing to the American producer.

Ask the two great Senators from Arkansas—the one the leader of the Democratic side, the other the junior Senator from Arkansas, whose mind is as brilliant as Sheridan's, whose wit is as keen as Swift's—whether they agree that the tariff has no beneficial effect on American agriculture. To the Senators from Florida is due the increase in the tariff on grapefruit and the Senators from Arkansas voted for the tariff which we of California asked for on rice, which staple commodity is also produced in the States of Louisiana and Arkansas. Ask the two Senators from Louisiana whether agriculture is in need of tariff protection. Mining, we are told, does not come within the category of agriculture, but my eloquent friend from Alabama was very alert and very sincere when he voted for the tariff on amorphous graphite, mined in the great State of Alabama. Ask the Senators from Arizona, New Mexico, and Wyoming whether agriculture, including livestock, is benefited by tariff rates.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not understand that the matters referred to by the Senator have any bearing whatever upon the pending resolution. This resolution relates to excessive tariffs.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senators to whom the Senator has referred were here to speak for themselves, they would say that the tariff rates imposed on the commodities just mentioned by the Senator from California are not excessive; but if there are excessive rates in the act of 1922, does not the Senator believe that they should be reduced?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I say that a tariff rate can be excessively low as well as excessively high.

Mr. COPELAND. I will admit that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Then, why not amend this resolution so as to provide that where rates are excessively low they shall be increased?

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will pardon me a moment further, will he answer this question: If the Senate should so amend the pending resolution, would the Senator from California vote for it?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have said again and again that I would not, because this is not the appropriate time or place to consider the subject. I have alluded to the matter in order to show that Senators who are urging this resolution are deluded if they think they can during this session get the relief which the great agricultural interests of the country need in respect of many items.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. If we had an approaching epidemic of smallpox or typhus, would we wait until some "appropriate" time to take the steps that are necessary?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, no.

Mr. COPELAND. If there are tariff rates which are known to be excessive or can be shown to be excessive, why should not we deal with them now and not wait for a more acceptable time?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If rates be excessive now they were excessive during the last session of Congress and they have been excessive ever since 1922, unless changed trade currents or changed conditions have since made them excessive.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, according to the logic of the Senator's statement, the excessive tariff rates must continue for ever and ever because they were written into the tariff act?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Far from that, but now is not the "accepted time." I want this country, Mr. President, to be industrially independent even as it is politically independent. I do not wish to see America dependent upon anything which we can grow or manufacture. I want an industrially independent America. I do not wish to see America again dependent upon any foreign country, particularly with respect to the chemical industry. I do not wish to see America dependent for the very necessaries of life and the very essentials for defense; and I am wondering whether the Senator thinks that the rates in the chemical and dye schedule are "excessive." There are Senators here, as there are gentlemen elsewhere, who seem to think that it would be advisable for us once more to become dependent upon Belgium or Germany or Switzerland in the matter of chemicals and dyes. I think it far better to build up the great chemical industry of America, which comprehends the manufacturer of perfumery, a fact which may be interesting to some who look down from the heights. Indeed, we can by chemistry make more delicious, delightful, intoxicating perfumes from coal tar than can be extracted from any flowers that bloom.

We now have a great perfumery industry in America. We have a great explosives industry—a matter of national defense. We have a great dye industry. We have an industry for medicines, the therapeutic industry. We have the great industry of manufacturing coloring matter for candies, confections. We have four or five great industries in America, employing hundreds and thousands of skilled workmen, women, men, all dependent upon the chemical industry, which industry depends upon protection from the foreign countries named. All these great and related industries are due to the Republican tariff act of 1922.

Some people say that the rates in the chemical schedules are "excessively" high. Do they wish to go back into the condition we were in at the beginning of the Great War? I wish to develop America. I wish to multiply the industries of America. I wish to give work and wages to American men and women; and when the time comes to take up and consider this whole subject I hope I shall be big enough to look beyond the boundaries of my own great State. I do not think I am in the center of the universe because the horizon comes down in a circle about me. If there is an industry in Florida that needs aid or assistance, I am for it. If there is an industry in New England or in any State that needs protection from foreign competition, I am for it; and why am I? May I apply the historic words of Patrick Henry? Patrick Henry opposed the ratification of the Constitution in words which inflame our minds now. He inveighed against it, fearing that it would develop a consolidated tyranny, as he termed the Constitution; but when the Constitution was ratified by the Virginia he loved and by the other States, then Patrick Henry said, "I am no longer a Virginian; I am an American."

So, on this tariff question, I am for any industry that needs protection as against competition with foreign capital or foreign labor, in order that we may have men employed earning good wages, happy fathers, happy wives, laughing children; and I wonder why some gentlemen elsewhere, or Senators here, appear to think that we in America, with our standard of life, our level of civilization, our high wages, can compete with the poorly paid labor of other lands.

I have only to add that, being a protectionist, I want adequate protection. I understand farming to be an industry—an important industry. There are many items in the present tariff act immediately affected within the agricultural schedule. I think many of them should be increased. There may be some in other schedules which should be reduced; but we can not consider the one or the other wisely without considering them all. The farmer is as directly interested in the manufacturing city and its prosperity as he is in the farm round about his house. Let the great cities—the great markets of the farm—perish and what becomes of agriculture or the producers of agricultural products?

My State is remote from the great markets of the East. We want to build up New England. We want her factories to be in full operation. We want to see mighty New York expand, and Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and all the great cities of the eastern or middle section of our country. From a purely selfish standpoint we seek their increased prosperity, because it increases the markets for the agricultural products of California; and I should imagine that the East would wish to see Utah and Colorado and California and other of the Western States multiply in population and prosper in order that a greater market may be afforded to the manufactured products of the East. In other words, we have a great Nation, one Nation, one people; and when one section of the country prospers, that prosperity overflows into other sections.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Surely the Senator has no doubt that the attitude that he thinks should be the attitude of the eastern cities is actually the feeling that they have there. For instance, the Senator is very much interested in the protection of the Imperial Valley in his own State.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COPELAND. It will be of interest to the Senator to know that from the great bankers and business houses of my city I have had hundreds of letters urging me to do everything I could to protect the great Imperial Valley, because when there is prosperity in the Imperial Valley there is a demand for the goods manufactured in my State and city. So I may say that the attitude that the Senator describes as the ideal one is the attitude of those great cities.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am gratified to know that, and, indeed, I did know it; and it serves to illustrate, perhaps, and emphasize a thought which is common to us all—that we can not hope for prosperity in old South Carolina if all the rest of the country is in rags. We can not hope for prosperity in the Southland if the North is paralyzed. We are one people, with one Constitution and with one destiny. I want a system which is American, which is broad and all-comprehensive; and I repeat myself when I say that if a given rate on a local product in any State in this Union will serve to develop the industry producing that product, I am for it, and I think I can justify my position.

I remember full well the very unhappy phrase of General Hancock. He spoke a truth, but it was distorted to his disadvantage, when he said that in a sense the tariff was a local question. What General Hancock meant to express was that in the sense that a tariff rate affected primarily a local situation, in that respect the tariff was a local question. That, in a sense, is true; but, in the larger view, a great and prosperous industry in Wisconsin—and they have great and prosperous industries there, not the least of which is the dairy industry—is beneficial to the whole country in more ways than it is now necessary to state.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. COPELAND. Did not General Hancock, when he said that, mean that the way men vote on tariffs will be determined largely by the locality from which they come?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That may be true, Mr. President; but we are not supposed here to be governed by purely local conditions. I repeat, perhaps unnecessarily, that if some industry should spring up in New York, the product of which should come in competition with the product of Italy or Belgium or Switzerland or Norway or China, and it could be made to appear that by adequate protection that industry could grow and develop and give labor and employment and wages to citizens of your great State, I would be for it as cheerfully as though the industry were in my State.

Mr. COPELAND. That is very generous of the Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is the kind of American I am.

Mr. COPELAND. And that is the reason why a lot of the Senators over here voted for the tariff on grapefruit which was proposed by the Senator; and it was proposed by the Senator because it was the local desire.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] offered that amendment. Much to my surprise, the former chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. McCumber, reported that bill out with half a cent a pound tariff on grapefruit; and it was none other than my scholarly friend from Florida, Mr. FLETCHER, if I may mention his name, who rose in his place and offered the amendment striking out "one-half cent per pound" and inserting "1 cent per pound"; and it is not betraying anything to say that I happen to know that the people of Florida will ask, are now asking, or, if not officially, are seeking an increase of the tariff on grapefruit because they can not compete with the Isle of Pines or Porto Rico; and those Senators, if present, and it were proper, would not contradict me. Moreover, the Senators from Arkansas voted for a protective tariff on rice. Of course, the two great Senators from Louisiana voted for protection on rice as well as on sugar, and ultimately voted for the bill itself, as did the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK].

I am not criticising any Senator here; but sometime the American people are going to be told and to hear that whereas certain learned Senators will vote for a specific duty on some item which they produce, and aid in getting it into the bill, they will then ultimately vote against the passage of the bill.

In other words, if I may say it with propriety, they think of their own immediate locality rather than have regard for the Nation as a whole. But they are not all free traders, there are protectionists among them; alas, too few. My wonder has been, my regret is, that gentlemen who march under the Republican banner should be striving to do what I think is hurtful to the American protective-tariff system.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. McMASTER. There should not be any Republicans marching under the Republican banner who believe in an excess rate in a tariff schedule.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Nobody believes in an excess rate.

Mr. President, let us not tear down one industry in the vain hope of building up another. I have poorly stated my position and I am done.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the pending tariff resolution is a wholly logical result of the plight of agriculture—of the persistent inequality from which this industry has suffered, and the refusal of other remedial legislation.

The urban population of this country is largely upon one plane, and the farmer upon another, at a lower level. Consider the grain and livestock farmer, that tremendously important factor in the great Middle West. During the last six and one-half years ending July 1, 1927, he has been required to pay from 40 per cent to 50 per cent more in freight rates than in 1913; 64 per cent more on an average for the nonagricultural products he has necessarily purchased; about 79 per cent more for a railroad ticket from Omaha to Chicago; 130 per cent more for the union labor that has entered into his buildings and other equipment; and finally 160 per cent more on account of taxes.

But how about the grain and livestock farmer's income from his products, the measure of the return for his services and the use of his capital? As an average during the last six and one-half years ending July 1, 1927, he has received but 23 per cent more for his grain and livestock than he did in 1913. In short, miscellaneous nonagricultural products that could be bought with three carloads of such products in 1913 have required four carloads on an average during the six and one-half years referred to. It may be urged that such have been the conditions, but how about the bounteous crops of the past season and the prosperity of agriculture that we read about in the metropolitan papers of that region? That we may not be misled I will take the liberty of reading a recent letter from the cashier of a national bank, wholly unsolicited so far as I am concerned. He says:

> There is not now, and has not been, any prosperity for the farmers in this community, which by the way is the best producing section of Nebraska, and being closely associated with them I know that they are thrifty enough, but are not making the net profit that their labor and investment entitle them to because of insufficient prices for their products, or because the things they must buy are too high. It would seem to me that there should be an adjustment of freight rates, and if it becomes necessary a marked downward revision of the tariff; in fact, I can not see where the farmer profits under the present tariff schedules, but I feel that I am not sufficiently posted to be sure on that point. * * * I presume that with enough points to bear down on that in time the combined West and South can get some concessions, if that is what we must call them, from the eastern groups. So much stress has been laid on the bountiful crops, and the Government reports have overestimated the corn crop without doubt; even the Omaha papers have helped lower the price by their continued advertising of how much money the farmers will get from the bounteous crop. To me this is all bunk. Most of the farmers still owe the banks and are trying to pay their interest and reduce debt. Until they are out of debt they will not be able to buy much and will not want to, as they have been pressed for payment by the banks in many cases and have had their ambition to borrow and make money crushed. I hope there is something here that will be helpful to you, as it seems this is an ideal time to start driving on the things that will give us a chance to get on a money-making basis.

This picture of our economic situation in the Middle West is from a conservative, substantial citizen, and if I am not mistaken a rock-ribbed Republican.

Yes, Mr. President, a perspective of the economic structure of this country clearly discloses that the mechanical industries, commerce, labor, and transportation are upon economic stilts, while the farmer, the man who produces from the soil, is down on the ground. As a consequence, the farmer has come here to Congress, not asking special privilege but merely justice—equality for his industry. He has pointed out that, generally speaking, there are but two remedies; that either he must be afforded economic stilts such as are enjoyed by his fellow industrialists or else the stilts which others enjoy must be eliminated.

Not wishing to disturb the economic situation of the country he has asked for stilts in the form of compulsory cooperation as set forth in what has come to be known as the McNary-Haugen bill. After vainly pleading his cause year after year, the Sixty-ninth Congress passed this measure, only to have it vetoed by the President. Now, again, the McNary-Haugen bill is pending legislation, but we are informed that it will be futile to pass it, as the Attorney General of the United States has advised the President that the proposal is unconstitutional, and unfortunately the President seems disinclined to proceed otherwise than he did with the measure adopted by the Sixty-ninth Congress; that is, he will not sign the bill, though there may be a majority of Congress for the measure, and allow the Supreme Court of the United States to finally determine its constitutionality, the only possible course by which the question can be finally and definitely settled.

Under the circumstances, therefore, is it strange that the agricultural interests of this country should be considering the only alternative—pulling the stilts from under the other fellow, not as a matter of revenge but of justice of self-preservation?

An examination of these economic stilts enjoyed by industry, commerce, labor, and transportation discloses that they consist of several distinct sections. One section is due to the results of voluntary cooperations, for the elimination of competition and the insurance of profit, such as local and national manufacturers' associations, and other similar cooperations, as wholesale and retail and other trade organizations. Another section is due to compulsory cooperations, decreed by Congress to the same end, namely, the elimination of competition for the insurance of profit. Under this heading are included the Esch-Cummins law relieving the railroads of the country of all competition. Prior to 1920 a railroad could file any schedule it saw fit not in excess of the maximum rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and, after 30 days, it went into effect. Since then the minimum rate has been the maximum rate, thus eliminating all competition, resulting in the greatest era of prosperity for the railroads in their history.

Formerly at times a million immigrants came to our shores from Europe in a single year, most of whom belonged to the laboring class. To-day the European quotas are limited by law to some 150,000 annually. Of course, this legislation has limited competition in the field of labor.

Again, we have the Federal reserve system, the result of a compulsory cooperation measure of Congress, whereby all national banks are required to cooperate in maintaining standardized methods of banking, not, of course, to make less profit but to make more profit.

Then there is tariff legislation whose whole purpose is to eliminate the competition of the outside world, so far as our domestic market is concerned, thereby compelling the people of the United States to cooperate in paying higher prices for manufactured products than would otherwise be possible.

Such in a general way is the constitution of the economic stilts enjoyed by industry, commerce, labor, and transportation, and which the farmer must eliminate if he is to enjoy equality with his fellow industrialist, unless he is afforded similar effective advantages.

Assuming that the agriculturists' only alternative is to attack these stilts, how is he to proceed? What are the possibilities of success? He can not hope to dissolve such voluntary cooperations as manufacturers' associations, wholesale and retail and other trade organizations, and labor unions. Therefore, it would be unwise to waste any time on this particular section or sections of these stilts.

Again, what chance is there for the farmer in the face of the railway lobby in Washington to repeal the Esch-Cummins law, or even that portion thereof that relieves the railroad world of all competition?

I think it is generally admitted that we have entered upon a new era so far as immigration legislation is concerned; therefore there is no hope in this quarter. Neither is there any thought of attempting to repeal the Federal reserve act. However, so far as the tariff is concerned the situation is different. There have always been two well-defined schools of thought, and sometimes more, respecting protective theories.

That great political party—our Democratic brothers—have in theory at least been aligned against the tariff, although they have wobbled so much in this respect that it is not always possible to tell exactly where they are. Certain it is that many Democrats are protectionists, that many Democrats are high tariffites, while the majority of others, at least in Congress, believe in some degree of protection. However, it is always assumed that some Democratic assistance can be obtained for tariff readjustment at almost any time. And then again, even among the rank and file of the Republican Party there is a dissatisfaction with many tariff schedules deemed excessive. Moreover, the farmers of the country as a class have been taught that the tariff, while favoring them in some respects, has upon the whole resulted to their disadvantage, and recently these agriculturists and others have been greatly encouraged in their belief by, first, the attitude of our international bankers. Thus last October an international manifesto was issued against the maintenance of tariff barriers throughout the world, including our own country, which elicited marked attention in this country, as it was signed by international bankers and business men. This document closes its appeal for the elimination of tariffs and trade prohibitions, as follows:

On the valuable political results which might flow from such a policy, from the substitution of good will for ill will, of cooperation for exclusiveness, we will not dwell. But we wish to place on record our conviction that the establishment of economic freedom is the best hope of restoring the commerce and the credit of the world.

The second cause of the encouragement is the report of the business men's commission. About a year ago the National Industrial Conference Board of New York City and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, acting jointly, appointed a business men's commission on agriculture. This commission filed a report in the year 1927, and the following are quotations therefrom:

There is little doubt that the steady extension of tariff protection to manufacturing industries, and particularly the increase in the tariff level in postwar years, has, on the whole, affected agriculture unfavorably in comparison with manufacturing industry. * * *

In the long run the chief permanent effect on agriculture of tariffs devoted mainly to the encouragement of manufactures would be a restriction of the acreage in crops and a lessening of the values of farm lands.

* * * * * * *

The increase in rates put into effect in postwar years, combined with the shift of the United States from a debtor to a creditor status, undoubtedly contributed to the depression in agriculture.

It is, however, any increase in duties on manufactured goods, rather than the tariff as such, which is peculiarly harmful to agriculture.

* * * * * * *

Like the increase in railroad rates, this raising of the tariff came at a time very inopportune to the farmer. An increase in the degree of protection, so far as it is real and not a mere raising of rates already completely protective, can not fail to have an adverse effect on some exporting industries, and in the case of the tariff act of 1922 it seems probable that agriculture bore the brunt of this readjustment.

* * * * * * *

* * *, the commission believes that the time has come to give serious thought to the question of whether, under the prevailing conditions of American industry, agriculture and international trade, the benefits of the protective tariff system are fairly enough distributed between industry and agriculture to make for a stable balance in our national economy and protect the long-time interests of the Nation. * * * The commission recognizes that it would be disastrous to the farmer as well as to industry to attempt any radical, sudden, and general reversal of the protective policy, but it believes that earnest effort may well be made gradually to modify and intelligently to readjust that policy.

Therefore, in view of the situation which is presented, it must be apparent that if the farmers' only alternative is to attack the stilts under the other fellow, the most vulnerable section thereof is that composed of the tariff, hence, why I have stated that this tariff resolution is merely a logical result of the plight of agriculture and the refusal of remedial legislation.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Under the provisions of the pending resolution, does the Senator think there is carried with it the idea that there may be revision of the tariff on agricultural products upward?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it must be recognized that we can not consider tariff legislation without it being possible to propose revisions upward as well as downward.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I thank the Senator very much. The reason why I ask the question is that I think in a revision of the tariff there should be some revision upward on certain agricultural products, and some other products not on the list at all should probably have the tariff applied to them. I want to vote for a resolution which contemplates that movement as well as reducing some rates which we think are excessive.

Mr. HOWELL. The result of this legislation, if favorably acted upon by the House, will be to open up the whole tariff question and, hence, I shall vote aye on the question of its adoption for this reason.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. HOWELL. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. In view of what he has just said, would the Senator object to an amendment striking out the word "downward" after the word "revision"?

Mr. HOWELL. I can not speak for the author of the resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would the Senator be willing to vote for such an amendment?

Mr. HOWELL. I will vote for any resolution that urges the consideration of the tariff at this time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator if he expects there will be any effort to increase the tariff if the whole matter is thrown open?

Mr. HOWELL. I shall be glad to refer to that later in my remarks.

Mr. GEORGE. I thought almost everybody had reached the conclusion that not more and higher tariff duties would solve our economic difficulties; at least that while there might be some increase here and there, because it is not possible, of course, to make a tariff schedule that will prove entirely perfect in the light of experience, yet there is hardly anyone advocating the imposition of additional or higher duties.

Mr. HOWELL. I do not agree with the distinguished Senator from Georgia in that respect. There are some products which are now being imported into the country tariff free, which seriously affect farm interests.

Mr. GEORGE. I admitted the possibility, of course, that there might be, and I said there might be an item here and there; but the Senator does not think, does he, that the farmer gets very much benefit from the tariff?

Mr. HOWELL. I will discuss that also before I finish. I agree that even an entire repeal of tariff legislation would not afford equality to the farmer. This must be evident from what I have said, because there would still remain voluntary cooperations on the part of the mechanical industries—commerce, labor, and transportation. There would still be in effect the compulsory cooperation laws of which they are the beneficiaries.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator uses the term "voluntary cooperation." I quite agree with him that there is cooperation, but I do not think it is altogether voluntary. Is not this the Senator's idea—I think it is of industry, whatever we public men say about it—that there must be organization behind any tariff in order to make it effective, either organization to control the production, to fix the domestic supply, or to take the sharp edges off of competition between the units producing a given article or a given commodity, and that without that combination, which the Senator is pleased to call "voluntary," the tariff would be ineffective?

What I mean is: Suppose there are any number of independent manufacturers of a given article in the United States. Suppose we have a tariff duty protecting that particular article. If there is unrestrained and unrestricted competition among the manufacturers of that particular article, the time will come when they must sell their product, and they will sell it without regard to whether the price is level with or below the tariff wall. But there can be no effective use of the tariff, and American industry knows it, unless there is organization back of the tariff. There must be organization back of it for the purpose of controlling the production or of restricting and controlling competition between the units producing the protected article. Therefore we have in this country combinations of wealth which have gone beyond combinations elsewhere in the world, and it always will be so, not alone because of the tariff, but it always will be so as long as there is a high-tariff duty fixed, because industry will feel the necessity of organization, whether we call it voluntary or not, back of that tariff wall in order to hold the prices up to that level.

The farmer can not do that, he does not do that, and perhaps there must be some kind of legislation worked out to compel involuntary cooperation. I know the Senator thinks the McNary-Haugen bill will do it, and if it should it would in a measure make the tariff effective; but on all farm products where domestic production exceeds domestic demand and where there is no cooperation, voluntarily or involuntarily, among the producing units, it is quite impossible to hold the price of farm products up to the level of the tariff wall. That is the reason why there is no direct benefit to the farmers in the tariff on any farm product where the domestic production exceeds the domestic consumption. So I ask the Senator if he really believes that any tariff imposed on a farm product will greatly aid the farmer?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Georgia for calling my attention to his view respecting cooperation. I agree with him. There is no such thing as purely voluntary cooperation that is effective. There must be present a coercive factor. If we will consider voluntary cooperations generally, whether manufacturers' associations or labor unions, it must be evident that they would fail of their purpose if deprived of the power of willful coercion.

The farmer in this country is in unrestricted competition with his neighbor. Not only that, but so far as those products of which he produces a surplus are concerned, he is also in unrestricted competition with the peasants of the Old World. Voluntary cooperation for the farmer is impossible, because there are 6,300,000 farm operators in this country, and such coercion is not practicable. In my opinion, the only kind of cooperation that will ever be effective for the farmer is, as the Senator from Georgia has expressed it, involuntary cooperation—that is, legal compulsory cooperation. This is the keystone of the pending McNary-Haugen legislation, and it is for that reason that I have supported it; because I believe it affords the only practicable solution of the problem of equality for the farmer.

Mr. President, I have advocated stilts for the farmer—not pulling the stilts from under the other fellow. As a matter of fact, it has been my view, as expressed by the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] the other day, that the section of these economic stilts that is due to the tariff is relatively small—about 12½ per cent was his estimate. Therefore, if his assumption and my belief are correct, the abandonment of our tariff policy would not mean equality for the farmer. It is for this reason that I have supported the McNary-Haugen proposal, because in my opinion it is the one plan that has been developed which might afford the equality sought, and, by virtue of the equalization fee provided therein, maintain such equality indefinitely. Without the equalization fee the necessary rotating fund proposed for stabilizing our markets for agricultural products could not be maintained intact. The proposal by Secretary Jardine, almost similar in character but minus the equalization fee, would loan farmers' associations $250,000,000 for stabilization purposes; that is, to maintain fair prices for the farmer through consistently bulling the market for agricultural products. Of course, such a plan means unavoidable losses as well as expenses of operation. These should be paid by the farmer out of the higher prices that such a policy might afford. Otherwise the $250,000,000 would gradually vanish, unless the borrowers made good such losses and expenses. But under such circumstances such losses and expenses would fall upon less than one-half of those enjoying such better prices, because the benefits would not be limited to the members of the farmers' associations borrowing these funds. Therefore, under such circumstances, it would be more profitable to remain out of the associations than in. All burdens of this character resulting from the development of equality for agriculture should be borne pro rata by all beneficiaries. If not, any such proposal must fail, unless the United States Treasury is to maintain such rotating fund by annual contributions, something that should not be contemplated for a moment.

Mr. President, I have long regarded certain tariff schedules as excessive, and in my opinion the last Congress should have attacked the tariff problem. Certainly, it should not be avoided this session. If we are not to consider tariff legislation now, when will it be considered? Certainly not in the next or short session. As a matter of fact, if we do not proceed with tariff legislation during this, the long session of the Seventieth Congress, no relief for agriculture from this source can be anticipated prior to 1930, and the Republican Party will necessarily be responsible for such delay.

I do not believe that the tariff should be dealt with in any revolutionary manner. That would cause economic distress and defeat the purpose of tariff revision. There is only one way to proceed, in my opinion, in dealing with the tariff—that is, by very gradual steps, a method that might be called tariff attrition. Consider the tariff wall. There are two ways by which it might be reduced: By the lowering of the height of the wall by gradually shaving off its top, say, at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, or by curtailing the length or extent of the wall by shaving off one of the ends through the elimination of the tariff on the products of some industry unnecessarily protected; that is, placing such products on the free list. The first plan of gradually reducing the height of the tariff wall, say, 2 per cent per annum, might be advantageously adopted were it not for the fact that succeeding Congresses could not be depended upon to maintain such a policy of attrition. The second method, however, is not subject to this objection, as experience indicates that it is becoming increasingly difficult to obtain a tariff for products which have been placed on the free list. Therefore there is a fair chance of holding any ground gained in this manner.

There is ample precedent for the use of this later method. We have been curtailing the tariff wall in just this way—cutting off the ends, as it were. Thus, hides that were formerly subject to a tariff were put upon the free list years ago; boots and shoes are also on the free list. I am informed, as a matter of fact, that they went on the free list together as the result of an agreement. The boot and shoe industry of the country had developed to a point where it no longer needed protection, but, of course, desired free hides, so the boot and shoe interests came to Congress and obligingly agreed that they would not oppose the free listing of their products if the farmer's hides could be treated likewise, with the result that the farmers awoke one morning to discover that hides were no longer protected.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator from Nebraska believe in putting a tariff on hides?

Mr. HOWELL. If the farmer is not to be afforded equality by placing him upon economic stilts also, I certainly insist that he should have all the benefits which the tariff can afford.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, the Senator believes that in that particular the tariff rates should be increased.

Mr. HOWELL. If the farmer's demand for equality is denied, then, I say let us put a tariff on hides for his benefit.

Not only have we curtailed the length of the tariff wall, as it were, by putting hides and boots and shoes on the free list, but also by including agricultural implements, and cement. Why not, then, add to this list the products of some other industries that are no longer puling infants but are able to prosper without subsidies in the way of tariffs.

As an example, consider pig iron. That greatest of all corporations, the United States Steel Corporation, produces pig iron; in fact, it is the largest producer of pig iron in the United States, if not in the world. Its capacity for such production in 1926 was 18,940,000 tons.

The tariff on pig iron in that year was 75 cents per ton, now raised through the Tariff Commission 50 per cent to $1.12½ per ton. Let us assume that in 1926 the steel corporation produced its capacity in pig iron, that pig iron was placed upon the free list, and that, therefore, the income of the steel corporation was reduced 75 cents for each ton of pig-iron production that year; or $14,205,000. How would this have affected the earnings of the steel corporation for that year? From its financial reports we learn that in 1926 there was outstanding common stock to the amount of $508,302,500, and that for that year the earnings thereon amounted to $17.98 per share, or a total of something less than $92,000,000. Subtracting the estimated loss had pig iron been on the free list that year, and the earnings on the common stock would have been reduced to something over $77,000,000, or to over $15 per share. If, instead of the 1926 earnings, we consider the average for the 10 years preceding 1927, we find that they amounted to $15.21 per share. Assume this to have been the earning per share for 1926, then the free listing of pig iron would have reduced such earnings to $12.41 per share.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, is it not true that the Tariff Commission, after making a study of pig iron, increased the rate to which the Senator has just referred?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I have already referred to this fact, and it is such results of its work that arouses suspicion in the minds of people respecting the usefulness of the commission. Certainly, the United States Steel Corporation, which turns out about 50 per cent of all the pig iron and steel produced in the United States, did not need this tariff increase. Consider the financial history of this great corporation. It is the amalgamation of certain steel and iron properties that was consummated by J. P. Morgan in 1901. The amalgamated properties had outstanding $159,450,000 in bonds. For the purpose of exchange, the new steel corporation issued $303,450,000 in bonds, an increase of $144,000,000. The amalgamated companies had outstanding in preferred stock $253,454,800. As a result of the exchange that took place the steel corporation issued $445,298,611 in preferred stock, an increase of $191,843,811.

The amalgamated companies had issued $468,816,194 common stock. In the course of the exchange $443,398,092 in common stock was issued by the steel corporation, a decrease in this particular class of stock of $25,418,102. However, when the exchange was completed, the bonds and stocks of the amalgamated companies, amounting to $881,720,994, were represented in a new steel corporation by bonds and stocks totaling $1,192,146,703. But this is not all. The common stock of the steel corporation was increased, and since 1903 has stood at $508,302,500. It is my understanding that Mr. Carnegie, whose properties were absorbed by the steel corporation, would have none of the common stock. He regarded it as something more vacuous than water.

What has happened since? The preferred stock, which undoubtedly more than represented all of the equity in the corporation's properties over and above its bonded indebtedness, has received annual dividends of 7 per cent. In addition thereto, the corporation has earned enough to make its common stock worth par, and enough more to pay up to and including 1926 something more than $550,000,000 in dividends upon such common stock; and still enough more to pay a 40 per cent stock dividend to its common stockholders of $203,321,000. And then, after all this, I understand there is still a surplus remaining in the Treasury of about $300,000,000.

To recapitulate, this corporation, the beneficiary of our protective tariff, has been enabled to earn for its common stockholder whose stock in 1903 represented less than water, a total of more than $1,560,000,000 up to and including 1926.

Is it strange that all the world wondered when the tariff commission last year recommended a 50 per cent increase in the tariff on pig iron? And again, is it remarkable that the American farmer showed some dissatisfaction when within the same 48 hours the President vetoed the McNary-Haugen bill, and also approved the finding of the Tariff Commission and put into effect its recommendation to increase the tariff on pig iron 50 per cent?

Mr. BINGHAM. But, Mr. President, on the other hand, is it not true that had the tariff on pig iron not been raised it would have meant throwing thousands of American workmen out of employment, and that while it is true that the tariff on pig iron has caused an increase in its cost it has meant the employment of thousands of Americans who otherwise could not have secured that employment?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, certainly so far as the United States Steel Corporation is concerned there would have been no necessity of throwing out of employment thousands of men, had not the tariff on pig iron been increased, if the steel corporation would have been satisfied with earning 10 or 12 per cent on its common stock instead of 15 per cent.

Mr. President, I think the time has come to put pig iron on the free list, along with the farmer's hides, boots and shoes, farm implements, and cement, as such is my idea of proceeding in connection with the tariff whenever practicable.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes his remarks, will he, while talking about the Tariff Commission, tell us whether or not he thinks that their action in increasing the duty on butter from 8 to 12 cents a pound has benefited the farmer?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, we exported about 5,000,000 pounds of butter last year. Whenever there is a surplus in connection with farm products, the world market usually determines the price of that product domestically, notwithstanding what the tariff may be.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; Mr. President, my question was whether or not the action of the Tariff Commission in increasing the rate on butter from 8 to 12 cents a pound had not very materially improved the farmer's position, because it had increased the price of butter that much.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, heretofore in my remarks I have tried to afford a picture of the farmer's plight, based upon the relative prices for agriculture products for the six and a half years preceding July 1, and during this period, or for most of the time at least, this 12-cent tariff on butter has been in effect. Repeating myself in part: The average price of all agricultural products during that period was 32 per cent higher than in 1913, but notwithstanding this fact the farmer had to pay 64 per cent more for the nonagricultural products he was compelled to buy. Could the situation have been much worse had the tariff on butter remained at 8 cents per pound?

Mr. President, it has been urged that it is unwise and unnecessary for Congress to consider tariff legislation at this session. First, because there is not time, although this is the long session of the Seventieth Congress; and, second, because if a case is made before the Tariff Commission, in connection with any particular schedule, and an adjustment should be made, the President has the authority of increasing or reducing any tariff rate 50 per cent. It must be evident that if there is not time to deal with the tariff during this long session, there will certainly be no time to deal with it during the next, or short session of this Congress. Hence, any farm relief through a reduction or a revision of the tariff must be deferred until the long session in 1930. In my opinion, the Republican Party can not afford to be responsible for such a policy. Furthermore, whereas the Tariff Commission can act in connection with any commodity upon which a tariff is now imposed, neither the Tariff Commission nor the President can effectively deal with a product now on the free list. Now, it happens that some benefit might be afforded the farmer by imposing a tariff on certain imported products that compete with his products and displace large quantities thereof. In this connection consider vegetable oils. There were imported from foreign countries into the United States during 1926, free of duty, palm oil, palm kernel oil, inedible olive oil, and copra, from which is produced cocoanut oil, equivalent to a total of 371,000,000 pounds or about 40 per cent of our total exports of animal oils and fats during that year. Is it not evident that the competition of such imports is of serious moment to the farmer? There can be no question of this fact inasmuch as these importations in recent years have been increasing by leaps and bounds, whereas our exports of animal oils and fats have been decreasing. Nevertheless, however important a tariff on such products might be in minimizing the farmer's plight, nothing can be done unless we have an opportunity to legislate on the tariff, because they are on the free list.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question just there? He is speaking about these vegetable oils being imported into this country and taking the place of certain animal fats. The Senator from Georgia also called attention to the condition in which agriculture finds itself in relation to the tariff. The question I want to ask is this: Does not the Senator think it is idle to talk about the tariff benefiting the agricultural producer until and unless he is in a position by which he can control, either directly or indirectly, the price of the thing he produces?

The reason why I ask that question is that I happened to be a Member of this body when we passed the emergency tariff bill and increased the duty on wheat, and the price of wheat went down. So long as the buyer of the farm product fixes the price, what possible avail can there be to the farmer by virtue of the imposition of a tariff on his article, except that there may be incidentally a little competition somewhere and somehow amongst those who desire to purchase the product that the farmer produces? Until he is organized and then capitalized to a point where, when the tariff marks the line of prices, he can fix the price for the domestic consumption and export his surplus at what price he will, of what avail is the tariff to him?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I agree with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina that a tariff upon vegetable oils such as would result in our use of more animal fats would be of not great moment to the farmer; but it is urged that we do not need to have a consideration of the tariff at this session, because we have a Tariff Commission. You can not, however, appeal to the Tariff Commission in connection with a product upon which there is no tariff. I wanted to make it clear that this contention fails as to a product on the free list.

Mr. SMITH rose.

Mr. HOWELL. I beg the Senator's pardon, but the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is waiting to speak, and I want to give him an opportunity to do so, and desire a few moments to finish.

Mr. SMITH. I simply did not want the impression to go out that I was opposed to the passage of this resolution. Until certain legislation that will specifically apply to the condition of agriculture is passed, which I do not think we can do with the tariff, I insist that it is unjust to impose a high protective tariff on our industries when we are unable to legislate to relieve the farmer in kind.

Mr. HOWELL. Now, Mr. President, I desire to call attention to an additional opportunity of aiding the farmer through tariff legislation. Last year we imported 255,000,000 gallons of blackstrap molasses, to which I have previously referred during this debate. The tariff thereon is only 1⅛ mills so far as Cuba is concerned, and that island exports to us nearly all that we use. In recent years blackstrap molasses has practically replaced corn in the manufacture of alcohol in this country. Now the situation is this: The farmer has been afforded a tariff of 15 cents a bushel on corn, but 5.6 gallons of blackstrap molasses will take the place of a bushel of corn in the manufacture of alcohol, and on this substitute for a bushel of corn the tariff amounts to three-fourths cent. In 1926 there was used in the manufacture of alcohol 267,000,000 gallons of this blackstrap molasses, of which 255,000,000 gallons were imported in that year. In short, if there were a sufficient tariff on blackstrap molasses there would probably have been an additional demand for cash corn that year of from forty to fifty million bushels. This may not seem a very large amount compared to our total production of 2,700,000,000 bushels for the year in question. However, not more than 10 per cent of our corn ever gets into the market, or say 270,000,000 bushels. This being the case, an additional demand for from forty to fifty million bushels cash corn would undoubtedly have a marked and favorable effect upon the price of this product. A member of the Chicago Board of Trade has estimated that it might affect the price as much as 15 cents a bushel. This, I believe, is more than should be expected. However, there can be no question but that a demand of an additional forty to fifty million more bushels of corn in the manufacture of alcohol would prove a marked factor in determining the price of corn.

True, in connection with blackstrap molasses we could appeal to the Tariff Commission, but even so, suppose the commission should recommend that the tariff be increased 50 per cent, then, and in such case, the tariff on 5.6 gallons of blackstrap molasses, the equivalent of a bushel of corn in the manufacture of alcohol, would merely have to pay a total tariff charge of 1.1 cents. In other words, the tariff on corn is 15 cents a bushel, but the tariff on blackstrap molasses is so low that the equivalent of a bushel of corn, so far as the manufacture of alcohol is concerned, can be imported into this country at a cost of 1.1 cents. Thus it is evident that in connection with both vegetable oils and blackstrap molasses, and undoubtedly other products, the Tariff Commission and the President can do practically nothing for the farmer. Only through tariff legislation can the situation be adequately dealt with.

Mr. President, this resolution ought to pass, and if it does pass it should be persuasive with the House, as we ought to deal with the tariff problem during this session, and if we fail to do so the responsibility will be that of the Republican Party.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in view of the assertions that have been made during the pendency of the resolution, repeated again and again by many public officials and leaders of finance, asserting that the country is enjoying unparalleled prosperity, I submit certain concrete facts.

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a table published in the Business Conditions Weekly of January 14, 1928.

This table contains the weekly factory pay roll of the 24 most important industries of the country and compares the pay rolls of these industries as of November, 1926, with the pay rolls of November, 1927.

In 20 of these 24 industries the pay rolls decreased in November, 1927, from that of November, 1926. In 14 of these industries the pay rolls were decreased more than 8 per cent; in 8 the decrease was more than 12 per cent; in 5 the decrease was more than 14 per cent. The greatest decrease in the three largest industries was 10, 16, and 14 per cent, respectively.

In only four industries has the pay roll increased, and these were only 4, 1, 2, and 2 per cent, respectively.

The total pay rolls for all these 24 industries show a net reduction in pay rolls in November, 1927, of 8 per cent over the pay rolls of November, 1926.

The total pay rolls of these 24 industries in the month of November, 1927, were $63,343,000. As the decrease was 8 per cent, the total decrease in dollars and cents to the factory workers in these 24 industries was $6,885,100 for the month of November. I ask that the table may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask also to insert in the RECORD, in connection with the debate upon the pending resolution relative to the claim of existing prosperity in this country, certain brief extracts as printed in the weekly reports of the United Business Service under the heading "Unfavorable factors" in the business situation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPORT OF DECEMBER 3, 1927

Severe competition will increase failures among small manufacturers.

REPORT OF DECEMBER 17, 1927

Average daily steel ingot output in November was about 16 per cent under 1926.

Average cloth sales in November were only 60.3 per cent of production.

Wage reductions in November exceeded advances for the first time in 1927.

REPORT OF DECEMBER 31, 1927

Early December car loadings at lowest level since the year 1923.

Eleven months' automobile output 21 per cent below same period in 1926.

Number of new incorporations is averaging fully 57 per cent under 1926.

REPORT OF JANUARY 7, 1928

Imports in 1927 estimated to have declined 5 per cent from 1926 totals.

Brokers loans increased more than $930,000,000 during 1927.

REPORT OF JANUARY 14, 1928

Failures during 1927 increased nearly 6 per cent over the 1926 level.

December pig-iron output fell 12.7 per cent under the same month a year ago.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in connection with my other remarks, a table prepared for me by the United States Tariff Commission, together with their letter, setting forth the production, trade, and consumption of agricultural products in 1926, together with the percentage of consumption represented by imports. I call particular attention to the small percentage of imports of food products compared with consumption. Regardless of tariffs and whether on free list or bearing a heavy tariff rate, sugar, wool, flaxseed, lemons, and walnuts would have to come in in large quantities, because we do produce but a very limited percentage of our needs in those products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, January 14, 1928.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: In compliance with your request by telephone for information concerning importations of agricultural products and the value thereof, as compared with domestic consumption, the inclosed table has been prepared and is transmitted for your use.

The data is taken from statistics for the year 1926, which is the latest year for which complete statistics can be obtained for the commodities indicated, both as to imports and production. The import statistics are for the calendar year. The production statistics are for the nearest comparable crop year.

The commodities are arranged in the order of the magnitude of the value of their respective imports in 1926 except that statistics concerning meats are placed last.

The items listed in the table are not all of the items covered by imports, but are those of outstanding significance.

Very truly yours, JOHN F. BETHUNE, Secretary.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter and statement from the Tariff Commission as to their activities and records since the flexible provision of the tariff law was enacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, January 13, 1928.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 6 in reference to reports by the Tariff Commission to the President for purposes of section 315 of the tariff act of 1922.

There are inclosed two lists of subjects upon which such reports have been made by the commission. One list contains the subjects upon which proclamations have been issued by the President, and the other list contains the subjects upon which, for various reasons, no proclamation has been issued. Some of these reports are now under consideration by the President. One of them, linseed oil, has been returned to the commission for further information, and in some cases, such as that of sugar, the President has publicly stated that the facts submitted do not seem to warrant a change in the duty at the present time.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS O. MARVIN, Chairman.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, there are only a few minutes left before we are to vote on the resolution, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive, and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive rates, establishing a closer parity between agriculture and industry, believing it will result to the general benefit of all.

I agree with my colleague, Senator McMASTER, and I am going to vote for the resolution. I think he has fully shown that the agricultural tariffs are entirely inadequate as compared to the industrial tariffs.

The farmers on the prairies believe that industrial development does not only add to the greatness and glory of the Republic, but strengthens the country in a business way, giving employment to labor and a market for the farmers. The strength of the Republican Party is in the industrial East and that of the Democratic Party in the old South, but neither party has been able to carry a national election except with the electoral votes of the agricultural West. The Northwest has been slow in insisting that the benefits of this artificial prosperity which the tariff brings be distributed fairly between the different sections of the country.

I have said before, and I say again to-day, that unless economic justice is done to the Northwest the farmer will not continue to support the present protective tariff policy. He gets the small end of the benefits, and he knows it.

DEMOCRATIC FARM RELIEF

On the other hand, I have no patience with those Democrats who insist that farm relief lies in a Democratic tariff bill. It was under a Democratic tariff law that the agricultural depression came on. Agriculture was partially restored, and only partially, by the farmers' emergency tariff bill of 1921. Every Republican supported it except one, the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES].

I do not see how the Democrats can get any comfort out of this situation. The farmers are complaining that the industrial East is unwilling to give them equal protection, but they are not ignorant of the fact that most of the Democrats voted against the agricultural tariff schedules. I have said before, and I repeat again, that the only thing worse than a Republican tariff is a Democratic tariff.

It can be fairly said that the present tariff law, and every previous Republican tariff law, has been for the direct benefit of the industrial centers, but no one will contend that the Democratic tariff discriminated in favor of the farmer. It is just as the distinguished Democrat from Maryland, Senator BRUCE, said the other day, that every Democratic tariff has to a certain extent been a protective tariff. While the rates were lower than those in the Republican tariff, the main protection went to the industrial sections and not to the agricultural sections.

It provided for free wool, free cattle, free sheep, free bacon, free milk, free poultry. Eggs and potatoes were also on the free list; no protection whatever was given.

In the Republican tariff law sufficient protection has been given to materially increase the prices of these farm products that were on the Democratic free list.

On the other hand, it must not be assumed that the Democratic tariff law is the only one that has a "free list," for in the present law there are many articles on the free list. Among them are the following: Furniture, lumber, shingles, cement, shoes, binders, mowers, plows, threshing machines, and so forth.

DUTY OF THE NORTHWEST

While the unwillingness of the industrial East and the positive refusal of the agricultural South to support agricultural schedules necessary for the Northwest farmers are well known and admitted, there is still another angle to this question, and that is the reluctance on the part of the Senators and Congressmen from the Northwest to demand a fair degree of protection when the last tariff bill was pending. Some Members of Congress from our own Northwestern States were so party-bound, so unwilling to have any discord or difference of opinion, so anxious to follow the leaders that they were always modest in their demands. Other Members from the Northwest, who had no party loyalty whatever, were so busy with other matters, in which the farmers had no direct interest, that they gave little or no attention to the agricultural tariff schedules, and except for the efforts of the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] the agricultural schedules would have been much lower.

It was largely through Senator GOODING that an agricultural tariff farm bloc was formed, consisting of about 14 Members from agricultural States. Some four or five meetings were held and the agricultural schedules to be asked for were agreed upon. There was indifference apparent in the bloc; there was also difference of opinion. Some Senators from the Northwest felt we should not ask for so much; but the point is that the schedules in the revenue act of 1922 are, with one or two exceptions, exactly those agreed upon by the members of the tariff farm bloc.

The failure to get a tariff on hides was due to Democratic opposition and a division among the Senators from agricultural States. It was not due to the opposition of the Eastern Republican Members; in fact, it was not the eastern Republicans, but the eastern Democrats who fought the agricultural tariff schedules. I well remember, for I was here at the time.

BALANCE OF POWER

The Northwest is entitled to better treatment than it has had, but the responsibility is partly upon the Northwest itself. The failure of Members from agricultural States to work together has been very apparent for the last six years. Ever since I came here the Northwestern States have held the balance of power between parties. The tariff bill could not have become a law except by the votes of those States.

The tax reduction bill No. 1, the so-called Mellon plan, could not have gotten anywhere except by the votes from the prairies.

It was a relief for the heavy taxpayers of the industrial and financial centers.

Tax reduction bill No. 2, another Mellon plan, would not have become a law except by the support of the farmer vote. This was also a reduction for the heavy taxpayers. We were, of course, assurred that tax reductions meant lower prices on manufactured goods. It was another false hope.

There was such well-organized and well-directed propaganda in behalf of these measures that the general public was misled. The propaganda was so effective as to sweep the Democratic Party completely off its feet and bring about a "backward march." For years they had protested against the Republican tax reductions as being for the benefit of the millionaires, but the tax reduction bills became law just the same. Now the Democrats take the position that the Republicans have not reduced these taxes enough, and that there should be further and more tax reduction. Evidently the Democratic Party also found that it was hard to fight organized business in this country and raise money for a campaign, so we find that party becoming more and more reactionary than the Republican Party is to-day.

The point is that the Northwest must look out for itself, and it will look out for itself. The farmers of the prairies are no longer party bound. They do not vote for labels alone. They now look carefully to principles of parties and to the character and record of the candidates. They are not unmindful of the fact that it was following eight years of Democratic administration that the Republican stock dividends, referred to by my colleague [Mr. McMASTER] the other day, were paid. They were not 10, 20, and 30 per cent; they ran to hundreds of per cent and thousands of per cent, and in one case a 16,000 per cent stock dividend was paid.

PARTY RESPONSIBILITY

The farmer well understands that his ruination came during a Democratic administration and was due to the attitude of the party toward him. He has watched closely the record of both sides of this Chamber on so-called farm relief measures, and he finds that only one record is worse than that of the Republican Party in the Senate, and that is that of the Democratic Party. But the farmer also knows that the Republican Party promised in its platform to remedy the inequality existing. The failure to do so is the record that stands against the party. The attitude of the parties and candidates will be closely watched in the coming presidential campaign.

The Senators from the agricultural South and the industrial East have joined hands against making the tariff effective for the farmer by the McNary-Haugen bill, and they are not supporting any other measure that will accomplish the purpose. The Northwest farmer is still pleading for economic justice for agriculture—a proportionate price for the products of his labor. If this is denied him, he will insist on tearing down the tariff wall. If the farmer is compelled to sell in a world market, he will demand the privilege of buying all his supplies in the same market free from import duty.

The tariff must be made effective for the farmer also or the tariff must be reduced.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment and to make a few remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] desires to speak. I was about to ask unanimous consent that the hour for voting be postponed until the Senator from North Dakota has had opportunity to speak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the vote must be taken at 3 o'clock. The clerk will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM].

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 2, after the word "excessive," insert the words "that many of the rates are not high enough," and on page 1, line 3, strike out the word "downward."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in the course of the debate during the last week it has come out many times that some of the tariff schedules were not high enough. This has been mentioned on the part of various Senators from various sections of the country, notably by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] in regard to shingles, the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] in regard to certain farm products, and by other Senators regarding other schedules that are not high enough. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] has just mentioned hides, which are on the free list. He thinks hides should carry a duty. It seems to me that it would be wise to take cognizance of that fact by inserting the words "that many of the rates are not high enough," and then striking out the word "downward," in order to take care of the situation which has been raised and make it clear that certain rates are not high enough, while others are too high. What is chiefly desired by these Senators of whom I have just spoken is an opportunity to revise the tariff, not necessarily downward but to revise it, whereas the way the resolution now reads it refers only to revising the tariff downward.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. Just a moment, and then I shall yield the floor. Also, in line 3, I propose that the word "excessive" should come out in order that the revision may apply to rates which are not only excessive but to those which are too low and where a rate does not exist at all.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, this amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut is distinctly a New England amendment, so that when the tariff shall be revised it will be revised upward to an unlimited extent. That is the object of the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, let the proposed amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 2, after the word "excessive," insert the words "that many of the rates are not high enough," and on page 1, line 3, strike out the word "downward."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, further debate on the resolution is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. McMASTER] as modified.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. WATSON. Let the resolution be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution as modified.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive, and tnat the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive rates, establishing a closer parity between agriculture and industry, believing it will result to the general benefit of all.

Resolved further, That such tariff revision should be considered and enacted during the present session of Congress; and

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. If present, he would vote "nay," and I, if permitted to vote, would vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. BROUSSARD (when Mr. RANSDELL's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is out of the city. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE]. If he were present and I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I was requested to announce that if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] were present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—54

Ashurst	Edwards	McKellar	Simmons
Barkley	Ferris	McMaster	Smith
Bayard	Frazier	Mayfield	Steck

So Mr. McMASTER's resolution, as modified, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive, and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive rates, establishing a closer parity between agriculture and industry, believing it will result to the general benefit of all.

Resolved further, That such tariff revision should be considered and enacted during the present session of Congress; and

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatitves, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, respectfully returned to the Senate the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) interpreting the meaning of the tariff act of 1922 with respect to imported broken rice, and announced that, in the opinion of the House of Representatives, the concurrent resolution contravened the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution and was an infringement of the privileges of the House.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 38, the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, let the bill be read in full.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill as introduced and referred to the Committee on Commerce, reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the policy declared in section 1 of the merchant marine act, 1920, is hereby confirmed, and the purpose of the United States to maintain permanently a merchant marine adequate for the proper growth of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States and for the national defense is hereby reaffirmed.

SEC. 2. The board shall not sell any vessel or any line of vessels when in its judgment the building up and maintenance of an adequate merchant marine can be best served by continued ownership of such vessel or such line by the United States.

SEC. 3. In addition to ordinary repairs to vessels incident to their regular operation, the board may recondition and improve vessels owned by the United States and in its possession or under its control, so as to equip them adequately for competition in the foreign trade of the United States.

SEC. 4. The necessity for the replacement of vessels owned by the United States and in the possession or under the control of the board and the construction of additional up-to-date cargo, combination cargo and passenger, and passenger ships, to give the United States an adequate merchant marine, is hereby recognized, and the board is authorized and directed to present to Congress from time to time, recommendations setting forth what new vessels are required, and the estimated cost thereof, to the end that Congress may, from time to time, make provision for replacements and additions. All vessels built by the board shall be built in the United States, and they shall be planned with reference to their possible usefulness as auxiliaries to the naval and military services of the United States.

SEC. 5. No vessels constructed pursuant to this act shall be sold without the consent of Congress hereafter given.

SEC. 6. The appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act are hereby authorized.

SEC. 7. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The Committee on Commerce reported the following amendment: On page 1, strike out section 2 in the following words:

SEC. 2. The board shall not sell any vessel or any line of vessels when in its judgment the building up and maintenance of an adequate merchant marine can be best served by continued ownership of such vessel or such line by the United States.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. The board shall not sell any vessel or any line of vessels except when in its judgment the building up and maintenance of an adequate merchant marine can be best served thereby, and then only upon the affirmative unanimous vote of the members of the board duly recorded.

On page 3 the committee propose to strike out section 5 in the following words:

SEC. 5. No vessel constructed pursuant to this act shall be sold without the consent of Congress hereafter given.

Also, on page 3, at the end of line 11, the committee propose to add the words "to the extent of any such inconsistency," so as to make the last section read:

All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of any such inconsistency.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will say that I do not want to proceed with the discussion of the bill this afternoon, but I desire to make it the unfinished business. After it is taken up I am going to ask that it be temporarily laid aside. I understand there is a resolution which was submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and which he desires to call up this afternoon. I am perfectly willing that that should be done.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have no objection to that course if taken. I have in charge a resolution which I offered on Saturday, and I was requested to let it go over until Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to speak on the motion very briefly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is debatable.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to ask the chairman of the committee just how soon he intends to proceed with the discussion of the bill if the motion should prevail.

Mr. JONES. I thought probably I might speak on it to-morrow, although I am perfectly willing, if there are other matters which may be brought up, to postpone it until a later time.

Mr. COPELAND. I notice the Senator has great difficulty in speaking. If I may speak as a physician as well as a Senator, it seems to me that the Senator from Washington needs to have more than one day to recover his voice.

Mr. JONES. I think probably I should have, and for that reason I do not desire to urge a discussion of the bill to-day.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to ask a question of the Senator from Washington. As the Senator knows, I have intimated or stated that I intend to present a minority report upon this bill, and I had hoped that the debate on the bill might be deferred until that report was ready. I have no desire to delay action on the bill and am perfectly willing to have it made the unfinished business; but I wish the Senator might agree that we shall not begin serious debate on the bill for two or three days, until the minority views which I desire to present may be prepared.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New York that if it is entirely agreeable on to-morrow to lay the bill temporarily aside until the following day, I shall have no objection; but the Senator appreciates the situation. This, I think, is an opportune time to consider this subject, for the first thing we know there will be appropriation bills and bills of various kinds brought in, and we shall have difficulty in getting up the shipping bill.

I will say to the Senator that so far as I am personally concerned, if the Senator should so desire, I am perfectly willing to let the bill be laid aside temporarily until Wednesday if it shall be made the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. As he knows, I do not wish to postpone the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES. I know that.

Mr. COPELAND. But I do believe there is certain information which the Senate should have before it in a formal way, and if it is understood that the Senator from Washington will move to have the bill laid aside and that we shall not undertake a serious debate until the following day, I shall be gratified.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the Senate to-morrow that the bill may be laid aside until the next day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Why does the Senator from Washington insist now on making this bill the unfinished business?

Mr. JONES. I do so because I want to get action on the measure, one way or the other. The Senator from Utah knows that there will be important bills coming in, and a good deal of time may be taken on them. This, I think, is one of the most vital questions that confronts us. The bill is on the calendar; I think the Senate is ready to take it up; and I hope that that may be done.

Mr. KING. But the Senator from Washington knows that he could move to take up the bill for consideration at any time. If now, however, it is made the unfinished business, he knows that it will have the right of way here over every other measure.

Mr. JONES. I think this is an opportune time to go on with the bill. I do not wish to shut anybody off, much less do I want to shut off the Senator from New York, because I think ultimately he and I will be in agreement. He wants to present a different proposition. I want him to present it, and I will not attempt at all to shut him out from doing so.

Mr. KING. Of course, if this motion shall prevail now, it would make the bill the unfinished business——

Mr. JONES. It would.

Mr. KING. To the exclusion of everything else, and the Senator any time, whether we are ready or otherwise, whether there has been sufficient discussion or otherwise, may bring the bill to our attention and may insist upon a vote.

Mr. JONES. No; I can not insist upon a vote.

Mr. KING. The Senator can insist that the consideration of the bill shall be proceeded with.

Mr. JONES. We shall not be disposed to shut anybody out who may desire to discuss this measure; but I think the Senator appreciates the situation just as much as I know the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] does.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair clarify the situation by suggesting to the Senator from Utah that the bill may be displaced upon motion at any time.

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. KING. I thank the Chair for admonishing me of the rule of the Senate with which I am entirely familiar, but I do not want the bill made the unfinished business, because it will preclude the consideration in an orderly way of other measures. To make it the unfinished business will give it the right of way. It is a measure of such great importance that the Senate ought to have full opportunity to discuss it and full opportunity to advise itself of the hearings which undoubtedly have been very extensive before the committee because of the importance of the measure. I shall have no objection to the Senator from Washington making his motion to-morrow, or on any other day, to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. SHORTRIDGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington has the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has made a motion to take up a measure that has been reported on and has heretofore been quite fully considered; at any rate, I think the general question has been considered quite fully. It seems to me it is important to make the bill the unfinished business in order that we may secure some legislation on the subject. Unless this measure shall be proceeded with, and unless we obtain some legislation speedily, it will be too late I am afraid to save any merchant marine worth while. I know the Senator from Washington is always disposed to be very reasonable about matters of this kind, and if any Senator desires to have the bill go over or if there shall be something else more pressing, an appropriation bill for instance, he will not be disposed to crowd it, but we ought to have the bill before us, let it be the unfinished business, and let us understand that the matter is going to be disposed of.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE and Mr. WILLIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and, if so to whom?

Mr. JONES. I yield first to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I inquire whether the report of the hearings before the committee has been printed and has been furnished to the Senate?

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator from California that we have had no hearings before the committee at this session of Congress. The committee took up the question as to whether we should report a bill embodying the principle contained in this bill or whether we should report a bill providing for aid or a subsidy. The committee voted to report a bill with this principle in it. Having done that, we felt that further hearings were unnecessary.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. For reasons which, perhaps, I think are known, I believe that the purpose is to rush this bill through. I hope that it will not be made the unfinished business. Give us a little time to prepare so that we may present our views with respect to the whole subject matter.

The Senator from Washington, doubtless, knows the situation, and must know the attitude of the members of the Shipping Board. This bill proposes that any one member of the board objecting may defeat any proposition touching the disposal of any one or more of the ships or vessels belonging to the Government.

Mr. JONES. That is an amendment to the bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is an amendment which the committee proposes?

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In other words, it is proposed that everything may be blocked upon the objection of one man.

Mr. JONES. Well, the Senate can vote that down, if it so desires, when it is presented to it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Of course it can; but I object to the manifest though no doubt well-intentioned desire to rush this bill through the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that there is no desire to rush it unduly. Ample time will be given for discussion and debate.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire, if the Senator from Washington will permit me, to make a single observation in response to what the Senator from California has said. I happened to be a member of the committee. There is not any purpose on the part of the committee or its chairman to rush this bill or any other bill through, but it is the purpose of the committee, which was voiced by the action of the chairman just now, to get this great question before the Senate. I, for one, believe that the question as to what we are going to do in regard to the shipping question, as to whether we are to have a merchant marine in this country, is one of the most important questions that can possibly engage the attention of the Senate. It was the idea of the committee that this bill should be reported and considered by the Senate. I reserved the right to vote as I pleased upon this bill or upon any amendment that might be offered thereto; but I do think that it is highly important that this question be brought before the Senate. I therefore hope the Senator from Washington will not withdraw his motion and that the motion will prevail, so that this bill may become the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. SWANSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask the Senator if the report of the committee is unanimous, or well-nigh so?

Mr. JONES. I do not like to speak for the committee; but I think I can say that the committee was substantially unanimous in reporting the bill. As the Senator from Ohio has indicated, there are some amendments which some members of the committee will vote for and some vote against.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] stated a moment ago that he wanted to file a minority report.

Mr. JONES. Yes; the Senator from New York does desire to do that, as he has said; but I think the Senator from New York will probably bear me out when I say that ultimately, if his proposal should be voted down, he is so strongly for the merchant marine that he would stand with the committee. However, he has views which he thinks he ought to present; I sympathize with him in those views, and he shall have full opportunity to present them.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield further to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Washington is almost right. If certain amendments are made to the bill, I shall be glad to support it, but if this bill as presented by the committee were to be voted upon at this time and if I had 10 votes I should vote all of them against it, because this bill as proposed by the committee is a blow in the face of the privately owned merchant marine of this country; this bill proposes to commit the Government to the ownership and operation of the merchant marine as a permanent policy; and I do not believe that the Senate or the country desire any such policy to be forced upon us.

Mr. JONES. Of course, there is a difference of opinion with reference to the language of the bill itself; but I do care to discuss the merits of the bill on the motion to take it up. I desire to get it up and then we can discuss all the questions involved.

Mr. SWANSON and Mr. WILLIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. I yield first to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not true that the Shipping Board is contemplating or have authorized—and the transaction may be consummated at any time—the sale of a large number of ships? If that shall be done, there will be very little occasion for the passage of this bill. As I understand, the Shipping Board is desirous of knowing what is the policy of Congress in connection with the sale of ships. Consequently, it seems to me, it is very urgent that that policy should be fixed at as early a date as possible. Is not that the situation?

Mr. JONES. I did not take that phase of it into consideration so far as my action on this bill was concerned.

Mr. SWANSON. But is it not true that such a sale is being contemplated?

Mr. JONES. There was a proposal to sell a certain line on the Pacific, and bids have been called for, to be opened, I think, on the 10th of February.

Mr. SWANSON. Will that sale be delayed until this bill shall have been disposed of?

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether the Shipping Board would delay it or not.

Mr. SWANSON. There is urgent necessity if we are going to fix a policy that it should be fixed as soon as possible?

Mr. JONES. There is urgent necessity, in my judgment, for the Congress to declare what it is going to do.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask the Senator—because I have not followed the bill—whether it involves any subsidy to private interests?

Mr. JONES. That is what it does not do.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask the Senator whether it involves any considerable burden upon the Federal Treasury?

Mr. JONES. Only so far as Congress may hereafter vote appropriations to carry out whatever recommendations may be sent to Congress for the building of additional ships.

Mr. COPELAND. There is a little more than that involved.

Mr. JONES. And for the carrying on of the shipping lines.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will yield, there is just a little more than that involved, because it contemplates that these vessels may be reconditioned.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Mr. COPELAND. But, of course, that can be done out of the funds which are now in the Treasury at the disposal of the Shipping Board.

Mr. JONES. I know, as to the vessels which the board contemplates reconditioning, that it sought a Budget estimate, but I understand, as it would cost several million dollars, the board will not recondition those vessels without authority from Congress. Whatever authority they have for that is under existing law and not under this proposed legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. But section 3 of the bill does provide that, in addition to ordinary repairs to vessels incident to their regular operation, the board may recondition and improve vessels owned by the United States and in its possession or under its control so as to equip them adequately for competition in the foreign trade of the United States.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but if the Senator will read on he will find that they must submit their estimates to Congress.

Mr. COPELAND. No; that is for replacements.

Mr. JONES. I think it is all in the same section.

Mr. COPELAND. No; the Senator has not read the bill.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I have read it. I should like to see it the way the Senator suggests.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if it is not a fair inference, in the light of the experience we have had in the last six or eight years, that the passage of the bill will involve a very great burden upon the Federal Treasury?

Mr. JONES. The passage of the bill will probably entail some further large appropriations for the building of new ships.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, is not this proposed action a commentary upon what we may expect at this session? The Ways and Means Committee of the other House convened during the recess of Congress for the purpose of reducing the tax burden of the country, and did report and the House passed a bill making a considerable reduction in the tax burden. That bill, for a period at least, seems to have been buried in the Finance Committee of the Senate, with the public announcement that it will not be taken up for consideration until the 15th of next March. That, in my conception, means an invitation to every looter of the Treasury in both branches of Congress to raid the Treasury so that there may be no tax reduction at all, and instead of considering the first bill that the other House passed we are called upon now to make unfinished business of a bill that means a very grave burden upon the public revenues.

I for one am not willing to vote to consider any bill that is going to make such an inroad upon the public revenues until we have first considered tax reduction in this body.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to say, in partial answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia, that so far as I am concerned I had no thought in mind such as he suggests. My only thought is that we are confronted with a situation with reference to a vital problem that requires immediate action—action just as soon as we can possibly take it, one way or the other. That is my sole purpose in pressing this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from New York stated that this bill, as now drawn, has for its purpose committing the Government to Government ownership and operation of the merchant marine. Did I understand the Senator from Washington to say that he does not put that construction on the bill?

Mr. JONES. I do not put the construction that the Senator from New York does on the first section of the bill, but I do say that it is a Government-construction bill. Congress, of course, can reverse that at any time it sees fit to do so. I do not think the first section of the bill affirms that we propose permanently to stay in the Government-construction business.

The Senator from New York construes it that way. So far as the first section of the bill is concerned, I should be perfectly willing to have it cut out entirely. It does not accomplish anything in a legislative way, but it is simply a reaffirmation——

Mr. BORAH. Is it the first section to which the Senator has reference as committing us to Government ownership?

Mr. JONES. It is the first section.

Mr. BORAH. It will simplify the matter very much, then, if the Senator will strike out the section.

Mr. JONES. I shall be perfectly willing to strike out that section, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to observe only that the discussion that has ensued illustrates precisely the position of the committee, in this: We thought that Senators were interested in this great question of our shipping and that it was important that this question should be brought before the Senate in a broad way.

I want to say particularly in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from New York that he, of course, understands perfectly, because he knows the rules of the Senate, that his bill or any other bill on this subject, or perhaps any subject, would be in order as an amendment to this bill. What we want to do is to get this great American question before the Senate and take the sense of the Senate upon the question at as early a date as possible.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Senator from Ohio if it would not be fair to the Senate first to have the minority report presented, so that we could have both sides before there was a discussion of the question?

Mr. WILLIS. Let me say in response to that, if the Senator will permit me, that there is no disposition on the part of the chairman of the committee to crowd consideration of this bill to the point where the minority report to be submitted by the Senator from New York can not be prepared and submitted. As the Senator from Washington stated, we all know what the situation is here and what is likely to ensue. Directly other measures will be in here, and we shall find ourselves in a crowded condition of the calendar; and the upshot of it will be that this great question, of tremendous importance to the American people, will go by without proper consideration. If, however, the motion of the Senator from Washington shall be adopted, we shall then have the matter before us; and everybody here knows the attitude of the Senator from Washington well enough to be sure that no unfair advantage will be taken and that every opportunity will be given to every Senator to present his views or file his report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this bill was reported on January 9. I think the Senator from New York will bear me out in the statement that he said he might file a minority report. I had supposed it had gone so long that he had abandoned that purpose, and expected simply to propose the amendments which of course he can propose at any time. If he had told me that he had decided to file a minority report and wanted more time before the bill was brought up, however reluctant I might have been to delay it I certainly would have done so; but I really supposed that he had abandoned his idea of filing a minority report.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I have no fault at all to find with the Senator from Washington. I think he had a perfect right to form the opinion that he has;

but, frankly, I had not realized that this bill would be called up so soon. I am very anxious indeed that there shall be a further meeting of the Commerce Committee in order that the amendments which I have suggested may be considered first by that committee. I do not think any one of them could be ruled out on a point of order——

Mr. JONES. I do not think so.

Mr. COPELAND. Because there is no money involved in any plan which I have to present; but there are such serious objections, as I see it, to this bill as it is, and amendments might be suggested to it which would accomplish what the Senator from Washington has in mind, that I wish it might be possible for it to go over for a few days, until there can be a further meeting of the Commerce Committee. Then I would not resist at all bringing this matter before us, whether the committee agrees with me or not. I want it debated on the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator that we make it the unfinished business, and then we will call a meeting of the Commerce Committee for Wednesday morning to consider any amendments that the Senator may have. Of course, any amendments that the committee might adopt I should be glad to have come up as committee amendments on the floor of the Senate; and in the meantime, to-morrow, if there are matters that ought to be taken up, we will temporarily lay the bill aside.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, because I am so devoted to the cause of the merchant marine, I am going to agree to the suggestion of the Senator, although I think the Senate should begin to think about this bill. This bill, as it is written and presented from the committee, unless further modifications are made, I believe is a very dangerous bill. No matter whether you seek to read some other thought into it or not, the bill specifically provides that the purpose of the United States is to maintain permanently a merchant marine; and then, in order that there shall be no doubt about it, no ship can be sold by the Shipping Board in the future except by unanimous vote of the Shipping Board, and we know that there are one or two men on that board who have never voted to sell one ship. It would mean, if this bill were to pass as it is here, that the Government would be committed to the permanent ownership and operation of a merchant marine, and I believe for myself that that is most detrimental to the private shipping interests and to the great merchant marine which ultimately must certainly be operated by private individuals.

So, for these reasons, I should be very sorry to have the Senate proceed without having before it these other arguments and possible substitutes for the bill. The Senator now says, however, that if the bill is made the unfinished business he will call a meeting of the committee on Wednesday——

Mr. JONES. Wednesday morning.

Mr. COPELAND. And that these matters may be considered. So far as I am concerned, if the committee considers them and sees fit by a majority vote not to accept them, of course that is the business of the committee, and then possibly by the time we come to the consideration of the bill we will have a minority report.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator and also to the Senate that there was quite a difference of opinion in the committee with reference to the amendment requiring the unanimous vote of the board for the sale of a ship. Some of us preferred not to have it quite so strong, but the majority of the committee supported that proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, under the gentlemen's agreement that has been entered into it is utterly unimportant whether the Senate proceeds now to the consideration of this bill or waits until another day to take that action. The Senator from Washington has stated that he merely desires to have it made the unfinished business, and is himself not ready to proceed with the discussion of the bill. Manifestly, no other business can be done by the Senate, except the business that occurs during the morning hour after an adjournment, except by unanimous consent; and any Senator who objects to proceeding with this bill can displace it as the unfinished business of the Senate by objecting to the consideration of other business prior to the time when the Senate is ready to dispose of this bill.

I do not think there is any disposition here to prevent reasonably prompt action upon the measure. I thought the request of the Senator from New York was a reasonable one; and I do not see anything to be accomplished by making it the unfinished business and then immediately laying it aside, because, as I have already stated, any Senator who objects to proceeding with other business can have it displaced in that way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is obvious that this measure repeals the existing Shipping Board act—No matter what efforts may be made to camouflage this measure—and no matter what interpretations may be placed upon this bill—it is a measure to repeal the existing law and to commit the Government irrevocably to the ownership and operation of a merchant marine.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] pertinently called attention to the first section, which states:

> That the policy declared in section 1 of the merchant marine act, 1920, is hereby confirmed; and the purpose of the United States to maintain permanently a merchant marine adequate for the proper growth of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States and for the national defense is hereby reaffirmed.

However, the interpretation placed upon that act, in view of many provisions found therein, was that it was the duty of the Shipping Board at the earliest possible moment to dispose of the ships under the control of the Shipping Board and owned by the Government, putting them into the hands of private owners. This bill reverses that policy, and commits the United States Government to the ownership and operation of a merchant marine. Other sections in this bill confirm the position I have just indicated—for instance, section 2, to which the Senator from New York called attention:

> The board shall not sell any vessel or any line of vessels except when in its judgment the building up and maintenance of an adequate merchant marine can be best served thereby, and then only upon the affirmative unanimous vote of the members of the board duly recorded.

Of course, this provision commits to the board the determination of what is an adequate merchant marine. The members of that board are the sole determinators of that question, and the negative vote of a single member would prevent the execution of provisions of existing law calling for the disposition of ships whenever that can be done.

Section 2 is an afterthought; it is an amendment to the bill as offered. It is offered for the purpose of preventing the alienation of a single ship and to compel the Government to remain in the shipping business. It seeks to prevent the Government from disposing of the ships which it now owns, or those which it may subsequently acquire, and it is apparent that the one negative vote is a complete embargo upon the disposition of any of the ships.

Section 4 provides:

> The necessity for the replacement of vessels owned by the United States and in the possession or under the control of the board and the construction of additional up-to-date cargo, combination cargo and passenger, and passenger ships, to give the United States an adequate merchant marine, is hereby recognized.

Then the board is directed to indicate to Congress the appropriations desired, and so forth. This reaffirms the position that the Government must continue to own and operate cargo and passenger or combination passenger and cargo ships, and the board is to determine what is to constitute an adequate merchant marine. The board, not Congress, is to determine whether it shall be 1,000 or 100 ships. The board is to decide what ships are to be built, and what are to be repaired, and are to operate such ships as they may see fit. But the important matter is that the Government is committed to the policy of owning and operating a merchant marine.

Section 5 provides:

> The appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act are hereby authorized.

That will be considered as granting carte blanche authority to the board to contract for ships and to operate them. Of course, they will do so at the peril of obtaining appropriations from Congress, but this provision is a declaration by Congress that the board is authorized and directed to proceed under the provisions of this bill and maintain an adequate merchant marine, according to their definition of what an adequate merchant marine is.

Mr. President, if we vote to take this bill up, it will be construed by some persons that the Senate is committed to the policy of a Government-owned and Government-operated merchant marine.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, will he yield for a question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator agree with the sentence in the message of the President of the United States sent here on the 6th of December, in which he said:

It should be our policy to keep our present vessels in repair and dispose of them as rapidly as possible, rather than undertake any new construction.

Mr. KING. I agree with one modification. The Shipping Board should be directed to sell all the ships it controls. If we had pursued a wise policy several years ago, we would have sold all the ships controlled by the board. Every ship that was seaworthy could have been sold in 1920 and 1921 at from $100 a ton to $200 a ton. But we clung tenaciously to the mistaken view that the Government should operate these ships, and the Shipping Board, with an inefficiency that has called for criticism, pursued a fatuous policy. It sought to commit the Government of the United States irrevocably to the ownership and operation of merchant ships.

There ought to be a mandatory instruction from Congress, directing the Shipping Board to dispose of all ships in its possession. The Government should get out of the shipping business. Congress should repeal a number of archaic laws; Americans should be permitted to purchase ships, wherever built, and bring them to the United States, then to be registered under our laws, and sailed under the American flag. If this were done, we would have a merchant marine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 744.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE]. The senior Senator from Louisiana is necessarily detained in his State. If he were present, on this question he would vote "yea," and if the Senator from New Jersey were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is absent, attending a meeting of the Colorado River Commission.

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—61

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Lions Club of Basin, Wyo., favoring the making of adequate appropriations for the reforestation of denuded areas within the national forests, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Lions Club of Basin, Wyo., favoring the enactment of legislation to aid in insuring adequate supplies of timber and other forest products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Green Bay, Wis., praying for the passage of legislation granting substantially increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CUTTING presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Fort Bayard, N. Mex., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented a telegram from John W. Summerlin, president of the Tensas Basin Flood Control Association, Monroe, La., making suggestions relative to flood control, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MAYFIELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1476) for the relief of Porter Bros. & Biffle and certain other citizens (Rept. No. 83); and

A bill (S. 2457) for the relief of Bert Moore (Rept. No. 84).

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2471) for the relief of the owner of the American steam tug Charles Runyon (Rept. No. 85);

A bill (S. 2516) for the relief of the owners and/or receiver of the American steam tug W. S. Holbrook (Rept. No. 86); and

A bill (S. 2517) for the relief of the owner of barge Consolidation Coastwise No. 10 (Rept. No. 87).

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2316) for the relief of Lewis C. Hopkins & Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 88) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was recommitted the bill (S. 1154) to authorize the use by the county of Yuma, Ariz., of certain public lands for a municipal aviation field, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 89) thereon.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2524) for the relief of Josephine Doxey, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 91) thereon.

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2215) to authorize the construction of a public highway to connect the town of Alderson with the village of Glenray, W. Va., reported it without amendment.

MINERAL LEASES IN NEW MEXICO

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I report back favorably from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys Senate Joint Resolution 38, giving and granting consent to an amendment to the constitution of the State of New Mexico, providing a method for executing leases and other contracts for the development and production of any and all minerals on lands granted or confirmed to said State by the act of Congress approved June 20, 1910, and to the enactment of such laws and regulations as may be necessary to carry said amendment into effect if it is adopted, and I submit a report thereon (No. 90). I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Is the proposed amendment to the constitution of the State something like the amendment authorized in the State of Montana, under which the mineral lands may be leased for a limited period of time?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes. The original enabling act granting certain lands to the States provided a method of executing leases, and it has been found to be burdensome and in many instances restrictive of development. The joint resolution merely authorizes the people of the State to vote at the next regular election upon an amendment to the State constitution which will authorize the legislature of the State to prescribe the method of leasing the land, but always the proceeds are to be kept in the channels prescribed by the enabling act. That is what the proposed amendment to the State constitution does, and that is the purpose of it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, we could not hear the Senator from New Mexico because of the confusion in the Chamber. Will he kindly repeat his statement?

Mr. BRATTON. I will explain it again for the Senator's benefit. The act of June 20, 1910, admitting New Mexico into statehood granted certain lands to the State for specific purposes and prescribed how those lands should be leased. Among other things, it prescribed that publication must be made for 10 consecutive weeks at the State capital and in the county where the land is located. The question has arisen as to whether or not that provision applied to oil and gas leases. The State has gone forward under an interpretation made by the Supreme Court that it did not apply because Congress granted to the State only nonmineral lands and did not have in mind the leasing of nonmineral lands for mineral purposes. The bar of the State is not agreed upon that construction. Some think the act does apply and would require that burdensome procedure in the executing of oil and gas leases upon 80 acres of land at some remote point, for instance.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Where is the title to the property?

Mr. BRATTON. In the State, but the enabling act provided that no change should be made without the consent of Congress and the people. The proposed amendment to the State constitution is to let the legislature prescribe in the future what shall be done in the way of leasing the State lands, but the amendment prescribes that all money coming from that source shall not be diverted from the channel prescribed by the enabling act. It does not change the use of the money. It simply lets the State say, if it should want to say, that in the future publication should be made 4 weeks or 2 weeks or not at all, instead of 10 weeks, both at the capital and in the county where the land is now located.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. What change is made as to the funds?

Mr. BRATTON. No change whatever. The funds all go to the State, and the enabling act and the constitutional provision accepting the grant both provided that no change shall be made except with the consent of the Federal Government and the people of the State voting on a constitutional amendment. At the last session of the legislature a constitutional amendment was proposed, which authorized the State in the future by legislation to prescribe the machinery and method of leasing the lands or to validate outstanding leases. The joint resolution merely gives consent on the part of Congress that the people of the State may vote upon the amendment. They may reject it or they may adopt it at the election.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It does not amend the present existing law or the enabling act?

Mr. BRATTON. No. If the amendment is adopted at the State election, in the future the legislature of the State may prescribe what shall be done in the way of leasing of lands, but the use of the money and the purpose to which it shall be put are not changed in the joint resolution at all.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Is not this premature on the part of Congress?

Mr. BRATTON. No. The Congress must give its consent before they can even vote upon it.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That consent is hereby given and granted to the State of New Mexico and the qualified electors thereof to vote upon the question of amending the constitution of said State and to amend the same by the adoption of the following amendment proposed by the legislature of said State at its eighth regular session by H. J. Res. 8, approved March 11, 1927, to be designated as Article XXIV, said amendment being as follows, to wit:

"ARTICLE XXIV

"CONTRACTS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT AND PROTECTION OF MINERALS ON STATE LANDS

"Leases and other contracts, reserving a royalty to the State for the development and production of any and all minerals on lands granted or confirmed to the State of New Mexico by the act of Congress of June 20, 1910, entitled 'An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States,' may be made under such provisions relating to the necessity or requirement for or the mode and manner of appraisement, advertisement, and competitive bidding, and containing such terms and provisions, as may be provided by act of the legislature; the rentals, royalties, and other proceeds therefrom to be applied and conserved in accordance with the provisions of said act of Congress for the support or in aid of the common schools, or for the attainment of the respective purposes for which the several grants were made."

Consent also is given and granted to said State to enact such laws and establish such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary to carry such constitutional provision into full force and effect should the same be duly and legally adopted.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SACKETT:

A bill (S. 2604) granting an increase of pension to Edward R. Baker; to the Committee on Pensions.

AIR CORPS OFFICERS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 2595) to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, on request of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2595, Seventieth Congress, first session

In the Senate of the United States, January 14 (calendar day, January 16), 1928

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas introduced the following bill, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established an Air Corps promotion list, upon which all Air Corps officers below the grade of brigadier general shall be arranged among themselves in the following manner:

1. All officers of the Air Corps as of July 1, 1927, shall be placed on the Air Corps promotion list in the same relative positions which they occupy on the single promotion list.

2. All officers commissioned in the Air Corps after July 1, 1927, shall be placed on the Air Corps promotion list according to the length of commissioned service.

Except as hereinafter provided, Air Corps officers below the grade of colonel shall be promoted to the grade of first lieutenant when credited with three years' commissioned service, to the grade of captain after 7 years' commissioned service, to the grade of major after 12 years' commissioned service, to the grade of lieutenant colonel after 18 years' commissioned service, and to the grade of colonel after 25 years' commissioned service. The number of Air Corps officers in the grade of colonel shall be not less than 4 per cent, nor more than 6 per cent, and the number in the grade of lieutenant colonel shall be not less than 5 per cent, nor more than 7 per cent, of the total number of Air Corps officers on the Air Corps promotion list, and the aggregate number of Air Corps officers in the grade of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major shall be not less than 26 per cent, nor more than 40 per cent, of said total number of Air Corps officers, and in so far as necessary to maintain said minimum Air Corps officers of less than required years of commissioned service shall be promoted to the grades of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major, and only in so far as their promotion will not cause said maximum of 40 per cent to be exceeded shall officers who have completed 12 years' service be promoted to the grade of major.

Air Corps officers may upon their own request or at the discretion of the President be transferred in grade to the retired list after 30 years' commissioned service: Provided, That each year of flying service shall be computed as two years of commissioned service, and such officers shall be retired in grade upon reaching the age of 54 years, unless serving in the grade of a general officer by detail, in which case he shall be retired upon the expiration of such detail. The pay and allowances of such retired officers shall be 75 per cent of all their pay immediately prior to retirement.

Wherever mentioned in this act, the words "flying service" shall be considered as meaning commissioned service during which participation in regular and frequent aerial flights has been, is, or may be required by competent orders, and shall include any period of illness or hospitalization, or leave of absence, which is both preceded and followed by actual flying service.

The provisions of this act shall be effective immediately upon its signature by the President, and all laws and parts of laws which are inconsistent herewith or are in conflict with the provisions hereof are hereby repealed as of that date.

ALTERATIONS IN THE SENATE OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. MOSES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 111), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol hereby is authorized and directed to make certain necessary alterations and repairs in the Senate Office Building under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, at a cost not to exceed $6,000, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1927.

GOVERNOR RITCHIE'S JACKSON DAY SPEECH

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, if there is no objection, I should like to have inserted in the RECORD the speech delivered by Albert C. Ritchie, Governor of Maryland, at the Jackson Day dinner in this city on the 12th instant.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Governor Richie's speech is as follows:

I am very much flattered by this opportunity to be heard in the councils of our party. Yet I realize that there are many others here to-night who are as devoted to our political principles as I am and far better fitted to expound them. There is little I can hope to do except bear testimony, as the theologians say, to the faith that is in me.

They tell us that the Democratic Party has no real issue. The political situation bristles with issues. Issues produced by costly mistakes of omission and commission, domestic and foreign, by the party in power; issues raised by erroneous policies or by lack of policies; issues forced upon both parties by new social and economic developments, some of which go to the very heart of government.

But the great issue that confronts us to-day, as I see it, is not so much whether the Democratic Party shall prevail as it is whether democracy and democratic government shall prevail.

I am a Democrat with an abiding faith in the future of our party, because I have an abiding faith in the future of democracy; yet I believe it is democracy itself that is slowly but surely facing a crisis.

We are steadily moving to a conflict in which the issue will be very much more fundamental than whether this or that current contention is to prevail or whether this or that party shall dispense the powers of office. Rights and liberties that are guaranteed to us by charter and tradition are being lost and sacrificed in the flux of events, and democracy itself is being put to the test. My appeal is that we see our duty and our opportunity in this larger perspective.

Undoubtedly there are party differences of opinion to surmount. But these very differences may prove a source of strength instead of weakness. The Republicans have apparent harmony and unity because they are a stand-pat, do-nothing party. They do nothing, and they stand for nothing except for the status quo and the quid pro quo.

I am more afraid of party indifference than I am of party differences. Obviously our party can not win if we are to fight each other instead of uniting to fight for a common cause. But I have faith in our ability to unite our own people and appeal to the large independent vote that stands for liberal and Democratic principles.

I have this faith because the issues that seem to divide our party do not grow out of any lack of unity as to its traditional and historic principles. They are rather due to a difference of opinion as to the application of those principles. They exist chiefly because we have allowed certain aims and ideals to become national questions when they are politically local questions and should remain local.

It has been suggested that I touch these questions with becoming lightness, or, better still, not at all. But I know no language for a meeting of Democrats except the language of Democracy.

Nearly 150 years ago our party proclaimed to a waiting world faith in the individual human being and in the integrity of the local political unit. That has ever since been the spirit and creed of the Democratic Party. I believe it is the creed by which our party will again be restored to power. And in a Democratic assemblage I claim the right to speak the message of Democracy as we have inherited it from Jefferson and from Jackson.

Even now we see a Republican President with the fervor and zeal of a new convert declaring for what he calls the rights of the States. But the trouble is that the doctrine does not square with the theory or the practices of his party. The States appeal to Republicans as an aid to a strong centralized government. They appeal to Democrats as an agency for free government.

This country is still a democracy in the making, a democracy that must fight for its existence. The conflict between Hamilton and Jefferson was not one of theories but of actualities, and in the fullness of time these same elemental actualities are confronting us again to-day.

Shall this Nation be a democracy in fact as well as in name? Shall we govern ourselves or shall we be governed? Shall democracy be a vital, working political actuality or shall it be merely an academic theory?

Let the people but realize that we are met at Armageddon to settle that issue and our party will win, as it has always won whenever the issue has been raised.

Jefferson's fighting faith in democracy and Jackson's in the next great crisis of our political development may well be regarded as the two most important factors in our political history. Their faith is still the only fighting faith our party has.

Does anyone believe that given the power this faith will not translate itself into works? Then let him remember the eight years of Grover Cleveland, who did not bend before the storm. "Men and times," he said, "may differ, but principles never," and to him should go a full measure of credit for making this a sound money country and laying the foundations of our financial integrity and prosperity.

Or let such a one contrast the spirit and the accomplishments of the eight years of Democratic rule under Woodrow Wilson with the eight years under Republican Presidents since then.

Time does not permit a review of the Wilson administration, either its accomplishments in peace, culminating in the Federal reserve act, to which Senator CARTER GLASS gave so freely of his talent and energy, or its amazing contribution to the winning of a mighty war.

Nor does time permit the record of Republican mistakes of omission and commission during the years which followed, except, perhaps, to say that the most conspicuous two were disclosed to a startled country by the almost unaided efforts of two great Democrats.

That the business of government will not again be defiled and exploited by political brigands is due more than anything else to the matchless energy of Senator THOMAS J. WALSH, of Montana; and that the election machinery will not again be debauched in this country is due more than anything else to the matchless energy of Senator JAMES A. REED, of Missouri.

Differences in principles seldom make much of an appeal until they translate themselves into results which the people can see and feel. These results are around us now. The masses are becoming conscious of the appalling growth of the Federal Government and of its overriding centralization. They are beginning to see the danger to their individual liberty from the decay and apathy of the States and from the encroachments on the right of self-government. They are coming to realize the extent to which some of our liberties have been abridged and others are jeopardized.

In the presence of a government with a big business complex, with its functions highly concentrated and with power feeding on power, the ordinary man feels helpless and grows politically apathetic. He loses interest in his local government because its functions are diverted. He loses interest in his national government because it is too remote and far away. He lets rights guaranteed to him and to his State sink into innocuous desuetude. He falls an easy victim to the propaganda and the programs of energetic minorities and to the extragovernmental groups and hierarchies which know what they want and descend upon the central government for it.

There is only one way to get the people back into their government, to get them to use it and not permit it any longer to be abused. That way is to give them the largest possible measure of self-government, individually, in their business and in their political state.

To those who doubt that, or who would limit the application of it, I summon again the memory of Grover Cleveland, who believed in a maximum of self-government, and held that the true ideals of liberty and democracy can be attained only under a government which grants the utmost autonomy to local political units. This, he thought, would mean cleaner politics, fewer bitter conflicts, less corruption, less bureaucracy, less centralization, less abuse of power, and less tyranny. Political progress, he claimed, rests with the individual and must be self-achieved; "an enlightened people can be trusted to govern themselves." He believed in the supremacy of the law and in its honest enforcement with equal justice to all, rich and poor; but held that all laws should be kept down to an irreducible minimum, and that both men and nations have the inalienable right "to choose their own ways of life and obedience."

To-day we are face to face with the modern application of that problem. Once the absorbing question was whether Federal powers were to be supreme within the Federal sphere, or whether the States could nullify them. Now, the question is whether State powers shall be supreme in the State sphere, or whether the Federal Government shall nullify them.

It is upon considerations such as these that I believe the hope of temperance and of respect for law in this country rests. I have profound regard for those who sincerely differ with me on this subject. I ask only that, whether we agree or differ about it, we have the courage to face it. In no other way can conflicting views ever become reconcilable.

To me the question is not at all one of wet or dry, to use the inept phrase of the hour. It involves the basic principle of American Government in all matters restrictive of personal liberty.

That basic principle is that those communities which want prohibitory legislation of this kind are entitled to have it. They are entitled, too, to be protected by effective regulations against shipments from other States which contravene their laws. But those communities which do not want this legislation should not be forced by other States into taking it anyhow. They should be free to promote temperance within their borders by such means and measures as suit their needs, as their people sanction and as command that degree of respect which will assure enforcement.

So I favor settling this problem by the traditional doctrine of American democracy—self-determination and home rule.

For like reasons I do not want to see the Federal Government begin the job of nationalizing the education of the young through a Federal department of education, or of controlling child labor throughout the land, but had rather trust the people of the States to enact humane and effective laws on both these subjects which will meet their diversified needs.

Nor do I want to see the industry of the Nation become the victim of standardized bureaucracy, with all that means in cost and incompetence, or constantly look to Washington for aid and subsidies, and thus become not only over-favored, but also over-regulated and badgered by job-creating and jurisdiction-grabbing commissions and bureaus.

The Democratic Party is not hostile to business or to big business. All we ask is that business look not to Government for special favors and privileges, that it leave the door of opportunity open for others to enter, and that the economies and efficiencies of big business inure in fair measure to the benefit of the consumer. Those things granted, business is as much entitled to grow big as it is to stay small, and government should keep its hands off it and out of it as far as possible.

I refuse to believe that the intelligence of the country can not see that business prosperity must rest on a sounder basis than political favoritism or inspired guidance from Washington. Business should look to and trust the States and their people, as the sources from which its strength and safety spring and as the arch and security of our governmental structure.

So I would keep the democratic units of our Government—State, city, and county—strong, and thus keep the spirit of democracy alive. And I know of no way of doing this except by protecting the rights of the individual as he has defined them in his various charters of liberty and as he guarded them by his system of constitutional limitations. If I read the history of the Democratic Party aright, these were the principles it first laid down and which gave force and vitality to our history; and ours is the party that must defend them now.

They say we can not win because of personal and territorial differences and discords. But on fundamental principles we are a united party. As I have said, it is in their application that we differ. Let's settle these differences locally as the fathers of the Nation planned. And let us not only be a party of opposition but a party of affirmation and leadership.

But they say we have no leaders to lead. I deny it. I see plenty of them around me to-night, loyal Democrats and competent. And, after all, in the case of any real leader fit to sit in high position, the ultimate test is not what may be his views on this or that current question. Most certainly it is not what may be his religious creed.

The ultimate test is simpler than that. It is whether he is sound and courageous, honest and understanding. As Grover Cleveland intimates in one of his letters, the whole art of government is simply applied common sense and common honesty, with reason, justice, and tolerance as handmaids. If one lacks those qualities, then he lacks leadership, no matter what his views on current questions may be.

That leadership of this sort strikes a responsive note is seen in the way the name of Gov. Alfred E. Smith, of New York, is received. He has proved himself, of course, the great governor of a great State, and an honest, fearless, and efficient administrator. But more than that, the masses sense that here is an authentic voice not only of the Democratic Party but of the democracy of the Nation, too.

He justifies the people's faith in democracy. They feel that Wall Street and Main Street look the same to him. They note that his idea seems to be the simple one of giving an honest and practical people as honest and practical government as he knows how. That is precisely the simple every-day creed of every honest Democrat, and it may become the simple creed on which the Democratic Party will march to victory.

So far as I can see, the Republican Party has but one issue. It claims our national prosperity as a party asset, and they tell us that so long as this prosperity continues there is no hope for the Democratic Party.

I have no fears about our continuing prosperity, although I would like to see it less spotty, and with less concentrated power to make it or break it. But if our prosperity is to continue, this will not be because of burdensome or discriminatory tariffs, or multibillion dollar budgets, or governmental benedictions or all the inspired wisdom which is now being handed out by some four million office holders.

We are prosperous in spite of all this. With our unlimited natural resources, a hundred million workers filled with the spirit of enterprise and initiative will assure prosperity, if you but make them feel that they have equality of opportunity and free play for their free energies in a free country.

That is what Woodrow Wilson meant by his fight for the "new freedom," and it is what is meant to-day by the fight for the old and traditional democracy of Jefferson and Jackson and Cleveland. It is indeed the only medium through which democracy can thrive—freedom from excessive taxation, from excessive regulation, from excessive interference with the free play of human effort and aspiration. It is for these things our party stands, and they are the very essence of abiding prosperity.

And so I close with a plea for Democratic unity and leadership in Democratic essentials. I plead for faith in the processes of liberty and in those underlying principles of the Republic which have been hammered out in the forge of experience and tested out in the furnace of time. Above all, I plead for faith in the right, and for courage to fight for that faith.

TENNESSEE'S WATER POWER—ADDRESS BY SENATOR M'KELLAR

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address delivered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] at Clarksville, Tenn., June 21, 1927, before the Kiwanis Club of that place, relative to the water power of Tennessee.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MCKELLAR DISCUSSES STATE'S WATER POWER—GIVES HIS VIEWS ON SITUATION BEFORE CLARKSVILLE KIWANIS CLUB—REGRETS TENNESSEE'S RIGHTS REMAIN UNDETERMINED

CLARKSVILLE, TENN., June 21.—(Special.)—Senator K. D. MCKELLAR reviewed the water-power situation in Tennessee in an address before the Kiwanis Club to-day.

The talk was made at the weekly luncheon of the Kiwanis Club in the Woman's Club Building, the luncheon being attended by the Kiwanis and a number of guests. R. H. Pickering presided at the luncheon and a delightful repast was spread.

The talk by Senator MCKELLAR to-day follows one made recently by Gus Newbern, director of the Tennessee Public Service Information Bureau, in which development of water power by private ownership was advocated. Senator MCKELLAR to-day gave an elaborate discussion of the water-power situation in the State.

The Senator was introduced by Jack Selsemeyer, county engineer, who was responsible for the invitation being extended him. Mr. Selsemeyer stated that the importance of the water-power subject was so great that the club membership would not be content to hear just one side of it discussed.

The reception to Senator MCKELLAR was very cordial. At the conclusion of his talk he asked those present who approved of his position to hold up their hands. Nearly every hand went up.

His address was in part as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I greatly appreciate the invitation of the members of the Kiwanis Club of Clarksville to appear before them to-day for the purpose of giving my views about the water-power situation in Tennessee. Coming as the invitation did, entirely unsolicited, I am constrained to believe that the members of your club desire to have information upon this all-important question, and I am going to violate one of my usual rules. I think on only one or two other occasions in my life have I read a speech, but there has been so much misrepresentation of my views on the water-power question that I feel I want to have these views placed accurately before the people of Tennessee, and so I am going to take the liberty of reading these views to you, though I would much prefer talking to you without notes, and I am sure you would much prefer listening to me without notes.

MUSCLE SHOALS

"Before discussing the Tennessee water-power situation I desire to have a word to say about Muscle Shoals. As you all know, I was intensely interested and in favor of the proposal of Mr. Ford to take over Muscle Shoals, because I thought he could probably do more with it than anyone else, but for some reason Mr. Ford withdrew his bid, and I have since reached the conclusion that the Government should retain Muscle Shoals, use all necessary power generated there for the purpose of experimentation with fertilizers and the manufacture of fertilizers, and then sell the surplus power to the users of same, living within economic transmission distance of the plant. To illustrate what I desire to state is that I think that the municipalities should be given the preference and that any municipality should have the right to build transmission lines to the plant and receive current at a reasonable price. In this way only will the Muscle Shoals plant ever be of any actual value to the people. If it is transferred to any private company whatsoever, only the stockholders of that private company will ever benefit by the building of the plant. This plant was built with the people's money. It should be used for the benefit of all the people, as far as that can be done.

"You hear it frequently stated that the Congress should do something with the Muscle Shoals; that it should not lie idle. Well, of course, it is not lying idle! The Government has leased it to the Alabama Power Co. in violation of law, and it is paying an income to the Government greater than it would pay if any of the bids that have been made for it were accepted. In other words, it is ridiculous to talk about the Government losing money by not accepting one of the bids. The Government is selling this power to the Alabama Power Co. at one-fifth of a cent per kilowatt, and even at that price it is bringing the Government larger returns than it would if the Government had accepted the Alabama Power Co.'s and its associates' offer for a 50-year lease on the property. In other words, the Government is losing nothing even by its present handling of the property. Again, if Congress should enter into a proposed lease with the Alabama Power Co. the people would not be benefited, and more particularly the people of Tennessee would be deprived of any interest in the power, and would get none of the current except such as the Alabama Power Co. might see fit to give to us in this State. It is using none of it in this State now.

VIOLATION OF LAW

"The statute under which this plant was built specifically provides that the Government shall not transfer this plant or lease this plant to any private company or to use it jointly with any private company, and yet the present administration, in absolute and perfect violation of this law, has turned this plant over to the Alabama Power Co. It is a gross and inexcusable violation of law.

"And I want to call your special attention to the fact that though the Alabama Power Co. gets this power from the Government at one-fifth of a cent per kilowatt, it is selling it to the people of Alabama at a maximum price, I am informed, of 12½ cents per kilowatt. The profit that the Alabama Power Co. is making, therefore, is easy to be seen. I want every corporation to prosper. I want every power company to prosper, but it strikes me, and I believe it will strike you, that the spread between one-fifth of a cent and 12½ cents is a very large spread, about 6,250 per cent. But the power company claims that they sell to some consumers as low as 1 cent a kilowatt. Even if that is true, that is because those large users have potential competition. In other words, they can build a steam plant and generate power for that price. Therefore the Alabama Power Co. has to sell it on a competitive basis; but the small consumer has no such potential competition, and if he does not pay the 10 cents per kilowatt or 12½ cents per kilowatt, as the case may be, his current is turned off.

"I am not going to discuss the Muscle Shoals question any further, and shall now discuss the Tennessee situation.

EAST TENNESSEE SITES

"There are, perhaps, on the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers and their tributaries 1,500,000 horsepower of undeveloped electrical energy. It is, perhaps, that most important natural resource the State has left. Its early and wise development along lines that will mean the greatest good to the greatest number of our citizens is one of the most important and difficult of all our State problems, and I am glad to see that your club is going into the matter thoroughly.

"The first, and, perhaps, the most important power problem is the question of the 11 dam sites on the Tennessee River, and its tributaries, all of which have been applied for by the East Tennessee Development Co. The principal and most desirable of all of these sites is at Cove Creek.

"I believe that five of these sites, including the Cove Creek site, have also been jointly applied for by the Union Carbide Co. of New York and the American Cyanamid Co., the location of which I do not recall. All of these applications are now pending before the Federal Power Commission. They have been pending there for some time without action by that commission.

"With the respect to the Union Carbide Co. bid, I might say that this company is a giant corporation of New York City, manufacturing a very great number of different articles, and using much power. Its associate is a fertilizer company with important connections. Should these two companies get these sites, or the five of them for which they have applied, the use of the power would, no doubt, be limited to the uses of these two companies and their subsidiaries, and I doubt exceedingly if the State or our citizens would be much benefited. These two companies also have an application in for Muscle Shoals, and, if they get the Shoals plant, as well as the pick of the East Tennessee sites, they might establish their principal business in Alabama, and take the Tennessee power down there. Frankly, I don't think much of their bids.

"Of course, I realize the great importance to our State and to all our southern country of cheap fertilizers. I have always contended that after its war uses the first and most meritorious use of the water power at Muscle Shoals was its use for fertilizers. I have not changed my view on that subject, but I do not believe that turning the power over to the fertilizer trust, as represented by the American Cyanamid Co., would have the effect of securing cheaper fertilizer for the farmer. The Government itself must retain and exercise such power as might be necessary for the manufacture of fertilizer until it can be determined whether or not cheaper fertilizers can be manufactured at Muscle Shoals.

"Returning to the east Tennessee developments, some years ago, as I recall, Senator Shields first introduced a bill or an amendment to appropriate $200,000 to be used by the Chief of Engineers in making a survey of the water power in the Tennessee River and its tributaries. In subsequent years other amounts were added until more than half a million was appropriated for these surveys. So great was my interest that as a member of the Appropriations Committee I gave them my unremitting support. Under the direction thus obtained from Congress, the Chief of Engineers was to make his report to Congress. More than a year ago it seems that he made a partial report through Maj. Harold Fiske, not to the Congress at all, but to the water-power companies, who were at the time seeking this power at the hands of the Federal Power Commission; but so far as I know, and I have inquired many times, no report has ever been made to the Congress. In the report of the Chief of Engineers it is said that a partial report was made, perhaps, several times; but my personal attempts to get such reports were always met by the statement that no reports had been made. Apparently the Engineering Department at that time seemed to think that they were representing the power companies and not the Government, and that all the information thus obtained was to go to the power companies. After his report to the power companies, and after these companies had made application for these sites, hearings were held in Chattanooga by Major Fiske and he recommended, and afterwards the Chief of Engineers joined in that recommendation, that all of the 11 sites be given by the Federal Power Commission to the East Tennessee Development Co., which company was organized to represent the combined water-power companies commonly known as the Associated Water Power Cos. There the matter remains.

SUGGESTIONS TO ENGINEERS

"The vice president and engineer of this company, Mr. M. O. Leighton, of Washington, D. C., a very accomplished and delightful gentleman, came to see me and asked me to urge the early granting of the permits, and after going into the matter at some length I made the following suggestions to him:

"1. That the preliminary permit period of three years be reduced by agreement, and placed in the temporary license from three years to one year. My view was that, inasmuch as the Government had spent this more than one-half million dollars in making these surveys without any expense to the power companies, three years was too long for a temporary permit.

"2. That the period for building all the plants be reduced from 23 years, as suggested by Major Fiske, to a period of 7 years, and the agreement placed in the permanent license.

"3. That his company agree in advance for the Comptroller General of the United States to be authorized, in connection with the State commission, to examine the company's books from time to time, in order to see that the company was not making more than a reasonable return, and especially to see that stock and bond issues were properly limited to moneys actually put into the venture, or to earnings actually put back into the business, and that this agreement be put in the permanent license.

"4. That the company should also agree in advance and put in the license that a maximum rate of not more than 5 cents a kilowatt should be charged, and that within this limit the State utilities commission should regulate the rates to be charged by the company.

"5. That it be agreed in advance and put in the license that transmission lines be built from the several plants to all three of the great divisions of Tennessee to the end that it could be practically guaranteed that this power should be used within the State of Tennessee, and not carried, except in certain emergencies and in case of a surplus, to other States.

REASONS FOR SUGGESTIONS

"My reason for presenting these suggestions was in the public interest, which I conceive it always my duty as a Senator to attempt to protect. Manifestly, when so many in my State want these developments made immediately, and especially in view of the propaganda going out from the company that all of these plants would be built immediately if the permits were immediately granted, I could not consent when my advice was asked to agree to tying up all 11 of the plants for three years just to see whether the company wanted them or not, nor could I consent to tying up some of the plants for this company for 23 years more, the period recommended by Major Fiske for the completion of all.

"In a personal interview Mr. Leighton very readily consented to the reduction of the time to one year for the temporary permit and to a period of eight years within which all were to be completed. I did not consider the difference between seven and eight years very material, so there would have been little trouble, in my judgment, about agreeing upon my first two suggestions.

"As to the third suggestion, the supervision in conjunction with the State commission of the books and accounts by the Comptroller General of the United States, Mr. Leighton would not agree at all. He claimed the power act governed this, and he would make no agreement outside the act. The law allows public utilities a reasonable return, but when such utilities are allowed to issue stocks and bonds, virtually without limit, in this particular the Federal water power act falls far short of protecting the public interests. In this manner a grasping company might oftentimes be thus aided powerfully in taxing the people in rates far greater than enough to make reasonable returns. Of course, this question was of vital importance, because in the granting of such vast resources, in value even in their undeveloped state of, perhaps, $50,000,000, every safeguard should be thrown about the issuance of stocks and bonds and the basis upon which reasonable returns shall be earned.

"Nor would Mr. Leighton agree to the fourth suggeston of 5 cents as the maximum rates, nor, as I understand him, to any fixed maximum. He did not even suggest a maximum to which he would agree. He stated the water power act put the regulation of rates in the hands of the State utilities commission primarily and he would agree to nothing else.

THE SMALL CONSUMER

"As I understand it, the small consumer in the several large cities in Tennessee is paying on the average of 10 cents a kilowatt, their maximum rate, and in the smaller towns, I am advised, that the price is sometimes 12½ cents, maximum. These prices are extortionate. The prices at which current is sold to large consumers by these companies are, perhaps, not greatly out of line. The large consumer has the protection of a potential competition. In other words, should the distributing company charge the large consumers too much, the large consumed can always establish his own individual plant and manufacture his current at a reasonable cost. The small consumer, however, has no such protection. When the rates charged him are tremendously high he has no protection against them. He must pay them or his current will be cut off, and of course, he is not in a position to establish a plant of his own. Under these circumstances I felt it my duty, when asked for help in getting the permits allowed to aid in helping the small consumer, to ask in return a reasonable price, so my suggestion was a maximum rate to the small consumer of 5 cents. My reason for making this suggestion was not arbitrary. If that is not fair, another maximum should have been offered.

"I had looked into prices and conditions in many cities and States. In Los Angeles, where they have a State plant in competition with the old company, they have a maximum rate of 5½ cents; in Portland they have a maximum rate of 5 cents; in Seattle the maximum rate is 5 cents, and in many other cities the maximum rate is 5 cents. In Cleveland, Ohio, where they have a city-owned steam plant, my recollection is the price is 3 cents.

"To illustrate what I am trying to convey to you, I saw in Washington some time ago two electric-light bills, one a Washington, D. C., bill, where there is a private company, and the other a Hamilton, Ontario, bill, where they have a public company. Both of these bills were for exactly the same amount of current. The Washington, D. C., bill was $33.33; the Hamilton bill, where they had the State-developed current, was $3.33. The Washington, D. C., bill, as I recall, was ten times as great as the Hamilton, Ontario, bill. Again, the Government sells to the Alabama Power Co. its current at Muscle Shoals for 2 mills—in other words, one-fifth of a cent. The Alabama Power Co. has been getting this current from the Government at this figure since the water was turned on down there; and yet the Alabama Power Co. has not lowered its rate to the small consumer one particle. All this current that is costing the Alabama Power Co. one-fifth of a cent, that same current is being sold to the consumer at a maximum of 12½ cents. I am inclined to think that most people will agree that this is more than a reasonable profit, and yet, that is precisely what will happen if the power companies develop this enormous resource in east Tennessee without proper safeguards. The current will cost the company not exceeding one-fifth of a cent and they will be privileged to resell it to the small consumer at a maximum price of 12½ cents, because we all know that unless an agreement is made in advance, the ordinary consumer will get no reduction, just as is illustrated in the Alabama Power Co. case.

VALUABLE SITES

"With knowledge of these facts, I am wondering if the people of Tennessee will blame me for saying a good word for the small consumer of the current? And especially, when I was asked to recommend that the 11 sites, belonging to all the people of my beloved State, and worth in their natural condition, as estimated by Mr. Ford, perhaps $50,000,000 be delivered over to one company to be developed by that company virtually at will, because many of us will be gone when 26 years have passed away. If I am wrong in thus endeavoring to protect the public interests, I would like to know it. Surely, I have nothing against this company, many of its agents and attorneys and representatives are among my very best friends in the State. One of these companies is in my home city. Its officers and agents are splendid men. I would rather help them than hurt them. I would do these friends any favor in the world that I could conscientiously do them. Anyway, I would far rather do a man a favor than to do him an injury, but who will say in the light of these facts that my suggestions in all of these matters were unreasonable? Think it over calmly, my fellow citizens. I am your agent and representative in Washington. What position would you have me take in reference to these matters, and especially in the vital matter of a maximum rate for the small consumer?

"My fifth suggestion should have been agreed to, but it was not. Surely no Tennesseean would want this, their power, developed and then transmitted out of their own State, would you? Would any man in Tennessee say that they thought this power ought to be developed and sent to other States, if it was in the interest of this company to send it to other States? Do you think the permit should be granted without some safeguard protecting the interest of our own State? Now, the company says it will not send this power outside of the State, then if it is not going to do it anyway, why not put it into the contract? As is well known, the people in west Tennessee have no water power. Surely some provision of this kind should go into a contract and some guarantee should be had that this God-given, people-owned power should first be used in the various parts of our State before it is transmitted out of the State. Of course, the surplus should be used in other States if needed.

"I am not enamoured of public ownership of public utilities. It has its disadvantages. Under proper and effective regulations and under contractual relations, it would be better to have private ownership of public utilities; but when I see that because of conflict between State and National jurisdictions there is to be no substantial regulations; when the company asking for this almost priceless public property, belonging to all of the people of my State, refusing any diminution of price to the small consumer; refuses to permit its stock and bond issues and its earnings and outlays to be supervised by a just, honest, and fair governmental agency; refuses to use Tennessee power on Tennessee soil, I am not only constrained to go slow on agreeing to its requests, but am also constrained to believe that it may be better for Tennessee to develop these resources herself, to the end that they, owned now by the people, may be used by the greatest number of our people.

"And the East Tennessee Development Co., being backed by all of the other companies, is, of course, amply able to make the developments and is very desirous of making them under the Federal power act. Under the terms of that act the Federal Power Commission may grant a three-year temporary permit or option upon all these sites to this concern. During this period of three years this one company would have all 11 sites tied up, and at the end of this three-year period could accept or refuse any or all of the sites under the law. If it accepted them, Major Fiske told me that they would probably be given 23 years more in which to develop all of the plants. In other words, they would simply be permitted within such period of 26 years to develop these plants as and when they desired to develop them. I am frank to say to the people of Tennessee that the tying up of all 11 of these great plants did not appeal to me, and when a representative of the company called to get me to urge the commission to give them the permits I very frankly stated my views to this representative."

STATE CORPORATION

"If the State organized a corporation and authorized it to issue bonds and proceed to develop this power on the Tennessee and its tributaries and on the Cumberland and its tributaries, in my judgment, if properly and honestly managed, it could sell the current thus generated at a maximum not exceeding 5 cents per kilowatt, pay its cost of building the dam, and probably earn enough perhaps to pay all of the expenses of the State government, thus doing away with State taxation. I suggest that you, gentlemen of the committee, think carefully over these suggestions and examine the question somewhat carefully and painstakingly. In this connection I desire to urge the great body of our citizens to begin a careful study of the problem involved in these water-power properties and to acquaint themselves so thoroughly with the details of this most important subject, so that they will be able to aid both State and National Governments in their solution of the questions. Only licenses and contracts which fully protect the public interest should be granted or entered into.

"It has been said that I am standing in the way of the early development of these plants. Quite to the contrary, I am sure that the foregoing facts conclusively prove that such is not the fact. Indeed, so anxious was I to have the power developed at the earliest possible moment that I offered an amendment to the last deficiency appropriation bill, which was unhappily lost in the last Republican filibuster in the Senate, providing that the Chief of Engineers should use $200,000 to make the borings at Cove Creek, with the further proviso that should this site be granted to a private company by the Federal Power Commission, such company should repay to the Government the cost of these borings. These borings have to be made as the initial step, and it seems to me that while the Federal Power Commission is deciding what it is going to do with this power, that the borings could be made, and I am inclined to believe that if the deficiency appropriation bill had passed it would have contained such a provision.

CUMBERLAND RIVER SITES

"As to the sites on the Cumberland and its tributaries, I have been told that Samuel Insull, the Chicago utility magnate, of senatorship-buying and utility commissionership-owning fame, has applied directly or indirectly through subsidiary companies for these Cumberland River sites. If this is true, his application should be denied. We do not want Mr. Insull in Tennessee. If Illinois likes him and his methods, it should keep him. There are men in Tennessee who do not like him and his methods, and I am one of them. The Federal Power Commission should not force him upon us. A recommendation was included in a recent report of the Chief of Engineers that the Government go into partnership with some water-power pirate—presumably Insull's company—and build these dams on the Cumberland River and then turn these plants over to the promoter. The Congress did not agree to the recommendation. It was a scheme worthy of Insull. As a piece of consummate nerve on the part of the promoter and upon the Government engineer the proposal was hard to beat. Think of it! The Government to go into partnership with some water-power pirate—presumably Insull's company—and build these same on the Cumberland River and then turn these plants over to the promoter. The Congress did not agree to the recommendations. It was a scheme worthy of Insull. As a piece of consummate nerve on the part of the promoter and upon the Government engineer the proposal was hard to beat. Think of it! The Government to build the power dams in part and then turn them over to the promoter! Such proposals as this should make us very carefully watch all proposals for developing our great power resources.

NONNAVIGABLE STREAMS

"The Federal water power act does not give the Federal Government power and jurisdiction over nonnavigable streams and streams which can not be made navigable. Congress never attempted to do such a thing in the law that was passed. If it had attempted to do it such grant of power would have, of course, been unconstitutional. Its only authority is to regulate commerce, and as nonnavigable streams have nothing to do with commerce it is perfectly plain to anyone that the Federal Water Power Commission can not have jurisdiction over nonnavigable streams. Yet, remarkable to say, ever since the passage of the Federal water power act the Federal Power Commission, wholly without authority, has claimed and exercised jurisdiction over all nonnavigable streams. It has no such power. It was never intended to give the commission any such power, and any licenses so granted are, in my judgment, both null and void. In view, however, of the claim of the commission and in order to settle the question thus raised by the commission, Congressman FINIS J. GARRETT in the House and I in the Senate have both introduced bills to amend the act by specifically excluding nonnavigable streams from the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission. As I stated before, any licenses granted by the Federal Power Commission for power sites on such nonnavigable streams are wholly null and void. Only the State has jurisdiction over such streams and such sites. This is an important question in Tennessee because there are many such streams in our State, and I am informed that the horsepower which might be developed on these nonnavigable streams will run into the hundreds of thousands of horsepower. Confusion has arisen between rival applicants in east Tennessee as to some of these sites, and the Water Power Commission has not yet acted with reference to it. I have been charged with having held up action of the commission. Of course, this charge is fallacious. I have no doubt in my own mind that the reason the Federal Power Commission has not acted is because they know that any action on their part in granting licenses in such cases would be null and void, and I do not believe that the commission itself is willing to take the responsibility of making a test case. Where the cases are uncontested they act, but where there is a contest they do not act.

CONCLUSION

"These, my friends, are my views on the water-power situation. I have no earthly interest in the matter except to do the right thing. I have no friends to reward, nor enemies to punish. I have but one desire, and that is, that this power matter be used for the benefit of the people of Tennessee. This power ought to be developed—it ought to be developed at the earliest possible moment. I will do everything humanly possible to get it developed at the earliest possible moment, provided only that when developed, it will be in the interest of the people of my beloved State and not solely and alone in the interest of those who develop it. I say again, that I want those who develop it, if it is developed by a private company, to make not only a reasonable profit, but an ample profit out of it. But I would be untrue to the people I represent in part, if I gave my sanction for any private concern to take over those enormous properties belonging to the people of all the State, without restriction as to price to be charged on the current to be sold, without restriction as to the limitation of bond, and with no restriction against the power being taken out of the State of Tennessee. In this particular, it is very different from the Muscle Shoals proposition. There, the plant was developed with the money of all the people. The State did not develop it. If Alabama had developed it, it should be used all of it in Alabama, and so, if the State of Tennessee, itself, or any corporation authorized by the State of Tennessee, develops this power, it should be used permanently in the State of Tennessee.

"It is a great misfortune that the rights of the State have not been judicially determined, and this should be done as soon as possible."

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to give notice to the Senate that on to-morrow the report of the special committee will be filed on what we call the Smith case from Illinois. I understand from the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] that Mr. SMITH will not desire to be heard in person, but that the Senator from Illinois himself will present his own views and observations in favor of the seating of Mr. SMITH. As to whether any others desire to be heard on that side of the case, of course, I am not advised.

I do not know whether any person will speak in support of the committee. There may be a number who desire to do so, but so far as I am concerned I shall not desire to take more than 10 or 15 minutes. The Senator from Illinois tells me that his remarks will be short also. I thought that I ought to make this statement in order that the Senate might be advised of the situation and its business regulated accordingly.

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, I desire to supplement the statement of the Senator from Missouri by saying that on this side there will be only one other short speech on the subject, so far as I have been able to learn.

EIGHTH PROHIBITION ANNIVERSARY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, nation-wide prohibition on this, the eighth anniversary of the ratification of the eighteenth amendment by the thirty-sixth State, is stronger in the United States than ever before.

Let us examine briefly certain phases of our history since nation-wide prohibition was adopted.

An important criterion by which to judge prohibition may be found in the economic status of the Nation. From this viewpoint, as well as many others, prohibition has justified itself. Our standards of living have reached the highest peak in history. The productivity of American industry is the greatest ever known. It has been well said that prohibition is putting more money in the American family pocketbook than it ever had before.

Mr. President, it is well known that blue Mondays, due to Saturday and Sunday dissipation in the days before prohibition, have virtually vanished from American industry; that the afternoon drag in production caused by noontime beer in the wet era is a thing of the past. The workers of the Nation, as a result of prohibition, possess clearer minds, steadier nerves, and sounder muscles.

Roger Babson, one of the foremost economic experts in this Nation, received so many inquiries as to the effect of prohibition that recently he sent out a questionnaire to a large number of employers representing many thousand workers. It was stated in 75 per cent of the replies that the economic results of prohibition had been beneficial both to the companies from their standpoint and to the employees from their standpoint—that prohibition had caused a general increase in production efficiency, accompanied by an increased production per hour per man; that less absenteeism, tardiness, loafing on the job, fewer industrial accidents, increased earnings, more continuous employment, a general improvement in living conditions had been noted as accompaniments of prohibition.

Henry Ford tells us that in his vast workshops there were before prohibition in each group of 5,000 men about 100 who gave trouble because of indulgence in liquor, that after prohibition the number in each group of 5,000 giving trouble on account of drink was less than 10. He says that before prohibition it was necessary to investigate absences from work to ascertain whether the men had been or were drunk or whether good reasons existed for laying off; that in a large proportion of such cases drink was found to be the cause; that after prohibition such investigation had become unnecessary, because it had been learned from observation that liquor was no longer the trouble; that as a result of prohibition the men in his factories were working more, working better, wasting less and saving more; that now when a man's pay is raised the increase goes to the wife or to a savings account instead of the saloon keeper.

It should be said to Mr. Ford's eternal credit that when a bootlegger begins operation near his plants he never rests until the bootlegger is apprehended, removed, and punished. He says that in this work he gets the cooperation of local, State, and Federal authorities.

Mr. Ford has announced his opposition to the repeal or modification of the Volstead Act.

Mr. R. H. Scott, another prominent auto manufacturer, president of the Reo Motor Co., states that during the days before prohibition his company made a very careful check of lost time by employees following pay day; that the larger number failed to report for work the first day following pay day, a less number the second, still less the third, while practically all came back on the fourth; that this meant a serious financial loss to the employees as well as the company, machines standing idle while employees were away; that since prohibition there has been no difference between the day after pay day and the day before; that the company is no longer troubled with absences due to drink.

Irving Fisher, the noted Yale economist, states that with the coming of prohibition wages suddenly rose from their old level, which they had kept without much change for a quarter of a century, to a new level where it is now a third higher than the old. He says that statistics of various types of personal savings such as the assets of building and loan associations and life insurance companies show a substantially greater rate of growth during the period from 1920 to 1925, the first five years of prohibition, than the period from 1915 to 1920, and that this increased rate is particularly marked if those assets are expressed in terms of purchasing power—that is, in 1915 dollars.

With the transfer of the billions expended for beverage alcohol to channels of useful commerce, a transfer made possible in 1920, the year of the advent of nation-wide prohibition, there began among the American people an expansion of personal credit and of commodity consumption unequaled in any other age or by any other people.

That expansion has been marked by a growth in savings, in life insurance, in the possession of facilities and comforts so astounding as to constitute the economic miracle of the ages.

But for certain political handicaps the human imagination would be powerless to measure what more the country might have accomplished since 1920.

In 1920 about 2,200,000 auto cars and trucks were sold in the United States, with a wholesale value of about $2,200,000,000.

In 1926 we produced about 4,400,000 cars and trucks, with a wholesale value of about $3,100,000,000.

In this period the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce tells us that the number of employees in affiliated branches of the automobile industry increased from about a million five hundred thousand to nearly three and a half millions.

In 1920 deposits in savings banks were about $15,300,000,000, the number of savings-bank depositors nearly twenty-two and a half millions.

In 1926 these savings deposits had grown to more than twenty-four and a half billions, the number of savings-bank depositors to more than forty-six and a half millions.

The assets of the life insurance companies grew from about seven billion three hundred million in 1920 to eleven and a half billions in 1925.

In 1920 we had 8,525 building and loan associations for the encouragement of home building, with about 5,000,000 members, and assets of a little more than two and a half billions.

In 1926 we had 12,403 building and loan associations, with nearly 10,000,000 members and assets of a little more than five and a half billions.

They tell us that the young men and women of the country are drinking generally. Of course, such statements violently misrepresent almost the entire body of the young manhood and womanhood of prohibition America, a manhood and womanhood pure, clean, wholesome, and strong. A member of the faculty of a Pennsylvania institution of learning testified before a committee of the Senate last year that drinking was rife among the students. A committee of these students met him at the train on his return, conducted him to a hall, where the student body had gathered to take him to task, and there he publicly retracted his unfounded statements about student drinking. A national periodical, well known in every part of the country, recently canvassed hundreds of colleges and universities, sending questionnaires to student leaders and faculty members in regard to the prevalence of drinking among students. Its compilation of the replies showed that they were practically unanimous to the effect that there was less drinking among students to-day than before prohibition and that drinking was no longer a general college problem. Practically the only college men assailed for drinking were the alumni of the pre-prohibition era, who attended college functions with bottles of liquor in their pockets or in their cars.

America is a Christian Nation, and one of its most gratifying characteristics is the fact that millions on millions of its young people are affiliated with Christian societies of both national and international scope. The thirty-first international convention of the Christian Endeavor Society recently met at Cleveland. It adopted resolutions stating, in substance, that the Christian Endeavor Society, representing 4,000,000 young people, with an annual growth of tens of thousands, placed itself on record as favoring the strict enforcement of all law and as especially in favor of the maintenance and support of the Constitution, including the eighteenth amendment; that its members resented the attitude of older people in attempting to foist upon the younger generation responsibility for the violation of the prohibition laws; that the unchallenged records of many of our educational institutions showed steady diminution in the amount of drinking on the campus and that, although a selfish and noisy minority still persisted in violating the law of the land as well as their own best interests, the overwhelming proportion of the student body is not engaged in lawbreaking; that the convention called upon the alumni of our various colleges and universities to rise above the practices in which too many of them have engaged in bringing back to the campus the outworn and now illegal habits of the past generation; that the members of the Christian Endeavor Society not alone avowed themselves in hearty sympathy with the eighteenth amendment because it is law, but because they believed it the best law yet framed. Add to the great army of Christian Endeavor the other great Christian bodies of young people in prohibition America and you will not find many left to wear the hip-pocket costume, to make a market for the criminal and outlawed callings of the rum pirate and the bootlegger.

Prohibition United States is the richest country in the world. The total income of its people amounted in 1926 to ninety billions, a sum never before equaled in this or any other land.

With but little more than 5 per cent of the world's population prohibition United States produces 43 per cent of the world's coal and consumes 42 per cent; it produces 54 per cent of the world's iron and consumes 53 per cent; it produces 64 per cent of the world's steel and consumes 57 per cent; it produces 49 per cent of the world's copper and consumes 44 per cent; it produces 64 per cent of the world's petroleum and consumes 72 per cent; it produces 69 per cent of the world's cotton and consumes 37 per cent; it produces 52 per cent of the world's timber and consumes 51 per cent; it produces 41 per cent of the world's shoes and consumes 39 per cent; it produces 43 per cent of the world's print paper and consumes 50 per cent; it produces 90 per cent of the world's automobiles and consumes 80 per cent.

Prohibition United States has five-eighths of the bank deposits of the world—or $52,000,000,000 out of $84,000,000,000.

Prohibition United States has 61 per cent of the telephones of the world—nearly 17,000,000—over which 50,000 calls per minute are handled every 24 hours.

Prohibition United States has 62 per cent of the world's radio broadcasting stations.

Prohibition United States produces no raw rubber, but consumes nearly three-fourths of the world's output. It produces no natural raw silk, but consumes 72 per cent of the earth's production.

Naturally prohibition United States leads the world in the use of water power, its plants for this purpose nearly equaling those of all of Europe.

Prohibition United States has the largest per capita wealth of all the countries of the world.

Prohibition United States has a national wealth of three hundred and twenty billions, more than half of the wealth of all the remainder of the earth, and two hundred billions in excess of the next wealthiest country, Great Britain, whose wealth is rated at one hundred and twenty billions.

The number of students attending all kinds of schools in the world outside the United States is roughly estimated, according to the United States Commissioner of Education, to be about 104,500,000. In prohibition United States we have nearly 28,000,000 in school—a number equivalent to more than a fourth of that of the rest of the world combined. According to the same authority, there are between 900,000 and 950,000 students in colleges and universities outside of the United States. In prohibition United States we have about 910,000, or almost as many as in all other countries of the earth put together.

I do not contend that prohibition is the sole cause of all this progress. The wets, however, have painted such woeful pictures of a land debauched and a people wrecked by prohibition that it is but just and fair to put into the foreground to-day the real United States, the United States of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act.

Clearly the United States under prohibition is making the greatest economic progress in its own annals or in the annals of the world.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, all of us who are acquainted with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], for whom, in many respects, I entertain the very highest regard, know that he has the same unquestioning faith in the efficacy of prohibition that a very young, unsophisticated child has in the omnipotence of his father. This is not the time nor the place to enter into any extended refutation of the statements that have just been made by him. The answer to all of them, so far as they bear upon the industrial situation, is that the condition of prosperity which he portrayed in such vivid colors can not be due to prohibition, because there is no such thing as prohibition. That is my answer.

Year by year the Moderation League of New York, an association whose directorate is composed of men of the highest standing, such as Elihu Root, Bishop Fiske, and others whose names I might mention, has collected statistics from the chiefs of police of some 500 cities and towns in the United States as to arrests for drunkenness, and year by year the reports of the league have shown that arrests for drunkenness in those cities and towns have steadily mounted.

The same condition was shown to exist by the reports obtained by me in 1926 from the chiefs of police of 36 of the leading cities of this country—North, South, East, and West—and brought by me to the attention of the Senate. Those reports, too, demonstrate that ever since the first year after the enactment of the Volstead Act arrests for drunkenness in those cities have been increasing.

It was only yesterday—and this is but one out of hundreds of items of similar evidence that I could bring forward—there was placed in my hands a statement showing that in the city of Charleston, S. C., last year, one-third of all the arrests of every kind in that city were for drunkenness. Almost every year since I have been a Member of this body I have been at pains to ask the chief of police of the city of Washington for the figures covering arrests for drunkenness in Washington, and just as I have obtained them I have read them to the Senate. The tabulation of these figures proves that beginning with 6,375 arrests in 1921, arrests for drunkenness in Washington increased until they totaled 13,588 in 1927.

In the great city in which I live, the city of Baltimore, last year there were more deaths from acute alcoholism than in 1926; and the reports of the New York State Hospital Commission authorities, which I have brought to the attention of this body, show that in the State of New York alcoholic insanity has trebled during the existence of national prohibition.

That being so—and, of course, my figures can not be gainsaid, because they are figures that have been derived from chiefs of police throughout the country and the Hospital Commission of the State of New York—how can any favorable industrial results of any sort be fairly attributable to prohibition? We can not have at once increasing drunkenness and the increasing material prosperity which attends diminishing drunkenness. Everyone knows that the extraordinary prosperity that this country has enjoyed since the enactment of the Volstead Act, with a brief interval of depression in 1921, has not been referable in any respect to prohibition, but to economic causes of a general nature with which prohibition has no connection.

When the end of the World War came there was a tremendous industrial slack to be caught up in the United States. It would have been well for the farmer if there had been an agricultural slack, too, for him to catch up; but there was none. Domestic industrial work of all sorts, constructive and otherwise, was laid aside during the World War, because the industrial demands of the war itself absorbed all our industrial energy. The consequence was that when the war was over there was, as I have said, an enormous industrial slack to be made good; and the industrial establishments of this land have ever since been making that slack good. Now, it has almost been made good; and that is the explanation of the growing unemployment that is springing up throughout the country and is likely to become still more pronounced.

In other words, our savings-banks deposits have been swollen, industry in every form has been active, the country has been uncommonly prosperous, simply because there were economic forces at work entirely independent of prohibition. If this is not so, why, I ask the Senator from Texas, is it that in Canada—where prohibition does not prevail, except in several small Provinces—there has been a similar era of general industrial prosperity? There is no prohibition in Vancouver; there is no prohibition in Saskatchewan; there is no prohibition in Manitoba; there is no prohibition in Alberta; there is no prohibition in Ontario; there is no prohibition in Quebec; there is no prohibition in New Brunswick. All of those Provinces have had the good sense to repeal their prohibitory legislation; and yet such has been the remarkable industrial prosperity of the Dominion of Canada that at times the Canadian dollar has actually been at a premium over the American dollar.

Was that prosperity due to prohibition? Manifestly, it could not be; and if prohibition is such a beneficent thing in an economic sense, why was it that in 1921, when prohibition prevailed in this country, we found ourselves on the very eve of a fearful panic? Prohibition had nothing to do with that panic, and it had nothing to do with the revival of industry which followed it.

In some respects I do not doubt that there is not as much drinking of hard liquor among the industrial workers in this country as there was formerly. A man in an industrial establishment can no longer, as he could formerly, at lunch time walk right across the street and get a drink.

Drink can not be obtained quite so conveniently, quite so readily, as formerly by a worker engaged in his tasks from the time he takes up his work in the morning until the time he lays it down at night. But when I came to inquire into the real significance of that by questioning employers of labor in the city of Baltimore, I found that while workers were not drinking so much at saloons as in the past, they were far more than in the past fermenting and brewing in their own homes.

In other words, an industrial worker who formerly went to the corner saloon and got his drink now makes it to no small extent in his own house; and it is gratifying to say that in consequence now, to a far greater degree than before, instead of drinking distilled liquor, he is drinking fermented wine and home-brew, which is just the beneficient change that we are seeking to bring about and that was one of the cherished ideals of Thomas Jefferson. One of the things upon which the heart of that great man was set was not prohibition—he was too wise, and had too true a philosophy of life, to subscribe to that—but the substituted use of wine instead of ardent spirits. What he aimed at was the very change that has been brought about in Canada by the operation of the Quebec system of liquor control.

That system went into effect some years ago in the Province of Quebec; and the number of arrests for drunkenness in the city of Montreal, for instance, has been cut down one-half as the result of its working. And it, in my judgment, should be the model for our adoption in this land; and, in addition to diminished drunkenness—I know it because I read the reports of the Quebec liquor commission year by year—the use of wine, beer, and other malt liquors in the Province of Quebec is rapidly displacing the use of ardent spirits.

Under the Quebec system of liquor control, the Government takes over altogether the sale of hard liquor. It is sold from Government warehouses, and Government-regulated dispensaries dispense wine, beer, and other malt liquors. I am glad to be able to say that I have introduced into the Senate at this session a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution which contemplates clothing Congress with the power to establish the Quebec system of liquor control in this country, subject, of course, to any prohibitory provisions in State constitutions and to any prohibitory State laws that may now exist, and subject also to the right of any city or county at any time, with the authority of the State legislature, to submit to the inhabitants of that city or county the question as to whether they will or will not, within the limits of the city or county, have prohibition.

I shall not stop to refute what the Senator has said about drinking by women and youths. We do not have to resort to any books or pamphlets or police statistics on that subject. Anyone who comes into contact with the social world, at least of any large city in the Union, knows that to-day women and young people are drinking to an extent that they have never done before in the history of this country.

Why, only two or three years ago Bishop Nicholson, the president of the Anti-Saloon League, said in a public address in this city—that all must admit that women are drinking more than in the past.

Mind you, that was the president of the Anti-Saloon League.

Ernest W. Mandeville, a writer in the Outlook, has said, after traversing a large part of the United States:

Women and young boys and girls of social classes, that never took a drink before prohibition, are now indulging in liquors which are a menace both to their morals and their health.

So the Senator from Texas is mistaken. These "benefits" that he supposes to have resulted from prohibition are simply the figments of his own enthusiastic imagination.

I might add that year by year the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.—an insurance company which insures no less than 17,000,000 industrial workers—that is to say, some of the very workers to whom the Senator from Texas referred—has come out in periodical reports showing that deaths from alcohol have been steadily increasing among its industrial policyholders ever since the enactment of the Volstead Act. Mind you, I am not speaking now of the general policyholders of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; I am speaking of its 17,000,000 industrial policyholders. I am speaking, in other words, of the very industrial workers whose sobriety is supposed by the Senator to be so much superior to that of the industrial workers of the pre-Volstead Act era.

Prohibition is a subject that it is hard for me to deal with briefly, because, if I can not speak fluently upon any other subject, I can, to use the expression of the poet, at least speak "with full-throated ease" on that subject.

In conclusion let me say that I think that the most lamentable thing about prohibition is the way in which it is building up in this country a tremendous organized criminal class.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in my judgment was absolutely right when he said the other day in the New York Times that by far the most important question to be considered by the people of the United States at the present time is the question as to whether something can not be done to check the rising flow of crime in this country. Not only does the volume of crime seem to be larger than it ever was before, but its nature seems to be more aggravated, more flagitious, than ever was before. When I was a boy I used to read about those robberies on Hounslow Heath, near London, where bandits would hold up coaches at the point of the pistol and rob their passengers. What is the banditry of that day compared with the banditry of ours, when in great cities like New York and Chicago there seem to be criminals—bloodthirsty, blood-guilty criminals—who think no more of taking human life than a beast of the jungle does of pouncing upon some poor, helpless, innocent deer. The very slightest opposition to the will of one of these bandits leads apparently, without the least faltering, to a shot and death. Frequently they even lock up their victims in bank vaults, to live or die as chance may have it. Only a short time ago the chief of police of Chicago put himself on record as saying that in his judgment the fearful criminality that exists in parts of Illinois were due to the unenforceability of prohibition. I tremble for the future when I think of the powerful, organized, widespread class of criminals that is being built up in this country by the operation of the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment.

I live in a community where prohibition is believed to be detested by the mass of the people. At the same time, nowhere in this country is a more faithful effort made by the Federal judges to enforce the Volstead Act than in that community. Never have I heard a citizen of Baltimore, even the humblest, find any fault with the Federal judges of Baltimore because of the scrupulous fidelity with which they apply that law. Our people are too conservative and law-abiding, they prize too highly the judicial foundations on which all public peace and security rest, lightly to do that, but day by day we have a perpetual file of bootleggers of high and low degree streaming through the corridors of our Federal court in Baltimore, to be fined, to be jailed, or to be imprisoned in the penitentiary, and in many instances to swell the whole number of those who in one form or another prey criminally upon human society.

Does any man suppose that the peace, the integrity, and the purity of this country will not be profoundly prejudiced as time goes on by the great body of more or less artificially created malefactors which the Volstead Act produces? Send a man to jail as a bootlegger once, send him again as a bootlegger, and can you believe that in process of time the transition will not be easy for that man, from bootlegging to larceny, to highway robbery, to murder? In other words, this one law, the Volstead Act, has created in the very bosom of American society such a reckless, such a lawless body of men as no other agency has ever before created on such a lavish scale in the history of the country.

Does the Senator know that in the portion of the country which he supposes to be the driest there are more stills seized and destroyed than in any other part of the land? Is he aware of the fact that in 1925, 70 per cent of all the illicit plants and agencies that were seized by prohibition agents were seized in the 11 Confederate States of the United States of America? Is he aware of the fact that more of these lawless plants and agencies were seized in the State of Georgia than in any other State of the Union?

The Senator has wandered far afield. He has gone off into the realm of glowing fancies instead of confining himself to drab commonplace facts.

Now, for the first time we have an opportunity really to do away with, or at least modify, the conditions which are responsible for so much general disrespect for law, for so much political corruption, for so much bloodshed. Everything indicates that at least one of the two great national parties of our country will at its next national convention nominate a man pledged, at any rate by his personal convictions, to a modification of the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment.

I see that the Senator from Kansas is growing impatient, but I will have to ask him to let me complete what I am saying before he requests an adjournment, because I have but little more to say.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to have an executive session, and I understand the Senator from New Jersey wants a moment. I hope the Senator will make his remarks as short as he can, as it is getting late.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator from New Jersey seems so anxious to get the floor that I think I will have to yield to him, though I did want to say something about the recent examination in which 75 per cent of the present prohibition agents whom I voted to keep outside of the civil service law have just flunked. But I will take that subject up later, should the Senator from Texas make it necessary.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator placed in the RECORD a few days ago "The memorial of a bottle of old Madeira." He opened the discussion in this Congress.

Mr. BRUCE. That was just a little jeu d'esprit.

Mr. SHEPPARD. But it contained the whole philosophy of the Senator's side of the question.

Mr. BRUCE. I think I have reason to congratulate myself upon my ability, even in a little jocose trifle like that, to sum up the whole philosophy of the subject.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator's recent speech against prohibition was placed in the RECORD a day or two ago.

Mr. BRUCE. That was at the University of Virginia.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will permit me, he placed the speech of Governor Ritchie, made at the Jackson Day banquet, in the RECORD just before the Senator from Texas got the floor.

Mr. BRUCE. I know, but that was the most temperate kind of speech.

Mr. HEFLIN. It was dripping wet.

Mr. BRUCE. That was not strong enough to serve my present purpose. I was trying to enter into a bargain with the Senator from Texas that if he would not say anything more on the subject of prohibition I would not say anything more; but I see he is unwilling to enter into such an agreement.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator started the discussion.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I want to make just one more statement in connection with the views of industrial employers with respect to prohibition as brought out by the Senator from Texas.

The Senator will, I am sure, recollect that only a short time ago Mr. Schwab, one of the great industrialists of the United States, and, about the same time, Mr. Gary, of the Steel Co., who is now dead, both expressed the opinion, when speaking primarily as employers of labor, that there should be a referendum throughout the United States on the prohibition question.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, the hour is late and Senators desire to have an executive session, so I will take another time to answer in detail the speech of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

I am very glad to know that at least some Democrats have been responsible for the wonderful prosperity in this country. This is the first time I ever heard we were responsible for it. I thank the Senator for drawing my attention to the fact.

Inasmuch as there was a very fine compilation in the New York Times yesterday morning, designating and tabulating the actual expense of this remarkable prohibition amendment and the Volstead Act, and which I think will be very enlightening to the public, I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACK in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, January 15, 1928]

PROHIBITION COST NATION $177,716,860—EXPENSES UNDER THE VOLSTEAD ACT, NOW 8 YEARS OLD, HAVE STEADILY INCREASED—DRY UNIT SPENT $75,716,860—COAST GUARD EXPENDED AN EQUAL SUM, BESIDES CAPITAL CHARGE OF 25 DESTROYERS—OTHER OUTLAYS RUN HIGH—DRYS ASSERT THAT REVENUE LOSS AND SO ON IS OFFSET BY FINES AND INDUSTRIAL GAINS

(Special to the New York Times)

WASHINGTON, January 14.—National prohibition, with a total cost for enforcement of more than $170,000,000 to the Federal Treasury alone, will round out the eighth year of its existence to-morrow. The Volstead law went into force January 16, 1920.

Starting with appropriations for the Prohibition Unit of $2,200,000 for the first six months, or from January 17 until June 30, 1920, and then with $6,350,000 for the fiscal year 1921, the annual charge has now increased from $30,000,000 to $35,000,000, which covers the outlay in all Federal branches. The duties of enforcement are divided between the Bureau of Prohibition and the Coast Guard, which are branches of the Treasury Department, and the Department of Justice, all of which have expanded proportionately to their appropriations.

Those who have followed this growth are agreed that in States, municipalities and other subdivisions the prohibition law has called for a similar great expansion of local police activities and expenditures. The Prohibition Unit, the Anti-Saloon League, and the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment assert that no one knows what that side of the cost has been. Only a few States issue information separated from the cost of other police functions and court proceedings. In many instances Federal officers have followed their cases into local courts, so that prohibition enforcement as such has been mingled with enforcement of other laws.

OTHER COSTS INCREASE TOTAL

There have been costs of another kind, not actually identified as charges for enforcement. They are results of prohibition, however, such as Federal revenue lost that would have come otherwise from taxes on distilled spirits and fermented liquors; discontinued use of farm products, especially the cereals that went into beverages; expenditures in politics and propaganda; expenditures for illicit beverages, and funds assembled by law violators for rum smuggling, automobiles, and other means for circumventing the Volstead Act.

Against such enforcement expenditures and economic losses, the drys place fines collected and improved man power, industrial power, and general economic productivity, asserting that all such benefits more than offset the money cost; or even the lives of dry agents, suspected violators, and innocent civilians lost in the warfare against demon rum.

Briefly, the financial outlay by the Federal Government for enforcement in eight years was as follows:

Prohibition Unit, actual	$75,716,860
Coast Guard, approximate	70,000,000
Department of Justice, estimated	32,000,000
Total	177,716,860

The figures for the Prohibition Unit are for a little more than eight years, since they cover the actual appropriations to June 30, 1928; those for the Coast Guard can not be fixed to the last dollar because that branch of the Government performs other than prohibition duties; those for the Department of Justice are the very minimum estimate of the extent to which legal cases have had to do with enforcing cases arising under the Volstead Act.

PROHIBITION UNIT'S RECORD

Appropriations for the Prohibition Unit have been:

1920 (Jan. 17 to June 30)	$2,200,000
1921 (fiscal year)	7,100,000
1922 (fiscal year)	7,500,000
1923 (fiscal year)	9,250,000
1924 (fiscal year)	9,000,000
1925 (fiscal year)	11,341,770
1926 (fiscal year)	11,000,000
1927 (fiscal year)	13,322,445

The Coast Guard had $13,000,000 for reconditioning destroyers and patrol boats and $5,000,000 for additional boats, or a total of $18,000,000 at the outset to equip it to start its warfare in 1924 against rum row, which the service recently asserted had been abolished, except in spasmodic instances.

In the fiscal year 1925, the Coast Guard received $8,000,000 in appropriations for operating expenses. This sum each year since has averaged $12,000,000. To the end of the fiscal year 1928, this gives a total of $44,000,000 for its share of prohibition enforcement. These have been the minimum sums estimated for the Coast Guard. It is believed that the total cost to that branch may have gone as high as $80,000,000.

Not included in the Coast Guard total is the capital charge for 25 destroyers, which has been estimated as $1,500,000 each, or $37,500,000, which would bring the total Federal enforcement outlay close to $215,000,000.

COST TO DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The difficulty of segregating the money required by the Department of Justice for prohibition cases has been suggested. When the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee investigated prohibition enforcement, Representative VARE, of Pennsylvania, now Senator elect, inserted a note in his testimony which stated that Department of Justice officials estimated approximately one-third of the total funds appropriated for the department and the courts was for that work. Out of total appropriations each year in 1925 and 1926 of $24,000,000 this would be $8,000,000 a year. Figuring an average of $4,000,000 a year as the share of the department over the eight-year period gives the roughly estimated total of $32,000,000.

The only definite figures of cost available as to the States themselves are but illustrative. These are furnished in partial reports obtained by the Anti-Saloon League.

Wisconsin has expended for enforcement $60,000 a year since 1922, or $360,000. Fines collected in that State are put at $2,048,563.

Ohio, in 1926, appropriated $105,702, and it is believed the amounts since then would bring the total to well over $200,000. Dry leaders point to fines and penalties of $2,202,764 collected there as a result of the activities in 1926 and 1927.

California is believed to have spent for enforcement close to $1,000,000 since prohibition was started, with receipts from fines, etc., of about $2,000,000.

Most of the other States attempting to enforce the law have had their costs all lumped with general police charges.

FINES IN FEDERAL COURTS

Against the appropriations for Federal enforcement by the Prohibition Unit, officials place the fines and penalties collected through Federal courts as aggregating $38,390,889.36 to June 30, 1927, as follows:

1920	$1,148,512.04
1921	4,570,505.00
1922	4,355,892.14
1923	5,095,300.23
1924	6,538,115.24
1925	5,873,226.45
1926	5,647,328.53
1927	5,162,009.73

The drys point further to estimates of such economists as Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale, and Roger Babson for benefits financially to the United States from prohibition.

They point to the following passage in Professor Fisher's statement before the Senate subcommittee in 1926:

"Personally, I am inclined to believe that prohibition has saved and added much more than the $6,000,000,000 that I have estimated as a safe minimum."

Professor Fisher quoted Herbert Hoover as confirming his conclusions, Mr. Hoover having stated in a speech to the United States Chamber of Commerce that since the war productivity had increased about 15 per cent, due to increase in population, while efficiency had increased from 10 to 15 per cent.

"In addition to elimination of waster," Mr. Hoover was quoted as saying, "we have had the benefit of notable advances in science, improvements in methods of management, and prohibition."

LOSS IN REVENUE SUMMED UP

There has been a definite ascertainable loss in revenues from distilled spirits and fermented liquors. These amounted to $483,050,854.47 in 1919 and $443,839,544.98 in 1918, but the drys say they were abnormal years.

In the eight years before 1918 the internal-revenue receipts from these sources were:

1910	$201,008,670.88
1911	211,804,579.55
1912	212,042,339.92
1913	223,314,452.21
1914	226,179,689.76
1915	223,948,646.09
1916	247,453,543.52
1917	284,008,512.62

This was an increase from 1910 to 1917 of more than $80,000,000 in annual receipts. Discounting the two abnormal years of taxes collected and assuming that the eight years from 1920 to 1928 would have seen a like increase in these revenues, the total that might now be expected if prohibition had not come would be close to $350,000,000 or more a year.

The wets assert that the possible taxes would be much greater than this, or at least $1,000,000,000 a year. They contend that if alcoholic-beverage taxes had increased on the same scale as in other countries, especially beers, the total in the United States would be $1,320,000,000 compared with the sum of about $1,800,000,000 collected now from individual and corporation income taxes.

173 PERSONS KILLED IN 7 YEARS

Forty-seven prohibition officers were killed from January 16, 1920, to October 31, 1927, and 126 civilians during the same period.

In contrast to these casualties, the drys pointed to the record which, they think, is now being made in enforcement. The report of Doctor Doran, the Commissioner of Prohibition, for the fiscal year 1927 indicates the rate at which this is proceeding.

"Prohibition agents," he said, "made 64,986 arrests during the year ended June 30, 1927, and seized 7,137 automobiles valued at $3,529,296.70 and 353 boats valued at $316,323. As a result of the work of such agents, 51,945 prohibition cases against individuals were handled in Federal courts and 36,546 persons were convicted, of which number 11,818 were given jail sentences. The courts imposed sentences aggregating 4,477 years and fines amounting to $5,775,225.48."

Prohibition and attempts at enforcement have been attended by prolonged debates in Congress, long hearings before committees, and constant attempts to find loopholes in the Volstead Act. National and State campaigns have been marked by bitter contests. Both dry and wet organizations have spent, and are still spending, millions on their respective sides of the prohibition question.

Prohibition looms also as a possible issue in the coming election campaign, and regardless of what its results may be, the fact stands out boldly that prohibition—eight years after its début—is more in politics than ever.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 5 o'clock p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 17, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 16 (legislative day of January 14), 1928

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Harvey P. Bissell to be collector of customs, district No. 6, headquarters at Bridgeport, Conn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, January 16, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. William A. Lambeth, D. D., pastor of the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church South, offered the following prayer:

Holy Father, permit us to come now into intimate touch with Thee, the ultimate source of all inspiration for human service. Communicate unto us now Thy divine energy. May there come to be a holy passion within us for human service—personal, national, and international. Because we have come into touch with Thee, may there be an increasing yearning in our hearts to serve, in our day and generation, to the limits of our ability and opportunity. Give to us to see the duties of this day with the eyes of to-morrow. These things we pray in the name and, we trust, in the spirit of Thy Son, Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 13, 1928, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2365. An act for the relief of G. W. Rogers.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the constitutional privileges of the House. I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 92

Resolved, That Senate Concurrent Resolution 4 in the opinion of this House contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, and is an infringement of the privileges of this House, and that the said resolution be respectfully returned to the Senate with a message communicating this resolution.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk Senate Concurrent Resolution 4, to be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That for the purpose of interpreting the meaning of the tariff act of 1922, with respect to imported broken rice, "broken rice" shall include only rice which falls within the class "brewers' milled rice" as defined in the United States standards for milled rice as promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this Senate concurrent resolution, if it became a law and had any effect whatever—which, perhaps, may be doubted, as it is merely a resolution and not an amendment, in form, of the tariff law—would have the effect of changing the classification of broken rice, and, consequently, change the tariff rate upon it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is it a joint or concurrent resolution?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is a concurrent resolution. I may have referred to it as a joint resolution, but if I did that was an error.

Mr. RAMSEYER. No; I did not hear whether the gentleman referred to it as a joint resolution or a concurrent resolution, and that is the reason for my question. A joint resolution would have to be signed by the President, while a concurrent resolution would never leave the Capitol. That is the difference, as I understand it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And it does not have to be signed by the President.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, let us concede that, and that makes the adoption of this resolution by the Senate all the more strange.

Mr. BLANTON. Do not our brothers at the other end of the Capitol know that to change a law the President has to sign the resolution, and it would have to be a joint resolution rather than a concurrent resolution?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Apparently not.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. My colleague has been here quite a long time and he ought not to take up the time of the House in asking questions about the methods adopted on the part of the Senate and as to what is necessary to carry into force and effect their ideas. The idea of passing a concurrent resolution to change a law is like the expression of Congress that it ought to be done but will not be done.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If this is not going to have the effect of law, of course, it would not change the revenue act. If it is not a resolution affecting the revenue act, the question that arises in my mind is whether the Senate has undertaken to violate that provision of the constitution requiring that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is not an attempt to change the law but it is an attempt to construe the law. If it were passed and it presented a proper construction of that law, according to the understanding of Congress, then they would go to the Supreme Court on the proposition that Congress had already interpreted it. That is the object of this resolution. It is not to change the law.

Mr. BLANTON. In sending it back to the Senate should we not amend it and provide the Senate with a parliamentarian?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, that does not seem to me to be a question that it is necessary to answer.

Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana. I wish to state that I have introduced a House joint resolution covering the same subject which, I think, will be effective if it is passed and becomes a law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no doubt about that. The gentleman is well versed in parliamentary practice and can do the right thing with reference to form, at least, even though it may be wrong in other directions.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is no need for me to spend much time on this resolution.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The question has been raised as to whether this concurrent resolution would have the effect of law. In Volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, paragraph 3484, on November 24, 1903, in the Senate, the President pro tempore, the distinguished Senator from Maine, Mr. Frye, referring to a question which had arisen as to practice there, said the following:

The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senate to a matter which came up in the Senate yesterday. A concurrent resolution was under consideration and passed. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] asked the Chair if it went to the President and required his signature. The Chair replied, No. The Chair finds this article in the Constitution of the United States:

"Every order, resolution, or vote, to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or, being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill."

Then the distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate said:

Within the experience of the Chair in the Senate no concurrent resolution has ever been sent to the President of the United States, nor has he ever signed one. The Chair has endeavored faithfully to find out how concurrent resolutions escape the provision of the Constitution. He has not been able to succeed.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield for another moment, the Constitution does require that concurrent resolutions shall be signed by the President, but a custom has grown up under which, for some reason, they have not been sent to the President. Anybody might claim that a concurrent resolution should be sent to the President and might try to compel such a resolution being sent to the President for his action.

Mr. BLANTON. But they would fail.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Whether they would fail or not is a different question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to take up very much time with this matter. As the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] has very well said, if this resolution was passed by this House it would be a construction of the law referred to by the two bodies of Congress and it would appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in case the matter was taken up there, as it may even yet be, for a proper construction of the law. If it had any effect whatever it would have the effect desired by the party who introduced it to change the classification of rice, and a change of classification would change the duty and this would change the revenue.

How such a proposition ever got through the Senate is more than I can imagine. I can not understand how that body for a moment could think the House would receive such a resolution.

I do not care to discuss the merits of the question at all. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MARTIN] says he has a proper resolution which will be submitted to the committee. Unless someone else desires time on the matter, I shall move the previous question.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about 15 minutes on the tax question. I can take the time if the gentleman desires on this resolution or I will ask unanimous consent to address the House when this is over.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection to the gentleman having the time, but, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman can yield me 15 minutes now, and I can speak on the tax bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think there will be any objection to the gentleman getting time.

I move the previous question on the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LAW ENFORCEMENT

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure every Member of this House recognizes the prevalence of crime throughout the country, particularly that class of crime involving violence—violence of the most shocking character. This condition is not limited to any particular locality but is existent throughout the entire country.

In this connection and with this condition I wonder how many of us appreciate the enormous burden thrown upon the civilian police and peace officers throughout the country, not only in the protection of life and property but the apprehension of and running to the earth the perpetrators of crime.

In the commission of these crimes of violence the favorite and common weapon used by the criminal is the revolver—pistol. I sincerely hope I may have been of some assistance to the law officers throughout the country in lessening the indiscriminate use of this weapon by the enactment at the last session of this Congress of a bill introduced by me prohibiting transportation through the mails of this class of deadly weapons. The law went into effect July 1 last, and it is now too soon to appreciate the effect.

I know we all appreciate the services of the police of our various States, cities, and counties. With the purpose of stimulating and encouraging this great body of men in the performance of their duty and in recognition of their service, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address delivered by Vice President Dawes at Chicago before the police chiefs of the United States and Canada.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

ADDRESS BY THE HON. CHARLES G. DAWES BEFORE THE POLICE CHIEFS OF UNITED STATES AND CANADA ASSEMBLED AT CHICAGO, JULY, 1926

It is an honor to be called to address this gathering composed of men peculiarly responsible for the preservation of individual and community welfare in this and other countries. People are so habituated to life under police protection that they seldom stop to think what their lives would be without it, and what their individual and collective debt is to the brave men who occupy the front rank in the unending warfare waged for law and order. In the large cities of our country, wherein live the greatest number of our people, if we had no police we would not be safe in going from our homes to our business. Our children could not safely go to and return from their schools. Upon us as individuals would devolve the necessity of the protection of our persons and property; business would be paralyzed and life a daily apprehension for us and our families. The well-to-do portion of our population would be especially harassed. The portions of a city in which they dwell, from being the safest, would become the most dangerous, since their possessions would attract the special attention of the criminal class.

The policeman on the corner protecting individual and property rights is a visible representation of the Constitution of the United States; of the government of the State; of the government of the city, and of law and order. This may not all be theoretically so, but practically it is the fact. He is recognized and hated by the criminal class because this is so. He is one of the most important factors in our daily lives, though in the comparative security in which we live and for which he is chiefly responsible we have forgotten it.

When something happens in the community which annoys us in our daily routine the quick and unjust way in which we often condemn him, unheard, is the unconscious evidence of the general recognition of his indispensability to our welfare and happiness. His is a difficult task. He must be ready at an instant's notice to lay down his life for the protection, often, of his critics. From necessity he must meet the greatest emergencies by himself. When in the emergency of war the protection of government calls for national action the forces of government move, as a rule, in masses. The fight is a collective one. When the soldier faces fire, as a rule, he faces it with his comrades—he moves assisted by the influence of mass psychology. If he weakens, there is an instant penalty for cowardice. The minute he shows cowardice his comrades become his enemies—his life is forfeit.

Far be it from me to disparage the magnificent record of the American soldier. His courage and splendid achievements are justly the pride of the Nation, and reverently each year for all time the American people will spread over his grave the flowers which symbolize a loving memory.

But the policeman, fighting for the same things, generally goes to his conflict as one man, all alone. When he sees a felony being committed by an armed bandit he knows that the performance of his duty means an immediate contest to the death. If he is a coward he can slip away, and in many instances avoid it without personal consequences. If the bandit runs he can fail to properly pursue him. There are a hundred ways in which a cowardly policeman can avoid dangerous duty, but, my friends, the last thing we have come to expect in a policeman is cowardice. That, again, is the best evidence of our underlying faith in his courage and loyalty and our sense of dependence upon him.

Among the reasons why the policeman does not receive his deserved public acclaim and sympathy is because he is always at work and the record of his heroism is a continuous one, and therefore attracts less attention.

FAMILIARITY ALWAYS BREEDS INATTENTION AT LEAST

In the second place, every homicide, however unpremeditated and unassociated with the continual attack upon law and order by the criminal class, is charged up by the unthinking as an evidence of the lack of efficient police supervision. Aggregate statistics are often misleading. In appraising the actions and conduct of its police the public does not carry in its mind the marked and clear distinction which should be accorded those crimes which, in any community, will be committed entirely irrespective of the efficiency of the police system. The effectiveness of any police system is, therefore, liable to be judged not by its actual work but as good or bad in accordance with the character of the population in which it works.

My interest in the police force here and everywhere dates from the adoption of the new method of impanelling of grand juries in Cook County, which has been in operation for some 20 years. I was the foreman of the first grand jury assembled under the new law. In connection with its consideration of cases I personally questioned over 500 policemen as witnesses. Their intelligent attitude and their fairness and equipose made a deep impression upon me, especially since it was my first personal contact with the crime situation in a great city. For the first time I then realized the desperate nature of their eternal warfare with the criminal classes, the difficulties, dangers, and perplexities of their position, and the frequent unfairness of the public attitude toward them. Since that time the difficulties and dangers of their work, not only in Chicago but everywhere, have been multiplied many times.

We respect the record of law enforcement in England, and particularly in London. Their different method of judicial procedure contributes chiefly to their low crime record. Somebody else is to blame besides policemen for crime in our great cities; it is our method of judicial procedure—shyster lawyers.

But I call attention to a fact which is often overlooked, that while there is 1 policeman in London for every 356 people we have in Chicago only 1 policeman for every 544 people. Chicago ought to have at least 3,000 more policemen.

I just want to say something about the police of Chicago, and that is the obscurity in which they must do their work. It is comparatively easy to be a hero in time of danger in a crowd. Do you ever think of how difficult it is to be a hero all by yourself in the pursuance of duty when there is no penalty attached to you for the lack of it?

Since the month of April, 1923, in the police warfare on banditry in Chicago, 112 bandits have been killed by police officers in the act of committing a crime with a revolver in their hand. Thirty-one police officers in the same time have been killed in the discharge of duty by bandits, and of that number seven police officers after being mortally wounded themselves shot and killed their assailants. Why don't we think more of what is going on in our behalf so that we may live in quiet?

On the 10th of this month, in this city, a bandit, after an attempted holdup ran up a flight of stairs in the darkness and was known to be in the dark hallway armed. A Chicago policeman, Kasimer Wistert, immediately went up the stairs after him, was shot, and to-day lies perhaps mortally wounded in the Ravenswood Hospital. If he lives again, it will be because two of his brave comrades have given him their blood in transfusion.

This sublime act of courage, like so many others of these, our most important, yet most misunderstood public servants, is to-day almost forgotten except by the bereaved family. And yet in Revolutionary times because Israel Putnam, stepping forward, crawled in the dark into a wolf's den and mastered him, his heroic act has been heralded from that day to this. What is the reason they are forgotten? Simply because these men, these misunderstood public servants, perform their sublime acts of heroism all the time, continuously, and it makes little impression on our careless people.

You, gentlemen, in your position have many and great responsibilities, you have met them well. In spite of the everlasting cry of superficial criticism, I assure that so far as the intelligent portion of our population at least is concerned, they recognize and appreciate your great work at its real worth and stand solidly behind you and your comrades.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MR. HUDDLESTON AND MR. COLE

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend in the RECORD letters exchanged between myself and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COLE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In exercise of the leave to extend my remarks, I include correspondence between the gentleman from Iowa [Hon. CYRENUS COLE] and myself on the subject of an article written by him and published in the Cedar Rapids Evening Gazette and Republican on January 7, 1928:

LETTER FROM MR. HUDDLESTON

JANUARY 13, 1928.

Hon. CYRENUS COLE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have received clipping from Cedar Rapids Gazette of 7th instant, carrying an article credited to you, as author, in which, speaking of myself, you say, "Mr. HUDDLESTON is an extremist, and he leans to socialism, tinctured with sovietism."

The statement is libelous, but had it come from an outsider I should probably ignore it. As it is credited to a Member of Congress, I must call on you to withdraw it and to apologize in writing, not merely for the gross breach of courtesy due a fellow Member but for the libelous statement. Kindly let me have your prompt reply.

Yours truly,

GEORGE HUDDLESTON.

REPLY FROM MR. COLE

JANUARY 14, 1928.

Hon. GEORGE HUDDLESTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. HUDDLESTON: Let me assure you that it was not my intention to violate even the courtesies that should be extended by one Member to another, and I regret very much that the words I used in my newspaper letter have in any way offended you. I assure you that it was not my intention so to offend you, for as you know I hold you in very high regard. I regret that I used the language to which you object.

In my next letter to the same newspapers, which will be printed a week from to-day, I will correct the impression which you think I have conveyed to my readers. I will be glad to submit the statement to you before I transmit it so that it may be satisfactory to you. In the meantime I will talk it over with you personally.

Let me assure you that I want to do no injury to a fellow Member, and any injury which I may have done unintentionally or in your viewpoint I will be more than glad to undo to the extent that I can, and more than undo, for I can say, as I have often said, that though we do not agree in our views I hold you personally and as a fellow Member in the highest regard.

Sincerely,

CYRENUS COLE.

TAX REDUCTION

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have asked the indulgence of the House for this short time to refer to the situation with reference to tax reduction.

Early in November the Ways and Means Committee met, unofficially, and had hearings on a tax bill, as you will recall. The Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the committee and recommended a reduction of taxes to the extent of $225,000,000. The committee, after two weeks or more of hearings and then two weeks or more of consideration of the various items in the bill, reported a bill to the House carrying a reduction, as I recall, of around $232,000,000. The provisions of this bill had the approval of the Treasury Department and of the administration, if we may judge by a statement of the Secretary of the Treasury as well as a semiofficial statement made at the White House.

The bill was taken up in the House of Representatives and was amended. After certain amendments were placed on the bill it went to the Senate with a reduction in taxes estimated at $290,000,000. This estimate, however, was not made by the Treasury Department. So far as I recall at the moment, there has been no official estimate made of the amount of tax reduction under this bill for the calendar year 1929 by the Treasury Department. So I want to refer to the bill with particular reference to the calendar year 1929.

Section 141 does not apply to the calendar year 1928, and you will recall that when I refer to section 141—it is the section that repeals the consolidated or affiliated returns of corporations. This provision was inserted so as to permit the year 1928 to intervene from the time we drew the bill until the time that portion of it would go into effect, so as to give the corporations ample opportunity to adjust their affairs to a separate rendition. It went to the Senate. The Senator who is chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate—I am speaking of matters outside of the Senate—is a member of the joint committee of the House and Senate with reference to taxation, and early in October at a meeting of that committee, as I recall the 16th day of October, the Senator in charge of the bill in the Senate announced that taxes could be reduced $350,000,000.

About two weeks later, in a final meeting of the joint committee, the same Senator said it could be reduced $300,000,000 at least, and a little later when the Treasury became alarmed that the House of Representatives would not carry out its mandate the same Senator announced at the White House that it could not exceed $225,000,000.

I give you that as a background that you may see some reason why the tax bill has not been brought up for consideration in the Senate.

The bill is not being considered because it contains provisions which the Treasury does not want in there.

If you have section 13 in the proposed bill, and if you have section 141 in the proposed law, and you have the automobile tax repealed in there, he would ask the President to veto it, although it would be a reduction of $85,000,000 for the calendar year 1928 but would be comparatively no reduction for the calendar year 1929. It is not on account of the amount of the tax reduction that caused the Treasury Department to object. It is the provisions in the bill that do not suit the administration—I ought not to say "administration," but does not suit the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury is the administration so far as it applies to tax matters.

No one will gainsay that Mr. Mellon is absolutely the boss as far as the finances, the economic policy, of the administration is concerned.

If section 141 remains in this bill it will never become a law. It means increased taxes for Mr. Mellon. It is not tax reduction according to his viewpoint. It may have $290,000,000 tax reduction for 1929, but it will mean more taxes to him and his companies, and I challenge him to deny it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. What is section 141?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Section 141 is where you repeal the consolidated return and ask every corporation to stand on its own footing. While the bill as it passed the House will reduce the taxes $290,000,000, it would increase the taxes of Mr. Mellon over a million dollars for the year 1929. You are not going to put on the statute books any law that increases the taxes of the Secretary of the Treasury and reduces other people's taxes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. We could pass a bill over his veto, if Members of both Houses would vote to do it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. My colleague knows that as long as Mr. Mellon is Secretary of the Treasury and Mr. Coolidge is in the White House it could not be done.

Mr. BLANTON. We have passed laws over a veto by the President in a Democratic administration.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Not when their vital interests are involved.

Now, I do not want you to be misled and I do not want the country to be misled. It is the repeal of the consolidated return and the consumption tax on automobiles and the principle of graduated taxes on small corporations, and not the amount of the reduction, that is the reason for the delay. It is not the amount.

I say to this House, and I stake my reputation upon it as a forecaster of revenue, that for the calendar year 1929 the tax reduction in the bill that passed the House will not exceed $200,000,000. You ask how I bring that about. The repeal of the provisions of section 141 will give you over $50,000,000 in taxes. The twenty-odd thousand corporations in this country that now have the advantage provided for under that section of a joint return will turn into the Treasury for the year 1929 $50,000,000 more than they will for 1928. So the reduction of that tax would bring it to $240,000,000 and the increase by the year 1929 over the commercial production of the country for 1928 will reduce the amount still further to $200,000,000. So I say that the taxes in the present bill, if put into law now, for the calendar year 1929 would not exceed in reduction more than $200,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury in the beginning said that he could not tell how much to take off because of the appropriations and he wanted it to go over until after March 15. Then he went to New York the other night and made a speech for the Women's Club, and he said that one of the reasons why he could not tell it was because the taxes that we were now levying and the ones that we were repealing made it so uncertain that he could not tell how much revenue there would be from the taxes. That is to say, we had repealed the automobile tax, which is a certainty, and we had repealed a tax that he did not mention, which was also a certainty, which was the stamp tax, and which amounted to $9,000,000, which had his approval, although the repeal of the automobile tax did not have his approval. The income tax of individuals and the estate taxes are more or less uncertain, and he wanted to have some permanent, definite taxes which were repealed in the bill in order to be able to make an estimate. It was amusing to me to see the Secretary of the Treasury teach one thing one week and another thing another week, because it is not usual with him, but he was finessing. He was trying to camouflage the real reason for his opposition to this bill. Have you heard him say one word about section 141? I know that that is the thing that hurts him. I know how much loss a certain few companies took advantage of in the last year. Let somebody in the Treasury Department deny it. I do not imagine they will. They may not think that what I say is of sufficient importance to take notice of it; but nevertheless I make the statement to the country that if you will take out the graduated-tax principle, applying to small corporations and section 141, you will find that that is all that he is afraid of. He does not care for the $25,000,000 reduction.

It is not a $25.000,0000 reduction. I overestimate it—I always try to estimate against myself when I am trying to make an argument, because I want to be fair. It is not $20,000,000 reduction, and the gain, because of the repeal of the consolidated return, will be more than $50,000,000. I estimated that one offset the other, if you will remember, in order to be fair, but it will not be $20,000,000; but the principle of it is what hurts, and the Secretary of the Treasury never wants to see the Congress adopt that principle. That is what he is afraid of, because he does not come within the little brackets. The consolidated return does help him, and he does not want that provision knocked out; but you take those two provisions out of the bill, and I venture the assertion—I will stake my reputation upon it—that with those two provisions out, if you will pass the bill with the reduction up to within $10,000,000 of $300,000,000 reduction, the President will sign it. I made that statement down at the other end of the Avenue to some gentlemen when I was talking to them, and I said that I would make them a little bet that he would sign it, but they did not take it. He will sign it, but he will not sign it if the repeal of section 141 is left in the bill. But you take that out and take out the graduated tax and reduce taxes to the amount of $300,000,000, and Mr. Mellon will write an approval of it and the President will sign it; but you leave that in there and reduce it to $100,000,000, and the President will veto it, because, I repeat, it will increase the taxes of Mr. Mellon and his associates, and that is not tax reduction according to Secretary Mellon's viewpoint. Whenever you pass any kind of tax reduction bill and it does not reduce the taxes of Mr. Mellon and his associates in big business, it is not tax reduction.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I think the gentleman is overmodest in making this statement, as he always is clearly inside the facts, giving the benefit always to the other fellow. I want to revise his estimate of the amount of taxes which the Mellon group of corporations will be compelled to pay if 141 shall remain in the bill. Instead of being $1,000,000 of benefit to the Mellons, my figures show that it will be nearer $3,000,000 of value to the Mellons and the Mellon group of corporations.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. All that I can do is to get statistics the best I can from Mr. Mellon's companies, and those associated with him. I can not go into the Treasury Department to find out how much losses they have had, which could not be charged against them if they had each one to make an individual return. But I do know this: I do know that one gentleman alone, whom many men in this House know, whom you all know and love and have confidence in, told me that the companies that he was associated with alone would pay nearly $5,000,000 more of taxes.

Mr. RANKIN. Is he in one of the Mellon companies?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I think he is associated with the Mellon companies; I do not say he is with all the Mellon companies. I know that the largest coal company in the United States, or in the world, a company that has 30 subsidiaries, is very much concerned.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will ask for one minute more in which to finish this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It is very much concerned, and the secretary and the vice president told me—when I gave them an interview—they had to organize separate companies in various States—Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, Illinois, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, and other States. They all had different companies, you know, doing business in those States, and if we compel them to make a separate rendition it will cost them a great many dollars a year more taxes.

Why not? Not one single iota of argument has ever been given showing that it is not equitable and just, showing that it is not a simpler way of administering the law, and showing that it is not economical. He said to me it is not sound economically. He meant, "You make me pay more taxes." Of course, if you are going to make anybody pay taxes, that is not sound economics to him. It is sound economics. No one can say that it is not sound in economics, just and equitable in principle, or simpler of administration. If these things are true, why should not section 141 remain in the bill? It will be a cowardly act of a Congress that strikes that provision from the bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Consent Calendar.

COOPERATIVE EXPERIMENT IN AGRICULTURE

The first business in order on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 81) for the amendment of the act of March 3, 1927, by authorizing an annual appropriation to carry out the cooperative experiments contemplated by the act.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Resolved, etc., That the act of March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1397), entitled "An act authorizing an appropriation to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the South Carolina Agricultural Experiment Station" be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following:

"SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated each fiscal year thereafter necessary appropriations to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry on the cooperative experiments contemplated by this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

PERSONAL PHYSICIAN TO THE PRESIDENT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5658) allowing the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army, to the medical officer assigned to duty as personal physician to the President.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. REECE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection? There is an amendment that will be offered.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Speaker, that every time we change a President if we are going to create a colonel out of some doctor or surgeon simply because the President chooses him as his family physician with the pay of his rank for life we are embarking on a bad precedent, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ALLEGHENY RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6041) granting the consent of Congress to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Allegheny River.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to section 2 of this bill. There is a similar section in four or five bills giving the authority of Congress for a railroad to construct a bridge. Section 2 reads:

The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise is hereby authorized to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

What does that mean? That means that after the right to build a bridge is given a bridge corporation is organized, and it builds the bridge, and charges the railroad a toll or rates for the use of the bridge, and that is reflected in your freight rates. There is no reason why, when we grant permission to build a bridge to a railroad, we should grant them the authority to pass it on to a subsidiary or independent company which can charge rates that in turn will be reflected back on your freight rates. I do not see the purpose of section 2. If any gentleman connected with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce can enlighten us on that I shall be glad.

Mr. DENISON. I can answer that, Mr. Speaker. The Attorney General made a ruling construing a law similar to this, and held that when a franchise to construct a bridge is granted to anyone it can not be transferred or assigned without special permission.

Mr. BLANTON. We can not hear a word that the gentleman says.

Mr. DENISON. I will repeat it. The Attorney General has ruled that where a franchise to construct a bridge is granted by Congress it can not be transferred or assigned to any one unless permission is given by the granting power in granting the franchise, so that a railroad could not mortgage the franchise or issue bonds, or legally mortgage it, without this clause going into the bill. It is to meet that legal question that we put this provision in. It is absolutely necessary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that bridge corporations are organized in many of these instances. They can charge into the rate even the grant we give to construct a bridge, and that is reflected in the freight rates.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman can not point out a single instance in the United States where any railroad has transferred its franchise to construct a bridge to another corporation for the purpose mentioned by the gentleman from New York. There is no such case in the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then why the necessity of incorporating this language in the bill?

Mr. DENISON. If the railroad company should be consolidated or should transfer all of its property to some other company without this language, it could not transfer the bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We should meet that situation when the time arrives.

Mr. DENISON. No; we should meet it right now and that is the reason why we have put this language in the franchise.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I suggest that the gentleman allow these five railroad bridge bills to go over.

Mr. DENISON. You will have to let the others go over, too.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; the others are all right. I have gone into the matter and there are about five of them in this class. If the gentleman will not agree to let these five go over, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MAHONING RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6045) granting the consent of Congress to the commissioners of Mahoning County, Ohio, to reconstruct, maintain, and operate the existing bridge across the Mahoning River at South Avenue, Youngstown, Mahoning County, Ohio.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress be, and it is hereby, granted to the commissioners of Mahoning County, Ohio, to replace and repair a bridge, together with the necessary approaches thereto, across the Mahoning River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near South Avenue, Youngstown, Mahoning County, Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges and other structures over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 3, strike out the words "be, and it is hereby," and insert in lieu thereof the words "is hereby."

On page 2, in line 2, strike out the words "replace and repair a" and insert in lieu thereof the words "reconstruct, maintain, and operate the existing."

In line 8, on page 2, strike out the words "and other structures."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARK AT THE BATTLE FIELD OF FORT DONELSON, TENN.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5500) to establish a national military park at the battle field at Fort Donelson, Tenn.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill similar to a bill that passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. BYRNS. It is.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If any member of the Military Affairs Committee is present I would like to ask if it is the intention to bring in a string of these park bills at this session. It seems to me it is not a proper matter to bring up on the Consent Calendar. I do not mind a bill which simply provides for a survey and referring it to the War Department, and I shall not object to this bill, because it passed at the last session of Congress. However, I do not believe the Committee on Military Affairs ought to create a lot of these parks, dump them here, and expect us to pass them on a moment's notice on the Consent Calendar. I shall not object to this bill.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill authorizes either the purchase by voluntary agreement or condemnation of certain lands to be used on this battle field national park. I notice that section 8 provides that after the Secretary of War purchases it he is authorized "to enter into agreements, upon such nominal terms as he may prescribe, with such present owners of the land as may desire to remain upon it, to occupy and cultivate their present holdings," and so forth. Now, the point I make is that the Secretary of War in purchasing this land will doubtless pay the full value thereof, and then to turn around and authorize him to lease it to the owners for a nominal sum is not right. I shall not object to this bill if the gentleman will take out the word "nominal" and let the Secretary of War lease the lands upon such terms as he may see proper. Do not require him to necessarily lease it for a nominal sum.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that this bill is an exact copy of two other bills that passed by unanimous consent at the last session of Congress, no objection being raised upon either side of the Chamber. Those bills carried $100,000, whereas I voluntarily reduced the amount carried in this bill to $50,000. I hope the gentleman will let this bill go through. Since those bills went through without objection I trust he will let this bill go through just as those bills went through.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that if those bills carried this same language they ought not to have carried it. They ought not to have passed with that sort of language in them. It is impossible for any one Member of Congress to keep track of each and every bill. That is beyond the capacity of any one Member.

Mr. BYRNS. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that would not be done, as a matter of fact, because it is not proposed to purchase much land. This was one of the most important battles of the Civil War. As the gentleman knows, if General Grant had not succeeded in capturing the 15,000 Confederate troops there, it is possible it would have been some time before he could have reached the great Southwest. This was the key that opened the Southwest, and if these Confederate soldiers had left Donelson and had gone on to Shiloh, it might have been a different tale.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. That goes to the merits of the bill. I shall not object to the bill, except I intend to offer this amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, if the gentleman, who did not object to the other two bills which contained this language, insists upon it, I am at the gentleman's mercy.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am not going to object to the present consideration of the bill, but I am going to offer the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, I will have to consent to the gentleman's doing that if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am not going to do anything more than allow the bill to come up and then offer the amendment. I think the language ought not to be in the bill. I withdraw my reservation of objection to the consideration of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the following members, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of War:

(1) A commissioned officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army;

(2) A veteran of the Civil War who served honorably in the military forces of the United States; and

(3) A veteran of the Civil War who served honorably in the military forces of the Confederate States of America.

SEC. 2. In appointing the members of the commission created by section 1 of this act, the Secretary of War shall, as far as practicable, select persons familiar with the terrain of the battle field of Fort Donelson, Tenn., and the historical events associated therewith.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the commission, acting under the direction of the Secretary of War, to inspect the battle field of Fort Donelson, Tenn., and to carefully study the available records and historical data with respect to the location and movement of all troops which engaged in the Battle of Fort Donelson, and the important events connected therewith, with a view of preserving and marking such field for historical and professional military study. The commission shall submit a report of its findings and recommendations to the Secretary of War not later than December 1, 1927. Such report shall describe the portion or portions of land within the area of the battle field which the commission thinks should be acquired and embraced in a national park and the price at which such land can be purchased and its reasonable market value; the report of the commission shall also embrace a map or maps showing the lines of battle and the locations of all troops engaged in the Battle of Fort Donelson and the location of the land which it recommends be acquired for the national park; the report of the commission shall contain recommendations for the location of historical tablets at such points on the battle field, both within and without the land to be acquired for the park, as they may deem fitting and necessary to clearly designate positions and movements of troops and important events connected with the Battle of Fort Donelson.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is authorized to assign any officials of the War Department to the assistance of the commission if he deems it advisable. He is authorized to pay the reasonable expenses of the commission and their assistants incurred in the actual performance of the duties herein imposed upon them.

SEC. 5. That, upon receipt of the report of said commission, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation, such tract or tracts of lands as are recommended by the commission as necessary and desirable for a national park; to establish and substantially mark the boundaries of the said park; to definitely mark all lines of battle and locations of troops within the boundaries of the park and erect substantial historical tablets at such points within the park and in the vicinity of the park and its approaches as are recommended by the commission, together with such other points as the Secretary of War may deem appropriate: Provided, That the entire cost of acquiring said land, including cost of condemnation proceedings, if any, ascertainment of title, surveys, and compensation for the land, the cost of marking the battlefield, and the expenses of the commission, shall not exceed the sum of $100,000.

SEC. 6. That, upon the ceding of jurisdiction by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee and the report of the Attorney General of the United States that a perfect title has been acquired, the lands acquired under the provisions of this act, together with the area already inclosed within the national cemetery at the battle field of Fort Donelson, are hereby declared to be a national park, to be known as the Fort Donelson National Park.

SEC. 7. That the said Fort Donelson National Park shall be under the control of the Secretary of War, and he is hereby authorized to make all needed regulations for the care of the park. The superintendent of the Fort Donelson National Cemetery shall likewise be the superintendent of and have the custody and care of the Fort Donelson National Park, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into agreements, upon such nominal terms as he may prescribe, with such present owners of the land as may desire to remain upon it, to occupy and cultivate their present holdings, upon condition that they will preserve the present buildings and roads, and the present outlines of field and forest, and that they will only cut trees or underbrush under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, and that they will assist in caring for and protecting all tablets, monuments, or such other artificial works as may from time to time be erected by proper authority.

SEC. 9. That it shall be lawful for the authorities of any State having troops engaged in the Battle of Fort Donelson to enter upon the lands and approaches of the Fort Donelson National Park for the purpose of ascertaining and marking the lines of battle of troops engaged therein: Provided, That before any such lines are permanently designated, the position of the lines and the proposed methods of marking them by monuments, tablets, or otherwise shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and shall first receive the written approval of the Secretary.

SEC. 10. That if any person shall willfully destroy, mutilate, deface, injure, or remove any monument, column, statue, memorial structure, or work of art that shall be erected or placed upon the grounds of the park by lawful authority, or shall willfully destroy or remove any fence, railing, inclosure, or other work for the protection or ornament of said park, or any portion thereof, or shall willfully destroy, cut, hack, bark, break down, or otherwise injure any tree, bush, or shrubbery that may be growing upon said park, or shall cut down or fell or remove any timber, battle relic, tree, or trees growing or being upon such park, except by permission of the Secretary of War, or shall willfully remove or destroy any breastworks, earthworks, walls, or other defenses or shelter, or any part thereof, constructed by the armies formerly engaged in the battle on the lands or approaches to the park, any person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof before any court of competent jurisdiction shall for each and every such offense be fined not less than $5 nor more than $100.

SEC. 11. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended for the purposes of this act.

The bill was amended, on page 2, line 22, by changing "1927" to "1928."

The following committee amendment was agreed to:

On page 4, line 7, strike out the figures "$100,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$50,000."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. On page 5, line 4, after the word "such" I move to strike out the word "nominal."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of Texas: Page 5, line 4, after the word "such," strike out the word "nominal."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand negotiations have been entirely completed by the War Department to carry into effect the provisions of this bill and that this can be obtained on nominal terms. This is simply an invitation to set aside the provisions with respect to nominal terms.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. No; the gentleman does not read the section correctly at all. Section 8 refers to the power of the Secretary of War to lease this land after it is acquired, and if the word "nominal" is stricken out then the Secretary of War will have the right to lease such land to the present owners upon such terms as he may deem equitable and right.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand that is a part of the negotiation. If the gentleman takes that out and if they are going to charge for the use of the land, then, of course, the price of the land will probably be increased.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The Secretary of War is going to purchase the land.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Either at a voluntary sale or by condemnation, and then after he acquires it section 8 authorizes him to lease it back to the owners.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. At nominal terms.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. At nominal terms, which may be $1 a year for a lease worth $1,000 a year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is my understanding—and perhaps the gentleman from Tennessee can enlighten us upon it—all of this has been negotiated and has been taken into consideration and is a part of the general scheme.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that this battle was fought on a number of ridges near Dover. Part of the land is not worth very much. There is some of it in cultivation, but I was told down there last summer that it could be bought for a very reasonable sum, and it is hoped that some of it will be donated. I submit if this amendment is adopted it is going to cost the Government more money for this reason. There are buildings upon the land that the Secretary of War would want to preserve if he should buy them. For instance, there is the old headquarters of General Grant there. If the Secretary can get somebody to go in there for a nominal sum and preserve that building and keep it in repair, then the National Government will be put to no expense in keeping it up.

I do not question the purpose of the gentleman from Texas, but if the gentleman knew the territory down there as I assure him I know it, he would know that if his amendment were adopted, and if the Secretary of War were required to charge a heavy sum for a lease, he would be unable to lease one inch of that ground and procure the preservation of these buildings free of cost to the Government.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The striking out of the word "nominal" does not compel the Secretary of War to make any excessive charge at all.

But to leave it in means that if you make any lease at all you must make it on nominal terms.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman now is taking another tack. What does "nominal" mean? That is up to the Secretary of War as to what he thinks is a nominal price. Take a large building in Washington; if you use the word nominal in reference to a lease, no one would understand that the Secretary of War would charge 1 cent or $1, although it is true he would have that right. In such a case $50,000 might be a nominal sum. What I want to do is to give the Secretary of War full discretion and right to make a lease on such terms as he pleases; not necessarily a dollar a year, but if the Secretary of War feels it is to the interest of the Government, then he has the right to do it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Let us see how the section reads if the word "nominal" is stricken out. See if it does not read exactly as the gentleman wants the thing done, so he says. If the word "nominal" is stricken out, the section will read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into agreements, upon such terms as he may prescribe, with such present owners of the land as may desire to remain upon it, to occupy and cultivate their present holdings, upon condition that they will preserve the present buildings and roads and the present outlines of field and forest, and that they will only cut trees or underbrush under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, and that they will assist in caring for and protecting all tablets, monuments, or such other artificial works as may from time to time be erected by proper authority.

Now, if you do not take out the word "nominal" you are specifically directing the Secretary of War to make this lease upon nominal terms. If the House wants to do that, all right. I am opposed to it.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say that last year the committee reported out two bills where the land was much more valuable and they were passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 4, line 11, strike out the figures "$100,000" and insert the figures "$50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate my colleague [Mr. BYRNS], the Representative of the district in which Fort Donelson is located, upon the successful passage of this bill. As is very well known, Tennessee, next to Virginia, was the greatest battle ground of the Civil War. I am not quite sure but that there were as many major and minor engagements upon Tennessee soil as upon Virginia soil. There are many of these battle fields that probably do not merit preservation in the way that is provided for as to this particular field, because of their lack of historical significance. They were merely fights, indecisive, and in some instances where they were decisive, as far as the battles themselves were concerned, they had no particular bearing upon the final result.

This particular battle did have a profound effect. It had a genuine significance in the history of the War of Secession. Following the fall of Fort Donelson the Federal troops occupied the State capital of Tennessee and the civil government under the Confederacy was driven out.

Not long following that the military governor of Tennessee was appointed and continued in that service until practically the end of the war, or until he was elected Vice President with Lincoln in 1864. Never again was civil authority under the Confederacy restored in Tennessee, a fact which, by the way, is frequently given as the reason why the State of Tennessee happened to be omitted from the Emancipation Proclamation in the first form in September, 1862, and later on in its final form in January, 1863. It had great significance, and it is peculiarly appropriate that the battle field of Fort Donelson should be marked, and I again congratulate my colleague. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. Speaking of Tennessee being the battle ground, I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that Tennessee furnished a larger percentage of her population as participants in the War between the States, counting those who went into both the Union and the Confederate Armies from that State, than any other State in the Union?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not speak from statistics upon that, but I have heard that frequently stated of our State and have reason to think that it is true. I have not examined the statistics.

Mr. DAVIS. My information is that it is true.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NEW CONSTRUCTION AT PACIFIC BRANCH, SOLDIERS' HOME, CALIF.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6990) to authorize appropriations for construction at the Pacific Branch, Soldiers' Home, Los Angeles County, Calif., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. We have a Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and I note that Gen. George H. Wood is the president of that board. While the report of the committee on this bill contains an approval of this project by John A. Hadley, the governor of the Pacific Branch, there is no approval in the report from the president of the Board of Managers.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, last spring, after Congress adjourned, I told the Director of the Budget that I was going to take a trip to look over the Army posts. He asked me if I would not go to Sawtell and look over the new mess hall, where they were asking $200,000, and also the barracks. I also had a letter from General Wood asking me if I would not go there. General Wood made arrangements with the director at Los Angeles and also Governor Hadley to show me around. I have seen General Wood three or four times since that time and he is very strongly in favor of the entire amount being authorized, but states that in his opinion it could not be expended all in one year because the board would have to meet and see whether they would put the buildings on the present site, and if so, they could use only $350,000 to $400,000 a year.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Can the gentleman explain why it is that there is no statement in the committee's report showing that this project is favored by General Wood, who is the president of the Board of Managers of this home for disabled volunteer soldiers?

Mr. JAMES. General Wood came to see me three or four times and stated that he heartily approved the entire amount being authorized, but I did not have him put that in writing.

Mr. SWING. He testified before the Military Affairs Committee last year as to the urgent need of the money to replace those fire traps with fireproof buildings.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, these bills are brought up here under unanimous consent, without the opportunity of Members to read the hearings. It is an unusual procedure to authorize a large expenditure of this kind without the definite, affirmative approval of the president of the Board of Managers, and I can see no reason why the Committee on Military Affairs should not incorporate a definite, affirmative approval of that kind in the report of the committee to the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill, as the gentleman knows, embraces an authorization for $2,100,000. The second bill down on the calendar from that, which will be called in a moment, appropriates $1,500,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Four million dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. No; $1,500,000 for a new hospital at Dayton. These are bills of sufficient importance, I take it, not to be passed under unanimous consent. We are going to have left over from the Veterans' Bureau within a few years many more hospitals than we may have need for. Gradually we are going to rehabilitate our men, and we are going to have a lot of fine, first-class hospitals scattered over the land with no patients to go into them. I agree with my friend that we ought to go slow on these Army bills.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If the Committee on Military Affairs could now read a statement from the president of the Board of Managers stating that this construction is needed, and that it has the approval of the Board of Managers, I would not take the responsibility of objecting, but there is no such report, and so I shall object.

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman objects, will he yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Speaker, this soldiers' home is in the tenth congressional district of California, which I have the honor to represent in Congress. It is the largest soldiers' home in the United States. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] lives in Michigan and General Wood lives in Ohio. Neither is within 2,500 miles of this home. Governor Hadley is on the ground all of the time and he knows the situation. Of course, General Wood knows it in a general way, but he does not know the needs of this particular home as Gov. J. H. Hadley of the home does. Governor Hadley furnished the information on which the report of the Committee on Military Affairs is based.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. But is not it rather unusual for Congress to authorize an appropriation of this kind without its having the approval of the president of the Board of Managers of these homes? I do not recall its ever being done before.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. I state on my responsibility as a Member of Congress that I have in my possession letters from General Wood—I am sorry that I have not them with me, but I can put them into the RECORD to-morrow——

Mr. BLACK of Texas. That do definitely approve the bill that is now before us?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Upon a statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] that the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers approves this bill, I shall not object. Of course the gentleman's word is good for me. I do suggest, however, that in the future the Committee on Military Affairs should incorporate these approvals in their reports so that we will not have to act upon matters of that kind without proper information.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object. I commend our new young colleague from the Pacific coast for his very active interest in this bill and for his effort "to bring home the bacon" to his tenth district. But this big piece of "bacon" is not expected of him by his constituents in so short a time. He will have plenty of time later on to get such matters through. This is too big a bill to pass under unanimous consent.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman from California did not know I was going to California. I went out and inspected this home because the Director of the Budget asked me to go there.

Mr. BLANTON. The Committee on Military Affairs will have its day here, when it can bring up these important bills and have them passed under circumstances where we may give them proper and due consideration. That day will soon come. This is the kind of a bill that ought not to be brought up by the Committee on Military Affairs, and also the next one, providing a million and a half dollars for a hospital building at Dayton, Ohio. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. CRAIL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment before he finally objects?

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection to the gentleman speaking on the bill, but I shall object.

Mr. CRAIL. I was going to say also that General Wood told me personally that he was very much in favor of this bill.

I want to say now that these barracks are overcrowded. They are fire traps. They were built 40 years ago. They ought to be torn down. They were built 25 years after the Civil War and only meant to be temporary quarters for a group of veterans whose days were already numbered and whose ranks were already rapidly thinning.

Ten years later the Spanish War came on. A new group of patriots volunteered and fought for their country. They too were and are entitled to be domiciled in the national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers. By 1915, these barracks, which were erected for the Civil War heroes, were about one-half occupied by Spanish War veterans, and now the Spanish War veterans outnumber the Civil War members of the home.

Then the great World War came upon us. Four million five hundred thousand American boys, the flower of the youth and manhood of our country, took up arms in defense of our country's cause. Through their valor and their heroic sacrifices the world was "kept safe for democracy." Great numbers of these brave lads lost their lives in battle, and hundreds of thousands more of them were wounded, shell shocked, gassed, smitten with disease, overtaken by the dreaded white scourge of tuberculosis. Thousands were blinded and thousands more were mentally unbalanced.

It is now only 10 years since America entered the World War. Already more than half of the members of this home are World War men. This home, which 10 years ago was overcrowded with veterans of the Civil War, Indian wars, and the Spanish War, is now predominated by World War boys. Statesmen look into the future. It is the duty of this Congress to look into the future. It does not take a prophet to foretell what the demands for soldiers' homes will be in the near future. A study of the statistics of the survivors of the Civil War and of the Spanish War will quickly convince any fair-minded patriot that these 4,500,000 veterans of the World War are going to require many more soldiers' homes than this country now has. The disabled veterans of the late war are entitled to the same loving care and ministration that our country has tried to give to the disabled heroes of its other wars. But this bill is not offered or urged in anticipation of future needs. It provides merely for the replacement of insanitary and unsafe barracks, which are already overcrowded and for which there is now a long waiting list, with much-needed fireproof and sanitary barracks. I urge the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his objection before it is too late.

Let me say this: These frame barracks were built to house 2,000 men. They were two-story frame structures. Because of the demand for more room the attics have been made into dormitories. There are now more than 3,400 men crowded into these barracks. More than 800 of them are survivors of the Civil War, the youngest of whom are over 80 years of age, and most of whom are over 90 years of age. The Spanish War men are all more than 50 years old. Great numbers of these men are bedridden, helpless in mind and body—many should have the constant care and attention of loving friends. Some are in wheel chairs, others are led from place to place or feel their way because they can not see.

Many are sick and discouraged and depressed. All are in some way disabled. They are the charges of this Government, our Government, which is the richest Nation on earth and which can be and which wants to be the most generous and the most grateful Nation on earth.

These barracks, which this bill would replace, are as dry as powder. They are lined up close together in rows, so that if one should catch on fire the whole row would burn down. The mess hall caught fire last summer. Fortunately, it was detached. In 15 minutes it was a roaring inferno and in less than an hour it was burned to the ground. The stairways are narrow and winding. There are no elevators, no adequate fire prevention possible, no safety. Many of these helpless but gallant men are in the third stories of these fire traps. I tell the gentleman from Texas and I tell this Congress that if one of those tinder-box barracks catches on fire it will be a national calamity and a national disgrace.

I plead with the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his objection. With all the earnestness at my command, I beseech him to withdraw his objection before it is too late. I understand that under the rules of this body the objection of one Member can prevent the passage of this laudable, this noble effort on the part of a grateful people to care for those who bore the brunt of battle in the hour of our country's direst need. In the name of my country, your country, our country, I beg the gentleman from Texas to reconsider his objection and do the big thing, the generous thing, the unselfish thing, the patriotic thing, the noble thing, and join with those of this Congress who know the necessities and the dangers which demand the enactment of this legislation at the earliest possible moment.

It is not a matter of economy. It should not be a matter of dollars and cents. It is a matter of duty. It is an obligation we owe these boys. With a surplus of $600,000,000 in the Treasury last year, surely this great Nation can afford to be just and fair to those who saved it from defeat and destruction.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CRAIL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am getting some telegrams and letters now from towns and chambers of commerce in the Southwest urging that new hospitals be placed in their vicinity by the Veterans' Bureau. They are not so much interested in the hospitals for those who need them; they are interested in them from the commercial standpoint, wanting this much money to be expended in their districts. When hospitals are built I am interested in the men who are going to occupy them and need them most, aside from this question of the commercial interest in these matters. When its time comes on Calendar Wednesday, the Committee on Military Affairs will pick out its most important bills and may then pass them. It will have two whole days in this Congress in which to pass its bills.

Mr. CRAIL. The gentleman wholly misconceives the nature of this bill. It is not for a hospital at all. It is to replace old tinder-box, fire-trap barracks, now filled to overflowing, with modern, fireproof sanitary barracks.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a barracks.

Mr. CRAIL. Yes; it is a menace to life, to the sacred lives of the survivors of our Nation's wars. In humility I ask the gentleman to reconsider.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand; but I would like to see it brought up in its regular order by the Committee on Military Affairs on one of its two days and given consideration on its merits. But to having it considered by unanimous consent I am constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The clerk will report the next bill.

THE ARMY RATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7007) prescribing the Army ration.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, this is partly covered in last year's appropriation bill?

Mr. JAMES. Yes. This is in accordance with the Executive order of the President.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If this is made permanent, we will not have any trouble any more?

Mr. JAMES. No.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1928, the kinds and quantities of the component articles of the Army ration shall be as follows:

1. Garrison ration (for all persons entitled to a ration except under specific conditions for which other rations are prescribed):

Meat—Beef, fresh or frozen, 18 ounces; bacon, 6 ounces; flour, wheat, 18 ounces; baking powder, 0.08 ounce.

Dry vegetables—Beans, 1.3 ounces; rice, 0.8 ounce.

Fresh vegetables—Potatoes, 17 ounces; onions, 5 ounces; tomatoes, canned, 2 ounces.

Fruit—Prunes, 0.384 ounce; jam, 0.064 ounce; apples, evaporated, 0.128 ounce; peaches, evaporated, 0.128 ounce.

Macaroni, 0.5712 ounce; cheese, 0.5712 ounce; flavoring extract, 0.014 ounce.

Beverages—Coffee, roasted, or roasted and ground, 1.5 ounces; tea, 0.05 ounce; cocoa, 0.3 ounce.

Sugar, 4 ounces; milk, evaporated, unsweetened, 1 ounce.

Butter—Butter, 1.75 ounces; oleomargarine, 0.25 ounce.

Vinegar, 0.08 gill; pickles, cucumber, 0.08 gill; salt, 0.5712 ounce; pepper, black, 0.04 ounce.

Lard—Lard, 0.32 ounce; lard substitute, 0.32 ounce.

Sirup, 0.1427 gill; cinnamon, 0.014 ounce.

In Alaska the beef component will be increased by 10 per cent, the bacon component by 33⅓ per cent, and the vegetable component by 20 per cent.

On Thanksgiving Day and on Christmas Day the meat component will be as follows:

Turkey, drawn, 25 ounces; turkey, undrawn, 28 ounces.

When it is impracticable to bake soft bread, or if for any reason it is more economical to purchase than to bake it, soft bread will be a component in lieu of an equal quantity of flour.

The following additions and deductions will be made on the rations due:

a. For organizations averaging 25 men per day or less, add 10 per cent.

b. For organizations averaging 26 to 75 men per day, add 5 per cent.

c. For organizations averaging 76 to 150 men per day, make no change.

d. For organizations averaging more than 150 men per day, deduct 5 per cent.

e. For individual men authorized by the commanding officer of the post, camp, or station to mess separately, add 10 per cent.

f. For enlisted men serving and messing on Army mine planters, add 50 per cent.

g. The amount of ration credit due an organization maintaining separate messes for detachments will be computed by applying the foregoing provisions for organizations to each mess so maintained.

In special cases where, due to local conditions, the unusually small size of the detachment or the character of the work upon which the enlisted men are engaged, the additions authorized above are insufficient for the proper subsistence of the men, the Secretary of War is authorized to make such additional increase as may be necessary, provided the total allowance thus authorized shall be less than the monetary allowance prescribed for subsistence for enlisted men when rations in kind are not furnished and Government messing facilities are provided.

2. Travel rations (for troops traveling otherwise than by marching, and separated from cooking facilities):

Bread, soft, 18 ounces; or bread, hard, 16 ounces; beef, corned or hash, corned beef, 12 ounces; beans baked, 4 ounces; tomatoes, canned, 8 ounces; jam, 1.4 ounces; coffee, roasted and ground, 2 ounces; sugar, 4 ounces; milk, evaporated, unsweetened, 1 ounce.

3. Reserve ration (for use in campaign when the field ration is not available):

Beef, corned, 7 ounces; beans, with pork and plain sauce, 8.5 ounces; bread, hard, 6.6 ounces; chocolate, vanilla, sweetened, 3 ounces; coffee, soluble, 0.6 ounce; sugar, granulated, 2.4 ounces.

4. Field ration: The field ration is that prescribed for all persons entitled to a ration in time of war and whenever the ration-savings privilege is suspended. Its components will be prescribed by the War Department or the commander of the field forces and will correspond as nearly as practicable with the components of the garrison ration.

5. Troops traveling on transports: Food for troops traveling on United States Army transports will be prepared from the articles of subsistence stores which compose the ration for troops in garrison, varied by the substitution of other articles of authorized subsistence stores, the total daily cost per man of the food consumed not to exceed 20 per cent more than the current cost of the garrison ration, except on Thanksgiving Day and Christmas, when 60 per cent increase over the same current cost is authorized.

6. Ration and savings accounts: Credit will be given organizations on ration and savings accounts for the money value of the garrison or travel ration computed at the current prices of their component articles, and the finance officer will pay as savings to the organization commander any excess in value of these articles over the value of the subsistence stores purchased by the organization.

The ration to be issued to troops on the march in time of peace will be prescribed by the commander, will not exceed the allowances prescribed for the garrison ration, and the ration-savings privilege will be suspended except that when so ordered by such commander the savings privilege on certain specified articles of the ration will be allowed.

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are repealed as of July 1, 1928.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HOSPITAL AT DAYTON SOLDIERS' HOME, OHIO

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 132) authorizing the erection of a sanitary fireproof hospital at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Dayton, Ohio.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object, in order to get some information. This bill is to authorize an appropriation of $1,500,000 for a new hospital at Dayton, Ohio. I am wondering whether the same rule and regulation governs the Committee on Military Affairs that I find existent in the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is a knowledge of that rule that makes me watch bills carefully coming from either of those two departments.

You will remember that at the beginning of this session our colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] denied authorship of a bill that had been put into the basket with his name on it, a bill providing a fine limousine for every officer in the Navy.

I found out that the bill came from the Navy Department, if you please. It sends up here all the bills that it wants passed, changing the law in this respect or in that respect, and turns them over to the clerk of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the clerk can not get any one man to introduce them all, so he parcels them out among the membership of the committee. He distributes and parcels them out among the membership of the committee, and puts the name of some member on them and gets them in the basket. He puts the name of CARL VINSON on some of them; he puts the name of JIM MCCLINTIC on some of them; and it was the clerk of that committee, I am informed, who placed Mr. MCCLINTIC's name on that bill.

If that is the way the War Department has of getting its bills and special pet measures before Congress, it is high time that more than two or three of us were giving careful study to these propositions. I shall not object when the regular day for the Committee on Military Affairs comes for this bill to be considered, but this is not the time to bring up these two bills of major importance, one to spend $2,100,000 and this one to spend $1,500,000. Let us bring them up in the proper way and give them due consideration, and if they are just let us pass them and authorize the money to be spent, but to bring them up in this way, on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, is wrong, and I shall object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Some of us work very hard on this Consent Calendar, and my colleagues know that I do. It may as well be understood by all the committees now that any bill which carries with it an authorization for the appropriation of any large sum of money will be objected to on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Let them bring them up on their Calendar Wednesday days.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am not now discussing the merits of the bill, but we should not pass such bills unless we know what we are talking about. It is not fair to the House or to the country. So that any bill which carries any large appropriation with it is going to be objected to on this calendar. Such bills should stand on their merit on Calendar Wednesday, when the committee has its day.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman from New York will stand pat on that proposition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman from Texas asked me a question, and I would like to answer it.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not ask the gentleman a question. My interrogatory was propounded to the membership of the House.

Mr. JAMES. I want to say that does not apply to the Military Affairs Committee. I have a three-page report on this proposition from Hon. George H. Wood, chairman of the soldiers' homes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would have strengthened it if he had printed that report in the committee's report reporting that bill.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes and explain the circumstances under which this bill was introduced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—on consent day, when a bill is objected to, if the Members who are interested will let their remarks go until the bill comes up in the regular way, it will help us get through with this calendar. I shall not object to the gentleman having his time, but I hope the membership will bear that in mind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee, so of course this soldiers' home hospital bill could not have been introduced by me in the way which was suggested by the gentleman from Texas. The circumstances are these: Some years ago there was a special committee appointed to investigate the hospitals at the soldiers' homes. That committee was appointed by this House, and I served on that committee with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], now a member of the Committee on World War Legislation. We were shocked at the condition of this hospital. It was a firetrap and had been built in the sixties. Seven hundred major operations a year were performed in this hospital. So crowded was this hospital and in so bad a condition was it that there were cases where they had operated on the wrong man before they found it out. Mr. BULWINKLE and myself went through that hospital. We found it had had no electric wires provided in the early days but that they had been put in during later years. In the basement there were places near the wiring where the plastering had broken through and lath exposed so that if any fire should come about by reason of crossed wires the whole building would soon go up in flames. We found paints, oils, and supplies and repair work in the basement. There were men in this hospital so helpless that they could not be moved except with great difficulty. There was a sort of fire escape where one could slide down on an incline, but in some cases the entrance to the fire escape was blocked by furniture placed before it, due to the crowded condition of the hospital. There were no elevators placed in the hospital in the early days. An elevator was put in later, but there was no shaft for it, nothing to inclose it. The floors were of wood and all of the inside of the building was of wood. It was brick on the outside, but it was not fireproof. The wooden floors were oiled for the purpose of keeping down the dust.

The hospital was so overcrowded and the conditions were such that we were immediately fearful of a catastrophe, so we sent for the inspectors of the fire department and had them test the hose. They found the hose would not hold water properly, but that water would break through the hose. They went through the hospital and found defects in the wiring, defects in the fixtures, and they denounced the building as a fire trap.

This report having been made to Congress, the president of the Board of Managers asked me to introduce the bill. I introduced the bill in the last Congress, and the witnesses were brought here from different parts of the country, including the president of the Board of Managers. The bill first introduced was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and a very complete hearing was had, and the chief surgeon, the president of the Board of Managers, and others testified. The report of the special investigating committee of this House was presented and the matter was examined with great care. The bill was favorably reported and put on the Consent Calendar.

When the matter came on the floor of the House my good friend here from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] denounced the man who made an objection. He denounced that man, and now the gentleman is here applauding the objection which he denounced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I want to explain that I do not object to the gentleman's action. It was a sign of a very good heart, but the circumstances were these: The bill had been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The Military Affairs Committee was jealous of this bill. They felt their jurisdiction was being interfered with, and they demanded that the bill be rereferred to the Military Affairs Committee. My good friend from New York said:

Let them object to a bill of this character under these circumstances and take the responsibility of a thing like this. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 2, 1927.)

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We were at the end of the session then.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. At the request of a member of the Military Affairs Committee the bill was reintroduced and referred to the Military Affairs Committee and reported at once. This House passed not only one bill but passed both bills, and at the last moment I took it over to the Senate to get it passed by that body, but in the trouble they were having over there the bill could not be passed. I wanted the Members of the House to understand the circumstances. [Applause.]

FORT M'HENRY, MD.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 204) to authorize an additional appropriation for Fort McHenry, Md.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland, what does the word "restoration" mean here? Is there anything of the original Fort McHenry remaining?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; a very large part of the old fort remains, and this is to restore the fort to the condition it was in during the War of 1812.

Mr. HOOPER. It is quite a Mecca for visitors, I presume?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is not very presentable at this time, but after we get this appropriation, and the work is finished, it will be one of the finest historic shrines in the country.

Mr. HOOPER. I have no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and in all likelihood shall object. When this bill was originally passed, the act of March 3, 1925, provided "That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to dispose of the useless, temporary buildings and contents, constructed during the recent war, and from the proceeds thereof there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary, not exceeding $50,000, to be used by the Secretary of War in the restoration of said Fort McHenry."

Now comes in a bill authorizing $81,000 over and above the proceeds of sale of surplus property.

Gentlemen of the House, the Committee on Military Affairs originally got its program through on the ground it would sell surplus property and would be able to construct the new buildings out of such a fund. Some of us recommended that the Committee on Military Affairs come in here and say what they needed and to turn over the surplus property to the Treasury Department and let that department sell it and have the proceeds go into the Treasury.

In this instance the bill passed the House on the assurance that there was substantial property left over from the recent war to be disposed of, which would be sufficient to complete the restoration. Now we find the property did not bring as much as they expected, and not only the $50,000 was not sufficient, but here is an appropriation of $81,000.

Let me also call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the bill is very poorly drawn. The gentleman refers, at line 6, to an act which repeals another act and he does not properly cite the act. It should read, "An act approved March 3, 1925, Public, No. 543." Then we would know what we are talking about. I spent a great deal of time in running down this repeal of a former act.

This bill calls for an appropriation and takes the place of a former bill authorizing expenditures out of a specific fund. I believe this should be brought up when the Military Affairs Committee has its day, and for the present I object, Mr. Speaker.

FORT MONMOUTH MILITARY RESERVATION, N. J.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 233) to provide for the purchase of land in connection with the Fort Monmouth Military Reservation, N. J.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to acquire a strip of land lying along the easterly side of the Red Bank-Eatontown Highway, bordering on and for use of Fort Monmouth Military Reservation, N. J., and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for such purpose a sum not to exceed $1,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FORT BAKER MILITARY RESERVATION, CALIF.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4588) authorizing an appropriation for the repair and resurfacing of roads on the Fort Baker Military Reservation, Calif.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $35,000 for the repair and resurfacing of the roads on the Fort Baker Military Reservation, Calif.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK, ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8126) to repeal the sixty-first proviso of section 6 and the last proviso of section 7 of "An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Terditory of Alaska," approved February 26, 1917.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill with which I have a great deal of sympathy, for the reason that I realize that the present limitation of $10,000 a year for an expenditure fund for that national park sets a limit that is entirely impossible and inadequate.

In that connection, as soon as there is water transportation available so that tourists desiring to go to Alaska may have an opportunity of doing so, with the growth of that business, it is to be expected that this park will be developed materially, especially in the way of roads and transportation facilities. I say this so it will be understood that I have no feeling against the program the gentleman suggests.

But I do feel that some legislation is very much needed. There are two matters in connection with that park that need correction if it is to stand as a national park. First, there should be no prospecting permitted in the park. It is permitted under a reservation in the existing law. Further, if there is prospecting, the prospector should not be permitted to kill game. It is made a game preserve. Under the organic act they are permitted to kill game for their use. There is no prospecting at the present time in the park area, but anyone who is caught killing game, of course, is a "prospector."

I placed in my speech on the Interior bill a statement setting forth examples of abuse of that privilege.

The purpose of this statement is to urge upon the gentleman from Alaska, the Delegate [Mr. SUTHERLAND], the desirability of accepting an amendment to his bill to take care of the killing of game by prospectors. I will not urge on him at this time the other matter, although I think in the near future it ought to have attention. But certainly if the gentleman wants that park developed we should stop the killing of game. There was a time when there was some excuse for that, for the prospectors needed fresh meat and there were no transportation facilities.

But now that roads are developed, they do not need this permission any more.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it true that when our friend from Michigan goes on his annual inspection of some of these parks they give him quail on toast for breakfast, venison steak for lunch, and bear roast for dinner?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They give him the roast, but not the other luxuries. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. On my trip last fall the only wild game I had was a dinner of wild turkey on an Indian reservation, and that served to benefit one Indian. On that Apache reservation they do not permit the killing of turkeys except by the Indians, and when the superintendent wanted to get a turkey for Mr. HAYDEN and myself he inquired for the best turkey hunter on the reservation and found that they had him locked up, but they let him out. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. He was a prospector.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this with the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and I understand his feelings, his reluctance about making a change in the status quo up there. However, I feel I shall have to urge his acceptance of the amendment that I have suggested. It is no more than to repeal the old authorization for prospectors to kill game in the park, and if the gentleman feels that he can accept this, I shall have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I have to yield to the inevitable, to the onward trend of conservation, which is extending all over the Territory, and I shall accept the gentleman's amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last proviso of section 7 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Territory of Alaska," approved February 26, 1917, which is in the words and figures following: "Provided, That no appropriation for the maintenance of said park in excess of $10,000 annually shall be made, unless the same shall have first been expressly authorized by law," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 1, after line 10, insert a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The proviso of section 6 of an act entitled 'An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Territory of Alaska,' approved February 26, 1917, which is in the words and figures following: 'Provided, That prospectors and miners engaged in prospecting or mining in said park may take and kill therein so much game or birds as may be needed for their actual necessities when short of food; but in no case shall animals or birds be killed in said park for sale for removal therefrom, or wantonly,' be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CARETAKERS FOR NATIONAL GUARD ORGANIZATIONS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 242) to amend section 90 of the national defense act, as amended, so as to authorize employment of additional civilian caretakers for National Guard organizations, under certain circumstances, in lieu of enlisted caretakers heretofore authorized.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, in New York City, for instance, the city government appropriates for the armories, and so many men are assigned, according to the floor space, and the city pays for it. The organization takes care of the buildings and the equipment. Artillery regiments are motorized, and they take care of the motors, and with Cavalry regiments they take care of the horses. Do other cities and States do the same, or do they make no allowance for the care of equipment and property?

Mr. JAMES. I could not answer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Here we authorize civilians where we have National Guard air squadrons.

Mr. JAMES. That is only for the National Guard, and only when they can not use the men already in the service.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is only heavier-than-air squadrons?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I withdraw the objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second proviso of section 90 of the national defense act, as amended by the act approved May 28, 1926 (44 Stat. 673–674), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read:

"Provided further, That in each heavier-than-air squadron one caretaker may be a commissioned officer not above the grade of first lieutenant, and that in any organization whenever it shall be found impracticable to secure the necessary competent caretakers for the materials, animals, armament, or equipment thereof from the personnel of such organization, the organization commander may employ civilians for any or all except one of the caretakers authorized for the organization, and such civilians shall be entitled to such compensations as may be fixed by the Secretary of War."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT BOARD

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 471) to provide for an aircraft procurement board, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman going to insist upon the amendment to strike out the Postmaster General?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The committee has recommended that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am opposed to it. There is no reason why the Postmaster General should go off this board. It is true that the Post Office is now contracting for the carrying of the mail with private companies, but it is quite important that the Post Office Department keep abreast of the improvements and development in aircraft and motors. We do not know at what time it may have to reestablish its own flying corps. I have talked with the Assistant Postmaster General about that, and he said that all it would cost would be one chair at that table, and I do not see why we want to put him off the board.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It was placed in there at the request of the Secretary of War.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He surely can not do any harm on that board.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman proposes that as an amendment on the floor I shall not object to it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is the other way around. It would take an amendment to take it out. It is in the bill now.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It is done by the committee amendment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. If we can agree to leave the Postmaster General on the board, I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the gentleman from New York, who watches these things closely, agrees that this is one of the most valuable, constructive measures on this calendar? The Postmaster General does not now purchase airplanes or aircraft. All his business is concerned with leasing to private operators from a commercial standpoint, and the Secretary of Commerce does that for him. If he operated that air service under the direct supervision of the department, of course, he ought to be on this board.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that the information contained in the report of the procurement board is very valuable.

Mr. BLANTON. He will have the benefit of every bit of the board's action. I do not believe he ought to be on the board.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to concur very heartily with the sentiment expressed parenthetically by the gentleman from Texas, to the effect that this is a highly progressive and constructive measure, in that it looks to a closer cooperation and collaboration between those departments of the Government that are engaged in the purchase and use of aircraft, so that they will bring about a combination of the buying forces and thereby produce economy in the use of money and accomplish a higher degree of efficiency in the aircraft purchased. In that connection I desire to commend the services of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], who was on the committee when that bill was originally introduced, and who has now gone to another committee.

Mr. BLANTON. And it is a step in the right direction, in that it may make possible a united air service under a department of national defense.

Mr. McSWAIN. I think it will be valuable to help bring about a single department of aviation in the future.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It will not cost any more money.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The print that I have here does not provide for the Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The print I have does. When section 2 is reached I will offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a single agency for the coordination of the plans for the procurement of aircraft for the Federal Government is hereby created and established to be known as the Aircraft Procurement Board, hereafter referred to as the board.

SEC. 2. That the board shall consist of an Assistant Secretary of War, an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, an Assistant Secretary of Commerce, to be designated by the heads of their respective departments, and the Chief of the Air Corps of the Army and the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the board to consider and coordinate all plans for the procurement of aircraft, aircraft engines, aircraft accessories, or equipment required by any Federal executive department or independent agency, and make recommendations thereon to the head of the executive department or independent agency concerned: Provided, That all such plans originating in any department shall be submitted to the board by the head of the executive department or independent agency concerned for review and recommendation prior to their approval.

SEC. 4. That the board, subject to the approval of the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce, shall be organized with such assistants, committees, or subordinate agencies as, in the opinion of the board, may be necessary and advisable in order to efficiently perform its duties: Provided, That the personnel required for such assistants, committees, or subordinate agencies shall perform their duties under the control of the board and shall serve under their several permanent appointments in their respective executive departments and without increased remuneration therefor.

SEC. 5. That the board shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its work and for the work of its assistants, committees, or subordinate agencies, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce.

SEC. 6. That the board shall submit annually to the President, through the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce, a report of its activities showing the status of the plans of all Federal departments or independent agencies, for the procurement of aircraft, aircraft engines, aircraft accessories or equipment, together with recommendations for a continuous and definite policy of aircraft procurement by the Federal Government so as to promote and develop the aircraft production capacity of the Nation in the interest of national defense.

SEC. 7. That all acts or parts of acts contrary to the provisions of this act or inconsistent therewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment on page 2, line 3. After the word "Commerce," insert "and Assistant Postmaster General."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 2, line 3, after the word "Commerce," insert the words "and Assistant Postmaster General."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think it would be bad taste for the gentleman from Texas to make a point of order against the amendment. We were following the gentleman's agreement. When the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] offered an amendment I did not object to that.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not like the idea of the gentleman from New York calling my attention to what he says is bad taste. I entered into no agreement. I have a right to make a point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I said I would not object if this amendment should go in.

Mr. BLANTON. That did not assume that we were all going to accept the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It was a definite understanding, as I understood.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague from Texas [Mr. BLACK] offered an amendment a while ago under identical circumstances and the House voted it down.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I do. It is not germane. Section 2 provides that the board shall consist of an Assistant Secretary of War, an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and an Assistant Secretary of Commerce. It has been brought out in the debate that the Postmaster General does not purchase aircraft, but lets out the mail routes by contract. It seems to me that the amendment is not germane, and I make a point of order against it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not make a point of order at this time because the Speaker submitted the bill to the House with the specific reservation of an amendment by name.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point of order, to save a controversy about it, if it will please the gentleman any better. I am willing that the House vote on the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, certainly I did not understand that we were all binding the House to acquiesce in the amendment that would be proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. He made a statement a while ago. I am opposed to the amendment. I do not think the amendment ought to prevail. I do not think the Post Office Department has any place in a military bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Department of Commerce is included here.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The relation of the Post Office Department to the activities contemplated in this bill is not such as it seems to me makes it desirable that a representative of that department should be included in the bill. I certainly hope that the gentleman from New York will not feel that his statement binds us to accept that amendment. I shall certainly vote against it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I object to the amendment and will vote against it, but I do not object to its being voted on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in the bill that was originally introduced the Assistant Postmaster General was not included in the procurement board. In the hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs the Secretary of War suggested or requested that he be made a member of the board. At that time they were engaged in the purchase of airplanes, and there might have been some reason for his inclusion at that time. Since that time they have had a change of policy in the Post Office Department, and upon this bill the Secretary of War requests that the Assistant Postmaster General be dropped. I just wanted to make that statement so the matter would be clear.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the gentleman is not opposing my amendment?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LAGUARDIA) there were—ayes 28, noes 26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the board to consider and coordinate all plans for the procurement of aircraft, aircraft engines, aircraft accessories, or equipment required by any Federal executive department or independent agency, and make recommendations thereon to the head of the executive department or independent agency concerned: Provided, That all such plans originating in any department shall be submitted to the board by the head of the executive department or independent agency concerned for review and recommendation prior to their approval.

SEC. 4. That the board, subject to the approval of the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce, shall be organized with such assistants, committees, or subordinate agencies as, in the opinion of the board, may be necessary and advisable in order to efficiently perform its duties: Provided, That the personnel required for such assistants, committees, or subordinate agencies shall perform their duties under the control of the board and shall serve under their several permanent appointments in their respective executive departments and without increased remuneration therefor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to conform to the amendment just adopted. On page 2, line 18, after the word "Commerce," insert "and the Postmaster General."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 2, line 18, after the word "Commerce," insert the words "and the Postmaster General."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the board shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its work and for the work of its assistants, committees, or subordinate agencies, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, on page 3, line 5, after the word "Commerce" I move to strike out the period and insert the words "and the Postmaster General."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, but I shall not object. Because the Military Affairs Committee evidently is unwilling to defend its own bill and its own action, I do not know that it is up to any of us to try to do it. I understand the Committee on Military Affairs itself suggested the bill in the form in which it stands, but I do not find any of them defending their own action in committee, so I do not suppose it is up to any of us to do it. However, I think the action of the committee was right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn, and, without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the board shall submit annually to the President, through the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce, a report of its activities showing the status of the plans of all Federal departments or independent agencies, for the procurement of aircraft, aircraft engines, aircraft accessories or equipment, together with recommendations for a continuous and definite policy of aircraft procurement by the Federal Government so as to promote and develop the aircraft production capacity of the Nation in the interest of national defense.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, on page 3, line 8, after the word "Commerce," I move to add the words "and the Postmaster General." I am reading from a printed bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That all acts or parts of acts contrary to the provisions of this act or inconsistent therewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this measure (H. R. 471), as originally introduced by me, is the same measure which I introduced in the last Congress as H. R. 11284. This last-numbered bill was discussed by me on the floor, at which time I called attention to the fact that it had received considerable inspection by the House machinery to permit of its being considered.

As stated at that time, it had been approved by the Military Affairs Committee of the House, after hearings at which Mr. Secretary Davis and General Patrick, then Chief of the Air Service, were present. Upon its being reported to the House, it was presented before the Rules Committee for a rule, which request was granted. It was made the order of the House in connection with two other aircraft measures—the McSwain bill and the Vinson bill—but, due to the subject matter of the measure, it could not be tacked on the five-year air program bill, either of the Army or the Navy, then pending in conference. Subsequently to the date of the speech above referred to, the Speaker of the House, Mr. LONGWORTH, recognized the distinguished gentleman of Michigan [Mr. JAMES], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, for the purpose of moving to suspend the rules and pass this measure. The measure passed the House on the 2d day of July, 1926, next to the last day of the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress.

On October 6, 1926, the three new Assistant Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce were named as the head of their respective departments to compose a committee known as the advisory Air Corps coordination committee. The duty of this committee was—

To recommend to the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce general policies relating to the coordination of the air activities of the Government.

At this time the bill was pending in the Senate, and on January 19, 1927, Hon. Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War, addressed Senator Wadsworth, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the Senate, that he was "in sympathy with the principles incorporated in this measure," but suggested that the ends sought would be substantially obtained through administrative action.

However, on February 15, 1927, after the Executive order of October 6, 1926, had been in operation for more than four months, the Secretary of War addressed the following letter to Senator Wadsworth:

HON. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr.,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WADSWORTH: On January 19 I wrote to you concerning the War Department's attitude in regard to H. R. 11284, which provides for the creation of an aircraft procurement board.

In my letter I stated I was in sympathy with the principles incorporated in this measure, and pointed out that the ends sought to be obtained by the bill had already been substantially put into operation through administrative action.

As a result of this experience, gained during the past few months, I feel confident that the proposed procedure is sound, and I, therefore, recommend that this measure be passed at the present session, if that is possible.

I do feel, however, that it is not necessary to have an Assistant Postmaster General as a member of the board, for the reasons as stated in my letter of January 19.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

At this date, the Senate was locked in mortal combat via filibuster, which prevented any further consideration of this measure by that body.

On the first day of the present session I reintroduced the measure. The committee has given it favorable report, including as a part thereof, its report rendered in the Sixty-ninth Congress. With your permission, we will quote from the last mentioned report:

The President's Aircraft Board among its recommendations included one for the creation of Assistant Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce, who, among other things, could be especially useful in matters of aircraft procurement. In making this recommendation the report states that these Assistant Sceretaries acting together can perform in a continuous way from year to year by investigation and recommendation a substantial service to aviation.

The Lampert committee among its recommendations included one for the establishment of a single civil governmental agency to be given sole charge of procurement of aircraft, engines, equipment, etc. In making this recommendation the committee pointed out that such an agency would avoid duplication in expense, would promote the development of uniform equipment, and would carry out a definite and continuous policy of procurement, thereby strengthening the sources of supply and promoting aircraft production.

The bill herewith has been drawn with a view of accomplishing the results contemplated in the recommendations of both the Morrow Board and the Lampert committee. The actual machinery set up in this bill is different, perhaps, from that contemplated either by the Morrow Board or the Lampert committee. It consists of the Assistant Secretaries of War, Navy, Commerce, and Assistant Postmaster General, the Chief of Air Service of the Army, and the Chief of Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy. In its composition, advantage is taken of the Assistant Secretaries recommended by the Morrow Board and of the idea of the Lampert committee that such an agency should have a predominating civilian point of view. The chiefs of the air branches of the Army and Navy have been included as members of this board in order that it may be furnished necessary technical information and counsel. The duties of the board will govern general procurement policies and will not be concerned with the determination of types of planes.

The main principle which has been adhered to in the composition of this Aircraft Procurement Board and in the definition of its duties is that coordination of effort will be obtained without interfering in any way with the present procurement responsibilities of the existing departments of the Government. The full responsibility for actual procurement is left with the heads of the present executive departments, but the plans along which their procurement programs must be developed will be coordinated by the Aircraft Procurement Board so as to accomplish a common objective. This is believed to be an important principle and one which should not be violated. The Secretaries of War and Navy have responsibilities in time of war of such tremendous importance that their freedom of action in meeting these responsibilities must not be curtailed. The purpose of this board is to assist them in meeting these responsibilities.

At the time when the Federal Government is embarking upon five-year programs of aircraft development for the Army and Navy which involve expenditures of approximately $200,000,000, it is especially important that a body of this character be in existence from the very outset. The laws authorizing these development programs are general in character, and in order that the Government may carry them out with definite objectives and a continuity of policy in procurement, the actual plans for carrying them into effect for the Army and Navy should be very carefully coordinated by a single body, thereby insuring maximum efficiency with minimum of duplication of effort. Economy, which should be ever present in governmental activities, should be one of the controlling factors in guiding this procurement board. With a board of this character it is the opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs that maximum results can be obtained in developing the five-year program at a minimum of cost.

Attention is directed to the fact that this board is not to be an administrative agency. Its work will be of an executive character. The necessary information, data, etc., which the board will need in order to make correct decisions will be collected and furnished by the departments concerned. Whatever personnel the board requires in its work must be obtained from the existing executive departments so that the expenses incurred by the operation of the board itself will be minimum.

Section 6 of the bill requires an annual report to be made by the board to the President showing the status of plans of all Federal departments and independent agencies, the procurement of aircraft and aircraft accessories, together with recommendations for the carrying out of a continuous and definite policy of aircraft procurement. This will insure efficiency in the procurement of aircraft by the departments of the Federal Government, but this report also has another purpose, that of promoting and developing the aircraft production capacity of the Nation in the interest of national defense. This is an especially important feature of the board's work, for it is after an emergency is upon us that air equipment in great quantities must be obtained. The peace-time organization must provide the nucleus of a military fighting force properly balanced in all types of planes and equipment with a civilian industry sufficiently organized and developed in all of its phases to expand readily to meet war-time requirements.

With your permission, I will quote from the report on this bill by the Secretary of War, dated December 19, 1927, to Hon. JOHN M. MORIN, chairman Military Affairs Committee, House of Representatives:

DEAR MR. MORIN: You have asked me in your letter of December 9 to submit a report on H. R. 471, a bill "To provide for an aircraft procurement board and for other purposes."

Existing law contains no provisions applicable to this subject.

In brief, the enactment into law of the proposed bill would provide for an aircraft procurement board which would study and coordinate plans for the procurement of aircraft for the various Federal agencies and make recommendations to the heads of the departments. The result should be better teamwork on the part of the Government as a whole. It is important to note that the proposed bill does not take away from the heads of the departments their present authority to meet their responsibilities in the matter of the procurement of aircraft, and this principle is believed to be sound.

The proposed bill seems to be in full accord with the recommendations of the President's Aircraft Board which recommendations the War Department fully indorse. I am in hearty accord with the fundamental idea contained in this bill and believe that efforts should be made to apply it.

I take it that it is unnecessary for me to go further into the discussion of the measure as my speech on June 18, 1926, volume 67, part 10, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at pages 11576 et seq. expresses my views of its virtues and its purpose.

I feel that this bill will, undoubtedly, assist in the coordination of plans of procurement; it will assist in avoiding duplication; it will permit of economies in various manners; it will be a means of having a continuous and definite policy of procurement—not only available for their superiors at the time, but for their successors.

PURCHASE OF HORSES AND MULES FOR THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7195) to provide for the purchase of horses and mules for the Military Establishment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether this is identical with the bill that was passed in the Sixty-ninth Congress.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. My recollection is that this bill did not pass.

Mr. HOOPER. I mean is this bill identical with the bill that came before the Sixty-ninth Congress?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It is the same bill that came before the House at that time, but did not pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the number of horses purchased for remounts for officers entitled to public mounts, for the United States Military Academy, and for such organizations and members of the military service as may be required to be mounted (including the purchase of animals for breeding purposes), shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, including reasonable provision for remounts. When practicable, horses and mules shall be purchased in the open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, within a maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War. No horse purchased shall be below the standard set by Army regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy, or except when otherwise specifically authorized by the act making appropriations for such purposes. In no case shall any polo ponies be purchased except for the United States Military Academy, and such ponies shall not be used at any other place.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, with reference to H. R. 8126, passed a short while ago, and to which a section was added, if it is necessary to do so, I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended to conform to the act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

OKANOGAN IRRIGATION DISTRICT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7203) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to transfer the Okanogan project, in the State of Washington, to the Okanogan irrigation district upon payment of charges stated.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is of a good deal of interest. It touches in an important way on the matter of reclamation and in a region of the country where reclamation is a matter much discussed.

In the State of Washington they now propose the Columbia Basin project to cost a great many million dollars; to cost so much, it is known it can not come out of the reclamation fund as other irrigation projects. Hence this Congress will be asked to appropriate a great many million dollars for reclamation in the State of Washington, and Congress should be studying the history of reclamation.

The report on this bill is interesting but not at all complete, and I think before the House acts on the bill, in very condensed form, some information might be interesting. In connection with what I have been saying about reclamation in Washington, let me observe that the great Yakima project, that ought to be one of the most complete successes in reclamation work, is not able to pay its obligations, at least does not pay them. The Interior Department, under date of December 1, put out this press release:

Statements have been current in the press about the failure of the reclamation fund to revolve. The impression widely prevails that the construction obligations of the water users of the Federal irrigation projects are not being met. Wherever this impression is held, it is erroneous. Since the passage of the adjustment act payments in the full amount due to the Government are the rule and delinquencies are the exceptions.

I am one who has said frequently that the reclamation fund that originally was to revolve every 10 years, now has got to the point where it is to revolve once in 40 years, and has almost become stationary because of the failure to pay the obligations. It is the West that suffers by this and not the State of Michigan or the East. Hence I have tried to preach payment of obligations instead of continually wiping them off the slate or postponing them indefinitely.

This Yakima project, a splendid project in the State of Washington, has due and unpaid, by the last report made to the committee in charge of the Interior Department bill, construction charges to the amount of $243,258 and unpaid O. and M. charges to the amount of $161,985.

The project before us is a concrete example of the failure of the reclamation fund to revolve. The Government spent, according to the report made to our committee, $1,431,157.63. We passed the Smith adjustment act and we were told that was the last time they were going to ask us to wipe anything off the slate. This act wiped off the slate for the Okanogan $820,000, leaving $610,000. But this $1,431,000 was spent over 10 years ago. If there had been an interest charge on the money the amount would have been way above $1,431,000. We wiped off all but $610,000, and now comes this bill which says we are to wipe off $300,000 more. Do we get the cash? Do we get a bill that guarantees payment of even the $310,000? No; they are to pay $10,000 a year for 31 years, and I contend there is nothing in the bill before us that gives us adequate power to force the payment even of the $10,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to stop it or is the gentleman just speaking generally?

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to get this information before the House. I think the gentlemen will be interested in one or two further observations.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to interject this statement. The gentleman has had enough dealings with our friend, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] to know that he is still going to have to give the gentleman a handout every once in a while when he asks us.

Mr. CRAMTON. Let us not get our field too broad.

The value of the total crops for this project for the year 1926, by the information given us by the Reclamation Service, was $512,000. The average crop yield per acre was $133.35. The average from 1917 to 1926 was $215. And still we are told they must repudiate practically all of their obligations. They get $200 an acre in crops and can not pay $5 or $6 an acre per year to the Government. It does not come in under an "adjustment," but we are to adopt a new system of wiping these obligations off the slate. While they have been getting $215 an acre from their crops, they have unpaid O. and M. charges to the amount of $166,000.

I agree that stringent action ought to be taken with reference to this project. It appears, if the statement of the department is correct—the department throws up its hands about it—but if their statement is correct, then the Okanogan project is to take its place alongside of the Williston and another one down in Kansas, and perhaps one or two others, as stark, outstanding examples of failure of reclamation through the use of Federal funds.

I wanted to challenge the attention of the House to this particular example. They are going to wipe off the slate all but $310,000 of this obligation, and as to that amount they are to pay $10,000 a year for 31 years without interest. I do not believe the financial interests of the Government have been sufficiently safeguarded to warrant such action. I believe, even to whatever extent it may be warranted in this distressing case, it is unwise to create this example because I know if we do this as to the Okanogan, other Members from the West will have similar bills to compromise with the Government on the obligations of their projects. Therefore I am obliged to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will reserve it, certainly.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the Okanogan project was authorized in 1905 on data that unquestionably was insufficient as the basis upon which to warrant the taking in of such a large acreage. The fact is that there is not enough water to carry the project with the acreage it now includes. You can not get away from that fact. The land is fertile, the climate is propitious, but the water is lacking.

From a period extending from 1911, the second year that water was placed on the land, down to the present time the report from the investigators from the Bureau of Reclamation say that in only five of those years has the supply of water approached the mark necessary for the production of profitable crops.

There has been a large gross yield on those lands, but that does not mean a net yield. The fact is that a very small portion of the land is receiving water sufficient to yield crops and the people on the project, aside from the burden of repaying to the Government the annual amount for construction and the operation and maintenance charges, have had to go into their pockets to pay for water outside of the Government supply. They have been compelled to pay since 1918, including 1926, over $500,000, or more than $110 per acre of the land under water, to get outside water in order to produce any crops. They must have relief.

In 1926 there was not a drop of water in the Government canal on that project. We have in that project some 1,175 acres which have prior rights. That is, those rights existed at the time the Government adopted this project, and the rights were recognized and were secured in an agreement between the original water users and the Government, so that they have the first call on the water.

In 1926 there was not sufficient water supply over and above what the Government must allow to these prior right users to permit a drop to the project users. In fact, there was only about 80 per cent of the water necessary to supply the prior rights.

Now, that is the condition. It is not simply a theory; we would like to pay up all the indebtedness and would do it without difficulty if we had the water, but the water is not there and it is a question of salvaging what we can out of a bankrupt and intolerable condition.

The people have done their best to meet the conditions. They can do no more. They paid out in 1926 $188,000 for outside water. Neither the Government nor the water users are to blame for the conditions that exist; but it is impossible to continue the project under such conditions. There are 3,800 acres of land under the project now producing fruit. The balance of the lands on which trees were planted and brought to a bearing stage have died for want of water. A committee appointed by the Secretary of the Interior went out last summer and investigated the project and wrote a report. They found that there are 3,800 acres of land that might reasonably be expected to be supplied with an adequate amount of water. The object of this bill is to turn the project over to the Okanogan irrigation district and let that district run it and reduce it to 3,800 acres so that it can have water, a reasonable amount, for the acreage retained and repay the Government the money due on the acreage reclaimed in the project, every dollar of it, and the Government take the loss for the acreage that is eliminated.

That is all there is to this bill. It is simply a proposition to reduce the project to an acreage where it can pay out on the basis of the reclaimed area.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Washington. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's contention is that there will be 3,500 acres watered. What does the gentleman say about the production on the land on the facts as given by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], that it earns $200 an acre? With such earnings, why can not they pay more than $10,000 annually to the Government?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, I did not have reference to the 3,800 acres; I had reference to the 6,800 acres.

Mr. BLANTON. If I understood the gentleman from Michigan, his objection was really a live objection and not one that he is going to withdraw, so what is the use of taking up further time?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I wish to express my very great surprise that the chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations in charge of appropriations for the Interior Department, including the Reclamation Bureau, would make the statement that he has made on this floor that reclamation is a failure. Everybody that has been familiar with the activities of the gentleman knows that he has actually been the best friend during the last 10 years that reclamation has had in this House.

He has taken the trouble year after year to travel over the western country and visit all of these projects, and he has talked with the settlers and has cooperated with them.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Nothing is gained by putting in my mouth words that I did not utter. I do not say that reclamation has been a failure. It has not been the success it should have been for the simple reason that in these western sections the feeling has grown that their obligations to the Government do not have to be paid, and I say that if this bill goes through it will be at least the third outstanding failure of reclamation.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but these outstanding failures to which the gentleman refers are three of the most insignificant projects that have been taken up. Unfortunately, when these projects were taken up there was no soil survey made as is required under the act of December 1, 1924. When these projects were taken up they measured the water not as they are doing now, by engineers, but simply by conversing with the old settlers to ascertain how much rainfall there had been in the previous years. It is true that the Garden City project in Kansas was a complete failure because the farmers would not contract for water. It is true that this project has been a partial failure because of shortage of water and also because of the fact that the soil is so shallow that it is impossible to raise crops upon it. This bill is simply in line with the act of March 5, 1926, which was based on an examination made by the advisors of the Secretary of the Interior, who visited all of these projects and segregated the land that could not be cultivated because of shallow soil, or water shortage and the rough land that could not be economically reclaimed.

When this project was examined, 2,440 acres were charged off because of the lack of soil fertility, and if they had been able to conclude their investigations regarding the supply of water at that time, they would have discovered then that additional water is not available, and would have charged off the very land we are charging off at this time. It is impossible to get blood out of a turnip. These farmers now pay $118 an acre for water for land for which there is sufficient water, and in order to make this project a success, it is necessary to afford this relief. The farmers who have been excluded from this land for which water is not available, are losing all of the time and the money that they have spent in trying to establish themselves on this land. This legislation provides for placing the project on a paying basis, and the Government will get back every dollar that has been expended on the land for which water is available. The Government will have to lose what has been spent on land for which there is no water. It seems to me that common sense dictates that the thing to do is to pass this bill and impose this obligation only upon the farmers who have sufficient water to reclaim their lands, and then let the balance of the expenditure be charged off.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. But there is pending now before the Committee on Indian Affairs a proposition to place $61 an acre charge on the Indian lands in New Mexico, and the first question I asked was whether the Indians were demanding this, and they said no, and I find it is a white man's project.

Mr. SMITH. I am not on the Committee on Indian Affairs and am not advised about Indian projects, but I do believe this is a meritorious bill.

Mr. BLANTON. We ought first to be careful about putting these charges on the land, and then after we do it and spend public money, we ought to be careful about it being paid back.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I feel that this is a very important matter and very likely ought not to be on the Consent Calendar. But I think we have had sufficient discussion, and I feel impelled to call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can demand the regular order.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the matter goes over, as I presume it will, we will be very glad if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] will suggest some sensible, practical way to adjust this situation. It must be settled, because the Government is now paying much more in operation and maintenance than it is getting back. It is a losing proposition.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Idaho asks me to perform a herculean task. Perhaps I might ask him to perform one and ask whether, if I accept this proposition, the gentleman from Idaho will guarantee to the Congress that his committee will not bring to the House any more bills to wipe several hundred thousand dollars off the slate?

Mr. SMITH. I will say this, that I know of no other project where relief is necessary.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I do know of other projects where they can make as good a showing as they have on this one.

Mr. SMITH. They have not been presented to the attention of our committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. They will just as soon as this becomes law and they know that the way is open for them.

Mr. SMITH. Even that would be no excuse for not doing the sensible thing by these settlers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Michigan is going to lie down.

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

DISBURSEMENT AND ACCOUNTING IN THE ARMY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7753) to authorize the disbursement of and accounting for the appropriation, "Pay, etc., of the Army," as one fund, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas reserves the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not often that they get anything as bad as this bill by my friend from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN]. He must have been looking at something somewhere else when they got this bill over on him. If this bill is passed it will permit the War Department to treat all its appropriations as one lump sum. That would be a bad precedent and a bad practice, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment, so that I can make an explanation?

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve it for a moment, but I will object if no one else does.

Mr. McSWAIN. I heartily agree with the gentleman in his general sentiment in connection with the matter, but I think he will find that section 2 really ought to be the law in order that there will not be an indirect transfer of funds.

Mr. BLANTON. The War Department would let you pass 16 sections like section 2 if you put this section 1 into the law for them. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 7203 retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Does that mean, Mr. Speaker, that when this bill is again called up on the calendar it will require only one objection or three objections?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will require three objections next time. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PREPARATION OF MILITARY MAPS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7937) to authorize mapping agencies of the Government to assist in preparation of military maps.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the execution of topographic and other surveys the securing of extra topographic data, the preparation and printing of maps required for military purposes, in the research and development of surveying by means of aerial photography, and in field reproduction methods, the Secretary of War is authorized to secure the assistance, whenever practicable, of the United States Geological Survey, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, or other mapping agencies of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMENDMENT OF THE HAWAIIAN HOMES COMMISSION ACT, 1920

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6989) to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission act, 1920, approved July 9, 1921, as amended by act of February 3, 1923.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Hawaii the reason for the limitation on page 3, which reads:

The commission shall not lease, use, nor dispose of more than 20,000 acres of the area of Hawaiian home lands, for settlement by native Hawaiians, in any calendar five-year period.

If this is as good as the report indicates—and I think it is—why retard the benefit of the bill?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Because the amount of money available from the revolving fund is not sufficient to put in more than 20,000 acres in a five-year period. That matter was discussed in the Legislature of Hawaii. Although the revolving fund is increased to a certain amount, there is only a certain amount available every year, and you would go beyond the available fund if you allowed it every year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the reason?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Yes. That is about as fast as they can go.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like the gentleman to tell us on what terms this land is offered to the natives of Hawaii.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. On a 99-year lease. The title remains in the Territory.

Mr. CRAMTON. What is the rate they pay?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. One dollar on a nominal lease.

Mr. CRAMTON. I visited the region in question in Molokai and was very much impressed by it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 204 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission act, 1920, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 204. Upon the passage of this act all available lands shall immediately assume the status of Hawaiian home lands and be under the control of the commission, to be used and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of this title, except that:

"(1) In case any available land is under lease by the Territory of Hawaii, by virtue of section 73 of the Hawaiian organic act, at the time of the passage of this act, such land shall not assume the status of Hawaiian home lands until the lease expires or the commissioner of public lands withdraws the lands from the operation of the lease. If the land is covered by a lease containing a withdrawal clause, as provided in subdivision (d) of section 73 of the Hawaiian organic act, the Commissioner of Public Lands shall withdraw such lands from the operation of the lease whenever the commission, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, gives notice to him that the commission is of the opinion that the lands are required by it for the purposes of this title; and such withdrawal shall be held to be for a public purpose within the meaning of that term as used in subdivision (d) of section 73 of the Hawaiian organic act;

"(2) Any available land, including land selected by the commission out of a larger area, as provided by this act, as may not be immediately needed for the purposes of this act may be returned to the Commissioner of Public Lands and may be leased by him as provided in subdivision (d) of section 73 of the Hawaiian organic act; any lease of Hawaiian home lands hereafter entered into shall contain a withdrawal clause, and the lands so leased shall be withdrawn by the Commissioner of Public Lands, for the purposes of this title, upon the commission giving five years' notice of such withdrawal;

"(3) The commission shall not lease, use, nor dispose of more than 20,000 acres of the area of Hawaiian home lands for settlement by native Hawaiians in any calendar five-year period."

SEC. 2. Section 213 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission act, 1920, as amended by act of February 3, 1923, is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 213. There is hereby established in the treasury of the Territory a revolving fund to be known as the Hawaiian home loan fund. The entire receipts derived from any leasing of the 'available lands' defined in section 203, these receipts including proportionate shares of the receipts from the lands of Humuula Mauka, Piihonua, and Kaohe Hakuu, of which lands portions are yet to be selected and 30 per cent of the Territorial receipts derived from the leasing of cultivated sugar-cane lands under any other provision of law, or from water licenses, shall be covered into the fund until the amount of moneys paid therein from those three sources alone shall equal $2,000,000. In addition to these moneys and the moneys covered into the revolving fund as installments paid by lessees upon loans made to them as provided in paragraph 2 of section 215 there shall be covered into the revolving fund all other moneys received by the commission from any source whatsoever."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

NONSECTARIAN CHAPEL AT ARMY MEDICAL CENTER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6991) authorizing the erection of a nonsectarian chapel at the Army medical center in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant, under such conditions as he shall determine, permission for the erection of a building for a nonsectarian chapel upon the grounds of the Army medical center in the District of Columbia, at the cost of funds raised and donated by the Gray Ladies of the Red Cross and without cost to the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 83) to approve Act No. 24 of the Session Laws of 1927 of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within Hanapepe, in the district of Waimea, island and county of Kauai."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to call the Delegate's attention to the fact that here we are asked to approve an act. The title of the act is given in the bill, but the act itself does not appear in the bill and it does not appear in the report.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the act follows exactly the same wording that has been used in previous Congresses with respect to the same matters, and the report is exactly the same as has been used in previous reports out of committees on bills of the same nature. Both of these bills, 83 and 84, are to approve, as is required by the organic act that was granted to the Territory of Hawaii, a license that is issued to a certain company for providing light and power.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand that, but I think when the House is asked to approve an act of the Legislature of Hawaii the report ought to contain the text of the act. I do not think that is an unreasonable request.

Mr. CRAMTON. I might suggest to the gentleman from New York and to the gentleman from Hawaii that I think I have some responsibility for the failure of this bill to carry the Hawaiian act, because on a previous occasion I made a protest against encumbering our statutes with those very long acts, but it would seem that the report itself might very well contain it. The reason the former report did not was because in the former case the bill did carry the act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me suggest that the committee held hearings, which are on file in the committee. The committee went into it very carefully, and we are satisfied that the franchises to be granted are proper.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman and his committee have made an examination of this?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall not object now, but I think it is only reasonable to request that the act itself be printed in the bill or in the report.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I will note that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That act No. 24 of the Session Laws of 1927 of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within Hanapepe, in the district of Waimea, island and county of Kauai," passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii and approved by the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii on March 26, 1927, is hereby approved: Provided, That the authority in section 16 of said act for the amending, or repeal of said act shall not be held to authorize such action by the Legislature of Hawaii except upon approval by Congress in accordance with the organic act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 84) to approve act 25 of the Session Laws of 1927 of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within Waimea and Kekaha, in the district of Waimea, on the island and in the county of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That act No. 25 of the Session Laws of 1927 of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within Waimea and Kekaha, in the district of Waimea, on the island and in the county of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii," passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii and approved by the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii on March 26, 1927, is hereby approved: Provided, That the authority in section 15 of said act for the amending or repeal of said act shall not be held to authorize such action by the Legislature of Hawaii except upon approval by Congress in accordance with the organic act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANCHORAGE, ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 340) to authorize the incorporated town of Anchorage, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of an additional school building, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Alaska a question. I notice that this town has a population of only 1,856 people. This is to provide a bond issue of $100,000, with which to build an additional school building. About how many children are there in this town of 1,856 people?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My impression is that to-day there are about 400 school children.

Mr. BLANTON. They already have some building, because this bill provides for an additional building.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The present building is a dilapidated building. The people there do not think it is all that is required for the present attendance, and they have an overflow of scholars.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object to them bonding themselves, but it occurs to me they are going pretty rapidly out there for a small town.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me inform the gentleman that the people of the little city of Anchorage are trying to catch up with the enormous program laid out by the Federal Government when they sought to make it a Federal city there about 10 or 15 years ago.

Mr. BLANTON. Due to the fact that if I should get to go out there some day in the far future with my friend from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], I shall expect my friend from Alaska to serve us with the same wild turkey, venison steak, and bear meat that our friend from Michigan gets elsewhere, we will let it go by.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Anchorage, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue bonds in any sum not to exceed $100,000 for the purpose of constructing and equipping an additional school building in said town.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the town of Anchorage, at which election the question whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Anchorage. Thirty days' notice of any such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation in said town before the day fixed for such election.

SEC. 3. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon the condition that a majority of 65 per cent of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of issuing said bonds.

SEC. 4. That the bonds above specified, when authorized to be issued as hereinbefore provided, shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and shall not be sold for less than their par value with accrued interest and shall be in such denominations as the common council of said town may designate, but not exceeding $1,000 each, the principal to be due in 10 years from date thereof: Provided, however, That the common council of the said town of Anchorage may reserve the right to pay off such bonds in their numerical order at the rate of $10,000 or less thereof per annum from and after the expiration of four years from their date. Principal and interest shall be payable in lawful money of the United States of America at the office of the town treasurer, town of Anchorage, Alaska, or at such other place as may be designated by the common council of the town of Anchorage, the place of payment to be mentioned in said bonds: And provided further, That each and every such bond shall have the written signature of the mayor and clerk of said town of Anchorage and also bear the seal of said town.

SEC. 5. That no part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose other than that specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only in such amounts as the common council shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed by the treasurer of said town under the limitations hereinbefore imposed and under the direction of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for the purposes aforesaid.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alaska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTHERLAND: On page 1, line 6, after the word "town," insert: "Provided, however, That no issue of bonds or other instruments of any such indebtedness shall be made, other than such bonds or other instruments of indebtedness in serial form, maturing in substantially equal annual installments, the first installment to mature not later than 5 years from the date of the issue of such series, and the last installment not later than 30 years from the date of such issue."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF HAWAIIAN ORGANIC ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5575) to amend the Hawaiian organic act, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 83 of the Hawaiian organic act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Hereafter no person shall be disqualified for service as a juror or grand juror by reason of sex, but the provisions of the law relating to the qualifications of jurors and grand jurors and exemptions from jury duty shall in all cases apply to women as well as to men, but such service shall not be compulsory upon any woman."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the bill by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SCHOOL BONDS OF SEWARD, ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7367) to authorize the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $50,000 for the purpose of constructing and equipping a public-school building in the town of Seward, Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I will explain that these two amendments simply provide a uniform system of redemption of the bonds. It is the phraseology that was placed in the bonding bills of last session while they were in the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. The particular point I want to call the gentleman's attention to is that this is a village of only 850 people. How many school children are in it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know just the number of school children, but this is a town of considerable importance. I have given the census of 1920, but there is a larger population in Seward than that.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not stand in the gentleman's way, but it does look as if they are bonding themselves pretty fast up there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are bonding themselves in every case for school buildings.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $50,000 for the purpose of constructing and equipping a public-school building in the town of Seward, Alaska.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said town of Seward, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Seward whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for municipal taxation. Thirty days' notice of such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation in said town before the day fixed for such election.

SEC. 3. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that a majority of 65 per cent of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of issuing said bonds.

SEC. 4. That the bonds above specified, when authorized to be issued as hereinbefore provided, shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of Seward, not to exceed 7 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and shall not be sold for less than their par value, with accrued interest, and shall be in denominations not exceeding $1,000 each, the principal to be due in 20 years from date thereof: Provided, however, That the common council of the said town of Seward may reserve the right to pay off such bonds in their numerical order at the rate of $4,000 thereof per annum from and after the expiration of five years from their date. Principal and interest shall be payable in lawful money of the United States of America at the office of the town treasurer or at such bank in the city of New York, in the State of New York, or such place as may be designated by the common council of the town of Seward, the place of payment to be mentioned in the bonds: Provided further, That each and every bond shall have the written signature of the mayor and clerk of said town of Seward and also bear the seal of said town.

SEC. 5. That no part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose other than specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only in such amounts as the common council shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the order and direction of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alaska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTHERLAND: On page 1, line 6, after the word "Alaska" insert "Provided, however, That no issue of bonds or other instruments of any such indebtedness shall be made, other than such bonds or other instruments of indebtedness in serial form, maturing in substantially equal annual installments, the first installment to mature not later than 5 years from the date of the issue of such series and the last installment not later than 30 years from the date of such issue."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION AT FORT BENNING, GA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7478) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. BLANTON reserved the right to object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to ask if the $200,000 is over and above the $180,000 carried in the deficiency bill?

Mr. JAMES. We authorized $180,000 last year, which was carried in the deficiency bill. We authorized a total of about $700,000 for barracks and after the contract was let there was a surplus of $200,000. They need $200,000 more for an addition to the hospital and this simply authorizes a transfer of appropriations from the appropriation for barracks so that the money can be used for hospital purposes. There is no money involved at all.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is what I thought.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. It has not been long since we passed legislation at the instance of the War Department which turned over to it, as it said, $20,000,000 for new construction. I predicted then they would be coming back here with bill after bill for extra money. You will remember that just a few days ago, comparatively, General Summerall said they needed new barracks in the United States for the Army, and he was summoned across the United States as a punishment by the President of the United States for making that statement. I do not think this bill ought to come up under unanimous consent under such circumstances. We ought to wait and see what the President is going to do with General Summerall before we pass it, and I object.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. If my friend wants to defend the President in punishing General Summerall, I will reserve my objection for that purpose.

Mr. WRIGHT. I want to state to the gentleman that this bill has nothing to do with the President or with General Summerall. There was an appropriation heretofore made for the construction of barracks at Fort Benning. Only $300,000 of the amount was actually used for barracks, and the purpose of this bill is simply to transfer it from the barracks fund in order to construct additional wings to the hospital, which construction is very badly needed there. There is no additional charge on the Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDING SECTION 7 OF PUBLIC ACT NO. 45

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6094) to amend section 7 of public act No. 45, entitled "An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second proviso of section 7 of public act No. 45 entitled "An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of War to grant to the State of Louisiana a period of four years for the purpose of exercising the State's option in the purchase of Jackson Barracks.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend section 7 of public act No. 45, Sixty-ninth Congress, entitled 'An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes.'"

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "Public Act No. 45" and insert in lieu thereof "An act"; on page 2, line 4, after the word "purposes," insert in parentheses the words "Forty-fourth United States Statutes, page 203"; and after the parenthesis "approved March 12, 1926"; and in line 7 strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six"; and amend the title.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

TRANSFER OF THE TESTING PLANT OF THE AIR CORPS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7008) to authorize appropriations for the completion of the transfer of the experimental and testing plant of the Air Corps to a permanent site at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, this bill appropriates $1,200,000 and it ought to come up with the regular Military Affairs Committee bills on its Calendar Wednesday. I object.

BOARD OF VISITORS UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8105) to provide for the membership of the Board of Visitors United States Military Academy, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy shall consist of five members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, seven members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, and five members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the respective chairmen thereof; the members so appointed shall visit the United States Military Academy at least once annually at such time or times as the chairmen of said committees shall appoint, and the members from each of said committees may visit said academy together or separately as the respective chairmen of said committees may elect; and the superintendent of the academy and the members of the Board of Visitors shall be notified of such date by the chairmen of the said committees: Provided, That members chosen by the respective chairmen of the said committees who have been reelected to the Senate or House of Representatives may continue to serve as members of the Board of Visitors and visit the United States Military Academy, notwithstanding the expiration of Congress. The expenses of the members of the board shall be their actual expenses while engaged upon their duties as members of said board and their actual expenses of travel.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT COURT OF SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6057) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of the State of Iowa.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, we have a law whereby one Federal district judge may be transferred to another district, even if another State, and if you will get the record which shows the condition of the docket in different States—for instance, in New Mexico and several other States I could name you will find some Federal judges with very little to do, very little business to transact, and they could be transferred to this district in Iowa and help clean up the docket.

Mr. DYER. Let me say to the gentleman the district judge from New Mexico to whom he has referred is sitting in the United States court of appeals and giving his whole time to that court.

Mr. BLANTON. In the last session of Congress we created a whole bunch of new judges. If the gentleman will investigate and see how high the sun is when they open court and how high it still is when they close it he will see that they could get busier and do more work.

Mr. DYER. This bill was reported to the last House in the last session of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. I hate to object to a bill introduced by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, but I have to do it. However, I will reserve the objection for the present if he wants to make a statement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Surely the gentleman from Texas does not want the conditions to prevail that now prevail in Iowa. If anybody wants to get a case put over he has not the slightest trouble in getting it done, for the judge comes there, has only a short time, and gets away as soon as he can, so that there is a practical denial of justice. Cases run along there for a couple of years.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the fault of the judge.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If there was a judge that belonged in the district, there would be no trouble in getting cases tried.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice a short time ago where a Texas judge, and he is a fine one, although he is a Republican, William H. Atwell, went all the way across the continent to New York to hold court, and he held it for quite a while. It shows that the condition of his docket was such that he could cross the United States at the expense of the people, because his expenses were paid, and help clean up the docket in another State. He also gets a per diem when absent from home.

Now, the Judiciary Committee will have a day pretty soon, and the gentleman can bring up his bill at that time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This condition has been in existence for over two years.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my friend that in my district, where I held court for eight years, there are now six judges doing the work that I used to do there. The legislature and Congress can keep on creating these judges because there is always some fellow that wants the position.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will permit me, there is no judge in that district now who is able to hold court. The sitting judge is absolutely incapacitated on account of physical conditions.

Mr. BLANTON. Why doesn't he retire?

Mr. DYER. He will as soon as he can. He has not reached the age of retirement yet.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And there is no way to compel him to retire.

Mr. DYER. This does not provide for an additional judge.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am always willing to hear from my party leader, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. He has asked me to withdraw my objection, and if he is willing to take that responsibility I shall withdraw my objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the congestion in this district due to the excessive number of cases with reference to violations of the prohibition act?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, there are cases of that kind; but there are also cases against railroad companies and corporations that we can not get tried.

Mr. DYER. There is no judge in the district who can hold court, because he is ill. This is to provide a judge for that district to take his place. He will retire as soon as he reaches the age limit and there will be no additional judge appointed.

Mr. SCHAFER. Taking into consideration the present condition of the calendar, if a man should be arrested for violating the national prohibition act to-day, how long would it be before his case would be reached for consideration?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not inform the gentleman about that.

Mr. SCHAFER. I would like to know in what shape that calendar is.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is a large number of cases on the docket now, and some of them have been there for two years, and they can not be disposed of.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I believe in the enforcement of all laws, and also that a strict enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act will bring about a change of opinion in Iowa asking for a modification of it, I shall withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill the Senate bill 773, of similar title and text, and to pass the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill and consider it in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. EDWARDS. Is that identical with the House bill?

Mr. DYER. It is identical.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Iowa, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same compensation and allowances as the present judge of said district.

SEC. 2. When a vacancy shall occur in the office of the existing district judge for said district such vacancy shall not be filled unless authorized by the Congress.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect upon its approval by the President.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 6057) was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7009) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill authorizes an appropriation of $4,283,716. All of its items are probably meritorious, but I think such a bill of such great importance should come up on the regular Military Affairs Committee day, on its Calendar Wednesday, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE CHAMPLAIN

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 104) granting consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into between the State of New York and the State of Vermont for the creation of the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, and to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge across Lake Champlain.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a unanimous-consent request with respect to the reading of the joint resolution. The only part that is up for consideration by the House is that part on page 1 and down to line 12 on page 2, which gives authority to the States of New York and Vermont to construct this bridge.

The remainder of the resolution consists of articles of agreement between the States of Vermont and New York. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the agreement may be dispensed with, though printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the reading of the joint resolution may be confined to the portion he refers to, and that the whole of it may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the portion referred to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a question of the gentleman from New York. Is it customary in granting such approval as this to print the full text of the agreement, thus lumbering up our statutes with 10 pages of small detail?

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] is more able to answer that question than anyone else.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan is of course familiar with the provision in our Constitution which expressly prohibits any contract or covenant being entered into between two States without the consent of Congress. When we grant our consent we have to set out the agreement agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. That answers the question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have looked up the precedents in this matter and I find that in some cases we have printed the agreement and in some cases we have not.

Mr. BLANTON. But is not the best practice usually to print the agreement in full?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, given to the States of New York and Vermont to enter into the agreement or compact executed by the commissioners duly appointed on the part of the State of New York and commissioners duly appointed on the part of the State of Vermont for the creation of the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, pursuant to authority of chapter 321 of the Laws of 1927 of the State of New York, and the authority of Act No. 139 of the acts and resolutions passed by the General Assembly of the State of Vermont at the biennial session, 1927, and each and every part and article thereof be, and the same is hereby, ratified, approved, and confirmed: Provided, That nothing therein contained shall be construed as impairing or in any manner affecting any right or jurisdiction of the United States in and over the region which forms the subject of said agreement; which agreement is in words and figures as follows:

Now, therefore, the said States of New York and Vermont do hereby enter into the following agreement, to wit:

ARTICLE I

The two States do agree that there shall be created the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, which shall be a body corporate and politic, having the powers and jurisdiction hereinafter enumerated, and such other and additional powers as shall be conferred upon it by the legislature of either State, concurred in by the legislature of the other State, or by act or acts of Congress, as hereinafter provided.

ARTICLE II

The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall consist of six commissioners, three of whom shall be resident voters from the State of New York and residents of a county of New York adjoining Lake Champlain, and three of whom shall be residents of the State of Vermont. The New York members shall be chosen by the State of New York and the Vermont members shall be chosen by the State of Vermont, in the manner and for the terms fixed and determined from time to time by the legislature of each State, respectively. Each commissioner may be removed or suspended from office as provided by the law of the State for which he shall be appointed.

ARTICLE III

The said commissioners shall, for the purpose of doing business, constitute a board and may adopt suitable by-laws for its management.

ARTICLE IV

The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall constitute a body, both corporate and politic, with full power and authority to purchase, construct, own, maintain, and operate a highway bridge, including approaches, across Lake Champlain between the State of New York and the State of Vermont, and to make charges for the use thereof, and for any of such purposes to purchase, take, own, hold, and operate real or personal property, to borrow money, and secure the same by bonds or by mortgages upon any property held or acquired by it.

The members of the commission shall each receive as compensation for their services the sum of $10 a day for each day's service performed and in addition, all necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties, to be paid from the funds of the said Lake Champlain Bridge Commission.

ARTICLE V

The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall have such additional powers and duties as may hereafter be delegated to or imposed upon it from time to time by the action of the legislature of either State, concurred in by the legislature of the other. Unless and until otherwise provided, it shall make an annual report to the governor of each State, setting forth in detail the operations and transactions conducted by it pursuant to this agreement, and any legislation thereunder, and which said report shall be submitted by the governor to the respective legislatures.

The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall not pledge the credit of either State, except by and with the authority of the legislature thereof.

ARTICLE VI

Each member of the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, before entering upon his duties, shall take and subscribe the constitutional oath of office, which oath shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State from which said commissioner is appointed.

The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall elect from its number a chairman and a vice chairman, and may appoint a secretary and treasurer, who need not be members of the commission, and such employees as it may require in the performance of its duties, and shall fix and determine their qualifications, duties, and compensation.

It shall adopt a seal and keep in well-bound books a record of all its meetings and proceedings, certificates, contracts, surety bonds, and corporate accounts, and shall maintain a suitable office where its maps, plans, documents, records, and accounts shall be kept, subject to public inspection at such times and under such regulations as the commission shall determine.

ARTICLE VII

Unless and until the revenues from operations conducted by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission are adequate to meet all expenditures, the legislatures of the two States shall appropriate for the administrative expenses such sum or sums as shall be necessary and shall be recommended by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission and approved by the governors of the two States in the following ratio, to wit: The State of New York shall appropriate 60 per cent thereof and the State of Vermont shall appropriate 40 per cent thereof. And unless and until otherwise determined by the action of the legislatures of the two States, the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall not incur any obligations for salaries, office, and other administrative expenses within the provisions of this article prior to the making of the appropriations by both States adequate to meet the same.

ARTICLE VIII

Unless and until otherwise determined by the action of the legislatures of the two States, no action of the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall be binding unless taken at a meeting at which at least two members of each State are present, and unless four votes are cast therefor, two from each State.

ARTICLE IX

The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission is hereby authorized to make suitable rules and regulations for the control of traffic across the bridge herein provided for, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States or of either State, and subject to the exercise of the power of Congress which, when concurred in or authorized by the legislatures of both States, shall be binding and effective upon all persons and corporations affected thereby.

ARTICLE X

The two States shall provide penalties for violation of any order, rule, or regulation of the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission and for the manner of enforcing the same.

ARTICLE XI

The commissioners of the two States shall have the power to apply to the Congress of the United States or any department of the United States for consent and approval of this agreement, and the bridge to be constructed thereunder by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission pursuant to law or in the absence of such consent of Congress or of such department of the Federal Government, and until the same shall have been secured, this agreement shall be binding upon the State of New York, when ratified by it, and upon the State of Vermont, when ratified by it: Provided, however, That such consent shall be obtained within three years from the date hereof.

ARTICLE XII

The two States hereby agree that there shall be constructed a highway bridge between the State of New York and the State of Vermont as speedily as possible between a point heretofore selected by the aforesaid joint legislative committee and commission at Crown Point, in the county of Essex, and in the State of New York, and a point so selected near Chimney Point, in the town of Addison, in the State of Vermont. Such bridge shall be built according to the plans and specifications of the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, as approved by such duly constituted Federal authority as by law may be required. The State of New York agrees to pay the entire cost of all highway approaches to said bridge in the State of New York, and the State of Vermont agrees to pay the entire cost of all highway approaches to said bridge in the State of Vermont.

ARTICLE XIII

If, for the construction of said bridge, including approaches, it shall become necessary to acquire lands, rights, or property, and the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall be unable to purchase the same upon terms which they deem reasonable, then, and in such case, the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission may take, by right of eminent domain, lands, rights, and property necessary for the proper construction of said bridge and approaches thereto. In the State of Vermont, for the taking of such lands, rights, and property, the said commission shall have the same rights, powers, and duties as are vested in the selectmen of towns for the taking of land for highway purposes, and the provisions of chapter 191 of the General Laws of the State of Vermont, with amendments thereto, are hereby made applicable to all proceedings hereunder.

In the State of New York, if, for any of the purposes provided herein, the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall find it necessary or convenient to acquire any real property in this State, then such Lake Champlain Bridge Commission may find and determine that such real property is required for a public use, and upon such due determination the said property shall be and shall be deemed to be required for such public use. Such real property may be acquired by such commission by gift or purchase or, in the event that such real property can not be so acquired, it may be acquired under the provisions of the condemnation law.

If it shall be necessary for the commission to set apart, out of any funds available therefor, any sum or sums to create a fund to be used for making compensation to owners of real property, or of any interest therein to be acquired for the purposes of this agreement, such fund shall be created within the State where such real property or interest therein is located, and shall not be used for any other purpose until such compensation has been duly made according to the law of the State wherein such real property or interest therein is located. The fund so created shall be deposited with the custodian authorized by law to receive and hold the same.

ARTICLE XIV

The State of New York agrees to provide and make available in the year 1927 the sum of $120,000 toward the cost of the construction of such bridge, and the State of Vermont agrees to provide and make available in the year 1927 the sum of $80,000 toward the cost of the construction of such bridge. Such funds shall be available for all costs incidental to the construction of the said bridge, but no part of such fund shall be used by the commission except for expenses of preparing specifications until this agreement also be ratified by the Congress of the United States.

No part of the said sum mentioned in this article shall be payable by either State unless the other State shall have made available to the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission the sum herein agreed to be made payable, the intent hereof being that each State shall cause to be paid over or made available to the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, at such time as may be necessary, the sum herein set forth as an advance to the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission by the respective States for use in the construction of said bridge.

ARTICLE XV

Upon the completion of the bridge, pursuant to this agreement, the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall cause the boundary line between the two States on said bridge to be appropriately marked and indicated.

ARTICLE XVI

All accounts of the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall be audited jointly by the comptroller of the State of New York and the auditor of accounts of the State of Vermont and the report of such audit shall accompany the annual reports of said Lake Champlain Bridge Commission.

ARTICLE XVII

The balance of the money needed for the construction of the said bridge shall be raised by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission on its own obligations secured by the pledge of the property owned by said commission and the revenues and tolls arising out of the use of the said bridge. As security for obligations so issued, and the moneys so appropriated, such property and such revenues and tolls arising out of the use of the said bridge shall be pledged as hereinafter provided to the repayment of the entire issue of bonds and other securities for the construction thereof, together with the interest and the repayment of the moneys paid over by the States, it being the declared policy of the States that the bridge, so far as the payment of bonds or other securities issued for the construction thereof, together with the repayment of the moneys advanced by the States, shall in all respects be self-sustaining; and the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall charge and maintain revenues and tolls for the use of the said bridge until all bonds and other securities issued for the construction thereof shall have been paid, and until the moneys so as aforesaid advanced by the States of New York and Vermont shall have been repaid, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

The obligation for moneys so raised by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission on its own obligations for the construction of the said bridge and purposes incidental thereto shall constitute a lien upon the property owned by said commission, and the revenues and tolls therefrom, in accordance with the terms upon which such moneys are raised, and any right or claim of the States, including that arising out of this agreement, shall be subordinated to such lien. The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall, however, pay into the State treasury of each State annually out of the revenues and tolls from the bridge a sum equal to 4 per cent upon the unpaid balance of the amount actually advanced to the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission by each State hereunder as interest for that year, together with at least 2 per cent of the principal of such advance, until the whole sum so advanced is repaid to the States, with accrued interest: Provided, That the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall not make such payments until it shall have accumulated a reserve fund, and only so long as and for the years in which it maintains such reserve fund equal to 10 per cent of its own obligations issued in relation to or for the construction of such bridge, over and above the sums required by the terms of such obligations to be set aside for amortization or a sinking fund, and unless in said year the tolls or revenues from the said bridge after the payment of all expenses for operation and maintenance are sufficient to satisfy the interest and other contractual requirements of said obligations: And provided further, That such payments shall not be made into the State treasury of either State unless there shall be available under the same conditions sufficient money to make payment on similar terms to the other State, and that if there exists such surplus revenue, but insufficient to make complete payment on such terms or conditions both to the States of New York and Vermont, then such surplus revenue shall be prorated in accordance with the respective unpaid balances of the advances made under the acts of the two States and such prorated sum shall be paid into the State treasury of each State in place and stead of the amount above provided, to be applied, first, upon interest accrued and unpaid, if any; second, upon the interest for the current year and the balance, if any, in reduction of the principal.

ARTICLE XVIII

The States of New York and Vermont do hereby pledge themselves, and it is hereby agreed with those subscribing to the obligations issued by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission for the construction of such bridge and incidental purposes, that the States will not authorize the construction or maintenance of any other highway crossing for vehicular traffic over Lake Champlain between the two States in competition with the said bridge, nor will it limit or alter the rights vested in the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission to establish and levy such charges and tolls it may deem convenient and necessary to produce sufficient revenue to meet the expenses of maintenance and operation and to fulfill the terms of the obligations assumed by it in relation to such bridge until the said obligations, together with interest thereon, are fully met and discharged: Provided, That such crossings shall be considered as competitive with such bridge only if they shall form a highway connection for vehicular traffic between the two States across Lake Champlain within a distance of 25 miles from such bridge. The provisions of this article, when approved by the two States, shall constitute an agreement between the two States for the benefit of those lending money to the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission for the construction of such bridge, and the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission may include in the bonds or other evidences of its obligations issued by it for the construction of the said bridge, or incidental purposes, such part of this agreement as shall seem proper as evidence of the foregoing agreement made by the two States with the holders of the said bonds or other obligations.

ARTICLE XIX

The States agree that the construction of the said bridge herein authorized be by contract to be executed as follows:

The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall advertise for proposals for the construction of such bridge according to the plans, specifications, and estimate approved by it therefor. The advertisement shall be limited to a brief description of the work proposed to be done, with an announcement stating where the maps, plans, specifications, and estimate may be seen, the terms and conditions under which proposals will be received, the time and place where the same shall be opened, and such other matters as the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission may deem advisable to include therein. Such advertisement shall be published at least once in each week for two successive weeks in such newspapers as the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission may designate.

Each proposal shall specify the gross sum for which the work will be performed, and shall also include the amount to be charged for each item specified in the estimate. The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission may prescribe and furnish forms for the submission of such proposals, which shall be sealed, and may prescribe the manner of submitting the same, which shall not be inconsistent herewith. Accompanying each proposal there shall be a draft or certified check for 3 per cent of the amount of the gross sum bid, which check, in case such proposal be accepted, shall be retained by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission until the contract and the bond hereinafter provided for shall have been duly executed, whereupon such check shall be returned to the bidder. In case the bidder to whom the contract shall be awarded shall fail to execute such contract and bond, the money represented by such draft or certified check shall be regarded as liquidated damages, and shall be forfeited to the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission. The proposals, when opened, shall be subject at all reasonable times to public inspection, and at the time of opening shall be publicly read and conspicuously posted in such a manner as to indicate the several items of the proposal.

The contract for the construction of such bridge shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, except that no contract shall be awarded at a greater sum than that required in the estimate made for such construction in accordance with the plans and specifications as approved. The lowest bid shall be deemed to be that which specifically states the lowest gross sum for which the entire work will be performed, including all the items specified in the estimate therefor.

If no proposal otherwise acceptable is made within the estimate accompanying the plans and specifications, the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission may cause the estimate to be amended.

The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission may reject any or all proposals, and may advertise for new proposals as above provided, if, in their opinion, the best interests of the States will thereby be promoted.

The Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall prescribe the form of contracts and may include therein such matters as they may deem advantageous to the States.

The contractor, before entering into a contract for such construction, shall execute a bond in the form prescribed by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, conditioned that he will perform the work in accordance with the terms of the contract and with the plans and specifications, and that he will commence and complete the work within the time prescribed in the contract.

The bond shall also provide against any direct or indirect damages that shall be suffered or claimed on account of such construction during the time thereof and until such bridge is accepted.

The contract may provide for partial payment to an amount not exceeding 90 per cent of the value of the work done. Ten per cent of the contract price, where a bond approved by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission is given, shall be retained until the entire work has been completed and accepted.

All contingencies arising during the prosecution of the work shall be provided for to the satisfaction of the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, and as may be agreed upon in the original or by a supplemental contract executed by the commission; the amount to be expended shall not exceed the original estimate, unless such estimate shall have been duly amended by the commission. If a supplemental contract be executed by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission for the performance of work or furnishing of material not provided for in the original contract, the amount to be charged thereunder for any such work or material shall not exceed the rate for which similar work or material was agreed to be performed or furnished under the original bid upon which the contract was awarded.

ARTICLE XX

The construction, maintenance, and operation of said bridge is in all respects for the benefit of the people of the two States, for the increase of their commerce and prosperity, and for the improvement of their health and living conditions, and the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission shall be regarded as performing a governmental function in undertaking the said construction, maintenance, and operation, and in carrying out the provisions of law relating to the said bridge, and shall be required to pay no taxes or assessments upon any of the property acquired by it for the construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge, and the interest of either State in any tolls collected under this article shall be free from any State, county, municipal, or local taxation whatsoever in the other State.

The obligations which may be issued by the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission for the construction of the bridge mentioned herein, or incidental thereto, shall be exempt from taxation and are to be legal securities in which all public officers and bodies of each State and of its municipal subdivisions, all insurance companies and associations, all savings banks and savings institutions, including savings loan associations, executors, administrators, guardians, trustees, and all other fiduciaries in each State may properly and legally invest the funds within their control.

ARTICLE XXI

It is the declared purpose of each of the contracting parties that this bridge will eventually be a free bridge, and to that end it is agreed that after the payment of all the obligations which may be issued against the bridge and the tolls and revenues thereof, and the State of New York and the State of Vermont shall have been fully repaid for any and all moneys that may have been advanced by them, together with all interest thereon, the Legislatures of the State of New York and the State of Vermont, subject to the approval of the governor of each State, by concurrent legislation, shall provide the method and procedure for the future operation, maintenance, and control of said bridge.

In witness whereof we have signed this compact or agreement by and under the authority of chapter 321 of the Laws of 1927 of the State of New York, and by and under the authority of Act 139 of the acts and resolutions passed by the General Assembly of the State of Vermont at the twenty-ninth biennial session, 1927, this 11th day of May, 1927.

As commissioners upon the part of the State of New York:

MORTIMER Y. FERRIS.
HARRY E. OWEN.
ROY LOCKWOOD.
ALBERT OTTINGER,
Attorney General of the State of New York.

As commissioners upon the part of the State of Vermont:

GEORGE Z. THOMPSON.
WILLIAM R. WARNER.
CHAS. E. SCHOFF.
J. WARD CARVER,
Attorney General of the State of Vermont.

In the presence of:

ALFRED E. SMITH.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution is hereby expressly reserved.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

COUNTY EXTENSION AGENTS IN FLOOD-STRICKEN FARM AREAS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 99) for the relief of flood-stricken farm areas in the United States, with special reference to aid in the employment of county extension agents.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object. The main, big question of flood relief is now before our special committee on that subject. I take it that they are going to cover this whole question from the national standpoint.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They would not cover the question involved in this proposed measure. The Committee on Flood Control will, of course, deal only with preventives of floods.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee believe that it will be better for the people of the United States generally and for the committee to consider all the question, the whole question, and not bring in these measures by piecemeal?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That committee would not have any jurisdiction of the matter involved here. There is no change of principle involved in any way in this measure. In other words, the Government is now doing what is proposed to be done in this bill except that it is not contributing in as great degree as it will, for a year's time under this bill, to the work being done in the counties that were wholly or in part affected by the flood. It would apply only to the flooded region, and it is a rehabilitation measure pure and simple. Many of the counties—fortunately that was not true in my district—but in many of the counties the entire county was flooded. The local authorities have had to defer the taxes. They have been unable to pay salaries that were due.

Mr. BLANTON. I want the minority leader to remember that I am in sympathy with flood relief, but my idea was that the whole question ought to be determined and brought in in one piece of legislation. But in view of the gentleman's position on the matter I withdraw my objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They could not possibly include this.

Mr. CRAMTON. The opportunity will be given for a scrutiny of the items when they come in if the gentleman will accept an amendment inserting the words "not more than."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 672 be substituted for the House resolution. It is in identical language with the House resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill 672 be substituted for the House resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 672) for the purpose of rehabilitating farm lands in the flood areas.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT] directs my attention to the fact that the Senate bill is not identical with the resolution as reported from the House. I thought it was. It is identical with the print of the bill which I have, but the gentleman from New Jersey directs my attention to the fact that the bill as reported from the Committee on Agriculture is broader than the Senate bill. I wonder if we could withdraw that bill for a moment and go ahead with the calendar while I confer further with the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. DENISON. It can be passed over.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that it be passed over in its present stage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LIVE POULTRY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 112) to amend the act of May 29, 1884, as amended, the act of February 2, 1903, and the act of March 3, 1905, as amended, to include poultry within their provisions.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I ask unanimous consent that it go over at this time. I shall not object.

Mr. LEA. Will the gentleman consent to passing it over temporarily to-day? There is an important reason why we should procure prompt action on this matter, I can assure the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over temporarily. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

APPEALS FROM DISTRICT COURTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 343) to amend section 128, subdivision (b), paragraph 1, of the Judicial Code, as amended February 13, 1925, relating to appeals from district courts.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 128, subdivision (b), paragraph 1, of the Judicial Code, as amended February 13, 1925, be amended to read as follows:

"First. To review the interlocutory orders or decrees of the district courts, including the district courts of Alaska, Hawaii, Virgin Islands, and Canal Zone, which are specified in section 129."

SEC. 2. Section 1339 of the Compiled Laws of Alaska, 1913, is hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

INDIANS ON THE WALKER RIVER RESERVATION, NEV.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8281) to provide for the withdrawal of certain described lands in the State of Nevada for the use and benefit of the Indians of the Walker River Reservation.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is another department bill. It is prepared in the Indian Bureau and is sent to a committee member to be introduced and passed. The Committee on Indian Affairs will have two days on some Calendar Wednesday soon, and then it can decide which of its bills it will take up and pass, and which is the most important. For the present I shall object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Some others might object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection just for this suggestion: In this case the department in question has the responsibility of administering public lands and also administering Indian affairs. There is very little involved in value and it is not a bill of such great importance as some of the others.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state that without my knowledge or consent I was drafted and placed on this Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CRAMTON. I had overlooked that fact for the moment.

Mr. BLANTON. From the communications I have been receiving for the last two weeks, I have not increased my confidence in the administration bureau, and it has incited me to look into a good many of this department's affairs. To enable me to finish a survey I am making before these bills are passed, I want to hold them back for a little while.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course, the gentleman understands, I think, that none of the protests he has received, however misguided those protests might have been, are against giving something to the Indians.

Mr. BLANTON. They have come, I think, from about a dozen States already, and whenever you see so much smoke there must be some fire somewhere, and the smoke is coming from various quarters.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman knows that in the Sixty-ninth Congress 5 per cent of the bills that were enacted into law came out of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BLANTON. I know it is a very active committee and that it has a very active chairman and a very influential chairman.

Mr. LEAVITT. It will not be able to do the things that are necessary for the protection of the Indians in two days on Calendar Wednesday. This is a bill that is intended entirely for the protection of the Indians, and the gentleman from Michigan and myself have both visited that section.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to state to my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that there is a band of Alabama Indians in Texas that have been hounded and starved from one State to another until they finally landed in my State years ago, and Sam Houston, the President of the first Republic of Texas, caused two sections of land to be given to them by my State, and they have been starving to death ever since, and we have never been able to get this Indian Bureau to even recommend a thing for them except one little schoolhouse.

Mr. CRAMTON. In making that statement the gentleman is in error, because each year the Indian Bureau has recommended an appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Of how much?

Mr. CRAMTON. Of $8,000 or $10,000 annually. But they are not wards of the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Why are they not wards of the Government? They are American Indians, and their ancestors were here before Columbus discovered America.

Mr. CRAMTON. They are not restricted Indians.

Mr. BLANTON. Why are they not wards of this Government? Is it because Sam Houston felt sorry for them and gave them two sections of land in Texas? My friend ought to withdraw the statement that they are not wards of the Government.

Mr. CRAMTON. Which statement?

Mr. BLANTON. About these Indians not being wards of the Government.

Mr. CRAMTON. Even if I withdrew the statement the statement I have made represents the facts, and it would still be true.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are not wards of the Government the time has come when the Indian Bureau ought to ask that they be made wards of the Government, because they are American Indians.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I must object.

EMPLOYMENT OF COUNTY EXTENSION AGENTS IN FLOOD-STRICKEN AREAS

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask that we may now return to the bill with respect to the rehabilitation of farm lands in the flood areas. I have prepared certain amendments which will make the two bills conform.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That due to the emergency existing in the lower Mississippi Valley as a result of the flood of 1927, county funds available from taxation are so impaired throughout the flood area that a continued support of the normal constructive activities of these counties, including the employment of county extension agents in agriculture and home economics, will be impossible. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, in cooperation with the several States and local agencies within these States, to employ such county extension agents necessary to aid in quickly and adequately rehabilitating these flood-devastated farm areas.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000 for the employment of county extension agents, traveling, subsistence, and other necessary expenses, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe for the proper carrying out of the purposes of this act.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, in line 3, after the word "existing," strike out the words "in the lower Mississippi Valley" and insert the words "in various States."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: On line 3, page 1 of the Senate bill, strike out the words "in the lower Mississippi Valley" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in various States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment, in line 4 make the word "flood" plural, so that it will read "as a result of the floods of 1927."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: In line 4 strike out the word "flood" and insert in lieu thereof the word "floods."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And on page 2, line 1, before the word "to," insert the words "continue or."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: Page 2, line 1, after the word "to," insert the words "continue or," so that the line will read "with the several States and local agencies within these States, to continue or employ."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And in line 6, page 1, the word "area" should be "areas."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: On page 1, line 6, strike out the word "area" and insert the word "areas."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, on page 2, line 3, after the word "appropriated," I move to insert the words "not more than."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 2, line 3, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "not more than."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF CERTAIN ACTS TO INCLUDE POULTRY WITHIN THEIR PROVISIONS

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 49, resolution (H. J. Res. 112) to amend the act of May 29, 1884, as amended, the act of February 2, 1903, and the act of March 3, 1905, as amended, to include poultry within their provisions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Under an understanding had with the gentleman from California I shall not object to the consideration of this joint resolution at this time, pending a report from the Department of Agriculture of the State of New York. If this report should be adverse, then I shall present it to the Senate committee together with the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEA. That is entirely agreeable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuropneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals," approved May 29, 1884, as amended, the act entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to more effectually suppress and prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases of livestock, and for other purposes," approved February 2, 1903, and the act entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts, to permit and regulate the movement of cattle and other livestock therefrom, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1905, as amended, are hereby further amended to include within their provisions live poultry, and wherever in the said act the term "livestock" is used it shall be followed by the words "and/or live poultry"; and all the penalties, terms, and provisions in said acts, as amended, are hereby made applicable to live poultry.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR PAIUTE AND OTHER INDIANS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8282) to provide for the permanent withdrawal of certain lands bordering on and adjacent to Summit Lake, Nev., for the Paiute, Shoshone, and other Indians.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

TO RESERVE 120 ACRES FOR KOOSHAREM BAND OF INDIANS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8292) to reserve 120 acres on the public domain for the use and benefit of the Koosharem Band of Indians residing in the vicinity of Koosharem, Utah.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH BETWEEN GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., AND EAST GRAND FORKS, MINN.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 108) granting the consent of Congress to the States of North Dakota and Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Red River of the North.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask unanimous consent to speak for three minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, three bills on the calendar having to do with Indian matters have just been objected to by a member of the committee who was not present at the consideration of these bills in the committee.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has stated that he has heard from people in 12 States that they have found some wrong things being done by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and evidently is objecting to these bills because they are proposed by the bureau and the Secretary of the Interior. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that if he has made himself the willing recipient of all the ojections and complaints that are going to come from people pretending to speak for the dissatisfied Indians, he has quite a job on his hands. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] honestly undertook that rôle in the last Congress and voluntarily resigned from the committee, I think largely because he was deluged with so many letters and petitions that he wished to leave the committee.

These three bills the gentleman from Texas opposes, in behalf of the committee it should be said, propose only to give the Indians protection necessary to enable them to establish and maintain their own homes. The white people have taken from the Indians practically the entire country, and it is here proposed through Congress to restore certain small areas for the development of agricultural activities. The gentleman from Texas objects because these bills come from the bureau. The Committee on Indian Affairs listened to the cause of the Indians in connection with these three bills, and we moved to report them out favorably with recommendation that they pass. I am taking the floor to make it plain that these bills, I know, are in the best interest of the Indians and can not be objected to consistently by anyone calling himself a friend of the Indians.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes to answer the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I did not seek a place on the Indian Committee; I was put there. These bills to which I have objected were voted out by the committee on the first day the committee met, on its very first meeting. The committee members were notified to be there at 10.30 o'clock a. m. It so happened that on that particular day I had an important meeting of another subcommittee, embracing important business to the people of the United States. I went to the first one and attended there for 30 minutes, until I could get things arranged where there would be nothing done that would menace the rights of the people of the United States.

I then went to my friend's Indian Committee about 11 o'clock or shortly after, within 35 minutes after the committee was supposed to have met, and was told by him and also by his secretary that three bills had been reported out favorably, and the committee had adjourned. I asked permission to be permitted if I saw fit to file minority reports after I examined them. The chairman said I would have the right in case I desired it. The committee could not have been together long enough to give very careful consideration of the three bills, because they were all reported in that short length of time.

I want to tell my friend that I went to the next meeting of his Indian Committee, and there was a bill considered by the committee at that meeting to place a charge of $61 an acre on lands of the Indians in the State of New Mexico. My friend will remember that I asked the representative of the Indian Bureau, who was trying to push the matter through if the Indians had requested that this be done, and he said "no."

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman from Texas left the meeting before it concluded, and the gentleman evidently is not aware that that measure went over to the next meeting for further information.

Mr. BLANTON. I left 15 minutes before the committee adjourned, to come to the House to be present at its opening. I stayed there long enough to bring out the fact that the Indians had not asked for this bill that was to hamper their lands $61 per acre. It was white men who asked for it "in behalf of the Indians." These white men were seeking to place a charge of $61 an acre on the poor Indians' land when these Indians had not asked for it.

I want to say that as long as I am on the gentleman's Indian Committee when his bills are good he will find me with him, but when his bills are bad he is going to find me objecting to them, and not in any superficial way but in a way that will stop them, if I can. These castigations which the gentleman may seek to give me on the floor are not going to run me off the committee, as he indicated it did the gentleman from Wisconsin, because I am one fellow who does not run. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman from Texas does not call these three bills on the calendar bad bills?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not yet finished my survey that the people have asked me to make, and as yet I can not tell. I have not reached a conclusion about them, but when I do, if I decide that they are bad, I am going to fight them.

Mr. LEAVITT. This is not the Indian Bureau——

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman is here sponsoring it now. All three of these are department bills, prepared in the Indian Bureau. They were sent in by the Indian Bureau to members of the gentleman's committee, to be introduced. The members did not prepare them. They are departmental bills.

Mr. LEAVITT. And is it not the duty of the Indian Bureau when it sees something that needs to be done to prepare the matter and send it to the Congress?

Mr. BLANTON. If they should be good bills for the Indians; yes. The Indian Committee has its right to bring them up on Indian Committee day, on Calendar Wednesday. The gentleman will find me probably then helping him to pass all good bills, but this is unanimous-consent day, when it is the duty of every Member of Congress, when he thinks a bill ought to be considered somewhere else, to get up in his representative capacity and object to it. This is where a man ought to function when he thinks a bill ought not to be passed at this time under unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the States of North Dakota and Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Red River of the North at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of an Act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906; and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the article "a," insert "free."

Page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out the semicolon and the words "and ubject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill 7009, to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, with the amendments which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $4,283,716, to be expended for the construction and installation at military posts of such technical buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may be necessary, as follows:

Bolling Field, D. C., supply warehouse, $38,000; administration building, $42,000; Chanute Field, Ill., heating system in hangars, $5,629; Fort Crockett, Tex., machine shop and aero repair building, $19,869; dope and paint house and lean-to for boiler room, $10,775; Fort Sam Houston, Tex., macadamizing hangar line and construction of storm sewer and surface drainage for hangars, $3,858; Hawaiian Department (for the Air Corps), steel hangar, $39,500; addition to radio hut, $6,979; new primary flying field, San Antonio, Tex., hangars, $316,000; hangars for airdrome gunnery and bombing range, $79,000; field shop, $81,000; field warehouse, $38,000; headquarters and operations buildings, $40,000; radio, parachute, and photographic buildings, $56,000; New Primary Flying School, San Antonio, Tex., barracks, $700,000; noncommissioned officers' quarters, $156,000; and officers' quarters, $1,020,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, when directed by the President, to accept on behalf of the United States, free from incumbrances and without cost to the United States, the title in fee simple, to such lands as he may deem necessary or desirable, in the vicinity of San Antonio, Tex., approximately 2,400 acres, as a site for an Army primary flying school and flying field: Provided further, That upon the acceptance of the lands as herein appropriated for the construction thereon of barracks and officers' quarters and utilities and appurtenances thereto, such amounts as may have been appropriated or authorized for appropriation for barracks and officers' quarters and utilities and appurtenances at Brooks Field and Kelly Field, Tex., pursuant to the authority contained in the acts approved February 25, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1235), and March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1390): Provided further, That upon the acceptance of the lands as herein provided the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prepare the ground and construct the necessary roadways and utilities at said primary flying school and flying field and to transfer thereto and reestablish thereon such buildings, utilities, and equipment then located at Brooks Field and Kelly Field, Tex., as he may determine to be necessary and desirable: And provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, or cause to be sold, under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1926, the tracts or parcels of real property comprising Brooks Field and Kelly Field, Tex., or any portion thereof, upon determination by him that said tracts or parcels are no longer needed for military purposes, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate such sale and conveyance; Langley Field, Va., heating plant for hangar, $6,068; Middletown Air Depot, Middletown, Pa., hangars, $79,000; concrete floors in warehouse, $38,597; San Antonio, Air Depot, San Antonio, Tex., rock asphalt apron for hangars, $7,316; instrument house and engine repair and cleaning building, $6,861; Scott Field, Ill., hydrogen gas holder, $49,500; Fairfield Air Depot, Fairfield, Ohio, gasoline and oil tanks, $36,000; March Field, Calif., radio, photographic, and school buildings, $86,000; night-flying lighting system, $15,000; Maxwell Field, Ala., hangar, $39,500; field shop, $81,000; headquarters and operations buildings, $40,000; radio, parachute, and photographic buildings, $56,000; night-flying lighting system, $15,000; Mitchel Field, Long Island, N. Y., hangars, $79,000; field shop, $81,000; field warehouse, $38,000; headquarters and operations buildings, $40,000; radio, parachute, and photographic buildings, $56,000; Selfridge Field, Mich., hangars, $237,000; field shop, $81,000; headquarters and operations buildings, $40,000; radio and parachute buildings, $20,000; ceiling and walling hangars, $3,264; Albrook Field, Canal Zone, construction of landing field, $400,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLANTON. I demand a second. I am against taking this bill up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, this is the execution, so far as the personnel and equipment is concerned, of the five-year program that was entered into a little more than a year ago for the Air Corps of the Army. In that five-year program there was authorization purely for the flying equipment and for the personnel necessary to handle it, but incident to flying machines and the personnel comes the question of housing, housing for the personnel and housing for the machines. Therefore it was necessary that we should provide officers' quarters for the officers of the Air Corps and barracks for the enlisted personnel of the Air Corps, and hangars in which to house the flying machines, and machine shops in which to repair them. Therefore, upon review of this entire building program contemplated here by this bill, the Members of the House will observe that nothing is undertaken to be taken care of here except as it is auxiliary to the Air Corps program that has already been deliberately outlined by the Congress, so that we are asking here for a total of about $4,200,000 with which to provide the quarters for the Air Corps and the equipment of the Air Corps. It is necessary if we are to have an Air Corps that this be provided. It follows as certainly as that the stable follows the horse, that there must be a place to keep the equipment and the men. There is also in this bill the item of consolidating the primary flying school at San Antonio, Tex. This is the largest single item in the bill. The climatic conditions there are peculiar for the learning of the art of aviation, and Kelly Field and Brooks Field are ultimately to be consolidated into one primary flying field. There is authorization in the amendment which was read by the reading clerk for the sale after the new buildings have been acquired and equipped of the two existing fields under general law providing for the disposition of real estate belonging to the War Department, so that this is but carrying out a policy and program already definitely and precisely outlined by the Congress.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. There is one amendment here that proposes $1,000,000 for officers' quarters. Is that for the flying field?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; at the new primary flying school at San Antonio, Tex., the consolidated field. There will be $1,000,000 worth of quarters there, because the two fields are to be consolidated, and the largest aggregation of teaching and student force for this most powerful agency of modern science will all be assembled there near San Antonio, Tex. So that that item, like the other item——

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. WURZBACH. It is a fact, is it not, that the item providing for a primary flying field at San Antonio not only passed the last Congress but passed the House of Representatives without a dissenting vote and was reported by this committee at this session by a full committee, I think 17 members being present, and was unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes. In other words, that amendment just offered here, having been reported twice by the committee, was passed by this House at the last session. It would have passed the Senate but for the squeeze and jam which took place in the Senate in the dying days of the last Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was first introduced by the War Department, by our friend from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], on December 12, 1927, it carried an authorization of $2,407,716. It is presumed that our friend introduced the bill just as the department wanted it at that time. Between that day, December 12, 1927, and the day that the committee met, on December 21, 1927, something happened that caused our friend and his committee to raise this authorization by about $2,000,000; because, instead of the bill now carrying $2,407,716, by amendment of the committee it now carries $4,283,716.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understood that the gentleman's criticism of the committee a little while ago was because they were following the recommendations of the department. Now, I understand that the gentleman is criticizing them because they are not following the recommendation of the department.

Mr. BLANTON. They are. If the gentleman will look over this carefully he will see a good deal of sop in it, a good many handouts in it, a good many parcels of bacon in it. It has been moved to suspend the rules and pass this bill. It can be amended in no particular. It must be accepted just as it is. I am against passing important bills in this manner when we can not amend them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. I will yield time to the gentleman later if he wants to speak. In the main, I am for the bill. But we should not pass it under suspension of rules, with only 20 minutes' debate, and when we can not amend it in any particular.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman realize that aviation is a very fast matter and even the department can not keep up with it?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I realize that aviation is the strongest arm of our national defense. I am one of those who would give everything reasonable and necessary to equip our Nation with the strongest possible Air Corps that is necessary. But I was very much impressed with the testimony which Col. Billy Mitchell gave before the President's special aircraft committee, whose sessions I attended regularly, because they met in vacation and I was able to attend. I was convinced that Billy Mitchell was right when he contended for a unified air service; when he contended that all of our air forces should be coordinated under one department; when he contended we would get a better one for every single branch of our service, with all waste, extravagance, and duplication eliminated. But as it is, you have a special Air Corps in the Army, and another special Air Corps in the Navy, another one for the marines, one for the Coast Guard, and another special air corps in the Department of Commerce, and another special commercial air corps which is employed to carry our United States mail.

Oh, this House took a step in the right direction to-day when it passed a bill without anybody objecting to it, when it provided for a coordinate committee to be composed of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Commerce and the Postmaster General as a purchasing committee to buy all of our air equipment. That was a proper step—a step in the right direction; and I was hopeful then that it might lead to one department of national defense, with an Army corps and a Navy branch and an air corps; where there might be one head; where duplication could be eliminated; where waste and expense and extravagance would be avoided.

But we are to go on and on. What is a double raise in this bill to the Military Committee or to the Army? Nothing; a mere bagatelle. They first come in and ask for $2,000,000; and now we give them $4,000,000, because we have got to put enough in this bill to make it attractive to everybody.

You have got to spend much money down in San Antonio to get HARRY in line, and if there is anything on earth that will get HARRY in line it will be for you to spend money around San Antonio. I am for those buildings and expenditures down there, HARRY, just as you are. They are just as much my fields as they are yours. I want to see them developed just as you do. But if it is necessary to spend only $2,000,000 to do it, it is a waste of public money when you spend $4,000,000 to do it, and if by having one department of national defense, with a united air corps, we could save half of all the money were are now spending in the four different air services; it is our duty in this Congress, in behalf of the taxpayers, to consolidate these forces and quit wasting this money.

I went down there at Christmas time to my friend's district. I went out to these fields. I saw some awfully nice, attractive homes out there already, HARRY, for our officers in the Air Service; attractive homes, with modern conveniences, if you please.

Mr. JAMES. There is not a permanent building out there.

Mr. BLANTON. They are not built out of vitrified brick, but they are better homes than half the people in San Antonio live in. HARRY will not deny that. They are better than half the people in San Antonio live in, and San Antonio is one of the splendid cities of this country. It is one of the leading cities of my State. If I had to pick a new home in Texas, I do not know of a place to which I would rather go than San Antonio. Why, at Christmas, during the holidays, when I was there, I saw all of the finest vegetables in the land on that market. But what are we going to do, I ask my colleagues in conclusion? Are we just going to keep on and on and not take a stand? I hope that before this Congress adjourns there will be passed a constructive measure that will create one department of national defense, and it will save us $100,000,000 a year, in my judgment.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH].

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to follow the example of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and submit this case without argument. I listened very attentively to the remarks of the gentleman, and I did not find a single reason given why this legislation should not pass. He does not seem to attack any part of this bill except the amendment providing for the primary flying field at San Antonio.

With reference to the amendment about which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] complains—that is, the primary flying field—let me state that that legislation passed this House in the last Congress. It failed in the Senate Military Affairs Committee, because at that time San Antonio did not have the land upon which the improvements were to be erected. Since then the city of San Antonio has donated and has now in the bank $500,000, which will be given to the Government for this new flying field. Options have been delivered and deeds will be executed just as soon as this legislation passes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Is it a condition for the location of this flying field there that the locality shall donate the land?

Mr. WURZBACH. That is the understanding. The condition is that the money is to be raised and placed on deposit in San Antonio banks for the purchase of this flying field of 2,400 acres of land. As stated before, that condition has been fully complied with.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WURZBACH. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. What does the gentleman estimate to be the reasonable value of the land which is authorized to be sold?

Mr. WURZBACH. I know, as a matter of fact, that they are paying from $200 to $250 an acre for the land; and I have heard it stated by officers in the Air Service that it is the most ideal location for such a flying school and field as is contemplated by the pending bill that could be found in the entire United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three minutes so that he may answer a question. When this bill was introduced on December 7 it carried $2,400,000?

Mr. WURZBACH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That embraced the items for the gentleman's services at San Antonio?

Mr. WURZBACH. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. Except what?

Mr. WURZBACH. Except the flying field. It did not include the very items the gentleman is complaining about. They were not included in H. R. 7009. The amendment which was offered by myself provides for the new primary flying school and field and is in the exact language of the bill I had introduced in this Congress and the identical language of the bill that passed this House in the last Congress, known as the Army housing bill.

Mr. BLANTON. It carried how much?

Mr. WURZBACH. It carried exactly the same sum provided for in this bill, $1,876,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman checked this bill up to see whether or not there is any waste in it; that is, as to the other items outside of San Antonio?

Mr. WURZBACH. Oh, yes. I have given it the usual investigation.

Mr. BLANTON. The usual investigation is just the once over and just glancing at the bill for the purpose of getting some idea about it.

Mr. WURZBACH. I am very glad to say that the Military Affairs Committee of this House is beginning to exercise some of its constitutional powers. It is authorizing legislation and not leaving that entirely to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my friend from San Antonio that in his remarks a while ago he said something about how the people of San Antonio voted.

Mr. WURZBACH. I did not say anything about how they voted.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of the biggest taxpayers in the United States live in San Antonio, and they want their Congress to be careful about their expenditures, because they know that every million dollars we expend is going to have to be raised in taxation out of the pockets of the people.

Mr. WURZBACH. I understand that, and they generally depend on me to look out for that.

Mr. BLANTON. And usually their confidence is not misplaced.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself three minutes.

Gentlemen, the Committee on Military Affairs is not interested in politics in Texas, and we do not have on our committee any Democrats or any Republicans. We are not interested in partisanship.

There is not a single item in this bill that has not been submitted by the Air Service to the War Department and by the War Department submitted to the Director of the Budget. The Director of the Budget has sent up the exact amount to the Committee on Appropriations to be reported out by that Committee. General Fechet has stated:

> The items of technical construction contained in H. R. 7009 correspond, with the exception of the Middletown air depot and Maxwell Field, Ala., to the item pertaining to the various air corps stations now carried in the 1929 estimates.

The reason the Wurzbach amendment, so-called, was put in, was because last year we had in the housing bill recommended by the Director of the Budget, $1,876,000 for a new primary field at San Antonio. I talked with the Director of the Budget about it. It passed the House unanimously. It went over to the Senate and they found we did not own the land at San Antonio and it was stricken out of the bill. When I was down there in September I told the people down there that the chances were the House would not authorize $300,000 to purchase any land down there, and that even if the House did, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] would not let it get out of the Committee on Appropriations, and told them the best thing they could do was to raise the money to buy the land.

A delegation came up to Washington and saw the Secretary of War, saw the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]—I do not know whether they saw the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] or not—and they said that if we would put that $1,876,000 in the bill, they would go back home and raise the money. A day or so after we reported out the bill I had a telegram to the effect that they had raised $500,000 to buy the land. Thereupon I talked with the Director of the Budget and with General Fechet and the amendments offered here to-day, selling the other two fields and accepting the land, were worked out by the Director of the Budget.

So there is not a single item here that has not been approved by the Director of the Budget.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. BLANTON. I only care to use three minutes of that time and I yield back the balance of my time.

I have not said one single word here against a single item in this bill; not one, and my colleague knows it. Every item may be just and proper. My whole argument was against passing bills under suspension of the rules when we can not amend them, and for the establishing of one department of national defense, and my colleague knows that.

Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. WURZBACH rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Is my colleague, since he has asked me some questions, against a department of national defense?

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas if the gentleman wants to answer me.

Mr. WURZBACH. I do not think that is really the matter that is worrying the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it is. That is the sole matter that is worrying the gentleman.

Mr. WURZBACH. I will make the statement I will not incorporate the remarks I made about the gentleman. I will keep them out of my remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. Usually my friend does not straddle the fence, but I want to say that my whole purpose here was to try to get the Congress to take some action in behalf of a department of national defense and coordinate all of our military activities and avoid waste and extravagance.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope the gentleman will not let what has been said about the senatorship cause him to shift his position.

Mr. BLANTON. Not a bit in the world. If I go to San Antonio, I will state to my friend, on the hustings I will do there just like I do here and everywhere else—I will meet all comers.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am in sympathy with the position that the gentleman not only now takes but has taken so frequently, to hold down expenditures; and at San Antonio there has been one unwise expenditure which even the gentleman who represents the San Antonio district will admit.

Mr. BLANTON. I doubt it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And that is the building of a hangar there that stands out now, perhaps, as a monument to extravagance. It may never be used. I understand it cost about $1,000,000.

Mr. WURZBACH. I think that was built before I was a Member of the Congress.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Nevertheless, it shows a very reckless expenditure of money; and I understand it may never be used.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague (Mr. WURZBACH) will not admit it was unnecessary; however much it may have cost, or however little it may be used.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. I want to say to my friend from Texas that I was 1 of 10 in the committee who was strongly in favor of a department of national defense at the last time the matter was up. We were defeated by 11 to 10. We hope this time to get the bill out.

Mr. BLANTON. Then my argument has not been in vain. If we can create in this Congress one department of national defense, and abolish the War Department and the Navy Department, and coordinate all of our forces under one head, we will save a hundred million dollars each year for the people.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT OR NEAR LITTLE FALLS, MINN.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 194) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Morrison, State of Minnesota, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the southeast corner of lot 3, section 34, township 41 north, range 32 west.

"That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the States of New York and Vermont, their successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is located, upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property in such State.

"SEC. 3. The said States of New York and Vermont, their successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

"SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ALLEGHENY RIVER, PA.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to No. 18 on the calendar, bill H. R. 6041. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. BLANTON. What is that?

Mr. DENISON. A bridge bill, No. H. R. 6041.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Oil City, county of Venango, State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise is hereby authorized to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to make corrections in the text. The word "the" before the word "Pennsylvania," should begin with a capital letter. I ask that the Clerk be authorized to make this change also in the title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

RECOVERY OF BODIES OF OFFICERS, SOLDIERS, AND CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 230) to authorize an appropriation for the recovery of bodies of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in the War Department annual appropriation acts under the subtitle "Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees," such sum as may be necessary to pay the expenses incident to the recovery of bodies of officers; cadets, United States Military Academy; acting assistant surgeons, members of the Army Nurse Corps, warrant officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The form of the bill seems hardly correct. It specifies that these appropriations must be carried in the annual Army bill, and so forth. There might be a time when money for this fund might be suggested for a deficiency bill, so I suggest the striking out of certain language.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Beginning in line 4, after the word "appropriated," strike out the words "in the War Department annual appropriation acts under the subtitle 'Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. There are a number of bills on this calendar which should be considered to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. But this is only January. There is plenty of time.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman wishes to take the responsibility for taking the time and causing the inconvenience to the Members——

Mr. BLANTON (interposing). I will take the responsibility. I work as hard as anybody here.

Mr. TILSON. It is not half past 4 as yet.

Mr. BLANTON. How much does it lack of being half past 4?

Mr. TILSON. It is not half past 4 as yet.

Mr. BLANTON. It lacks one minute of being half past 4, and it will be dark in 30 minutes, and we yet have all of our office mail to sign.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will let us run until 5 o'clock, as we usually do, he will save himself and others a good deal of time. I hope the gentleman will be reasonable, because we must go further with this calendar before we adjourn.

Mr. BLANTON. The floor leader is responsible if he has a roll call, but he should not want a few of us to stay here and work ourselves to death.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman can be excused any time he wishes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order and let us have a roll call.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has that right; but he will accomplish nothing by it except to cause inconvenience to many Members and waste time.

Mr. BLANTON. I work here on the floor as hard as anybody, and a lot of times I am on the floor when the floor leader is in his office or somewhere else. The floor leader knows how hard a few of us work on these bills, and I am not going to work myself down on them. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and seventy-seven Members have answered present; a quorum.

On motion of Mr. TILSON, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

DISPOSITION OF REMAINS OF MILITARY PERSONNEL AND CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF THE ARMY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 248) to authorize appropriations to be made for the disposition of remains of military personnel and civilian employees of the Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BATTLE FIELDS OF BRICES CROSS ROADS AND TUPELO, IN MISS.

The next business on the consent calendar was the bill (H. R. 8736) to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss.

The clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the following members, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of War: (1) A commissioned officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army; (2) a veteran of the Civil War, who served honorably in the military forces of the United States; and (3) a veteran of the Civil War, who served honorably in the military forces of the Confederate States of America.

SEC. 2. In appointing the members of the commission created by section 1 of this act the Secretary of War shall, as far as practicable, select persons familiar with the terrain of the battle field of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss., and the historical events associated therewith.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the commission, acting under the direction of the Secretary of War, to inspect the battle field of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss., in order to ascertain the feasibility of preserving and marking for historical and professional military study such fields. The commission shall submit a report of its findings and an itemized statement of its expenses to the Secretary of War not later than December 1, 1928.

SEC. 4. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000, or such part thereof as may be necessary, in order to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MARKERS FOR BATTLE FIELDS OF EASTPORT AND IUKA, MISS.

The next business on the consent calendar was the bill (H. R. 8737) providing for markers for the battle fields of Eastport, Miss., and Iuka, Miss.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there any limit to the amount that may be spent?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The bill does not provide any limit. I am simply inquiring for information.

Mr. RANKIN. I will accept any amendment the gentleman wants to offer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have not the faintest idea what it ought to be, but it seems to me that good legislation would dictate some limit.

Mr. RANKIN. A similar provision has been passed with respect to all of these markers.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I think it is just as well not to have a limit. If a limit is stated, then they think they are entitled to have the full amount. If there is no amount stated, the Committee on Appropriations will try to hold them down.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to obtain and place in the Civil War battle fields of Eastport, Miss., and Iuka, Miss., located in Tishomingo County of said State, appropriate markers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of properly preserving these historic landmarks.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. As the bill now reads it would sound as if the department were authorized to take the money directly out of the Treasury. I therefore move to amend by striking out those words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Beginning in line 7, strike out the language "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. CRAMTON. The bill will then stand as an authorization merely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TO REGULATE SALES BY UTILITIES IN THE ARMY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7938) to regulate sales by utilities in the Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HIGHWAY ACROSS VANCOUVER BARRACKS MILITARY RESERVATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 172) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant and convey to the city of Vancouver a perpetual easement for public highway purposes over and upon a portion of the Vancouver Barracks Military Reservation in the State of Washington.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant and convey to the city of Vancouver, a municipal corporation of the State of Washington, a perpetual easement for the construction and maintenance of a public highway, not exceeding 60 feet in width, paralleling the Columbia River on the Vancouver Barracks Military Reservation in the State of Washington, at such location and under such conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of War, with the right to grade, fill, or otherwise build said highway above the danger of overflow of the Columbia River, to surface, pave, illuminate, lay mains, conduits, and culverts, and to make other improvements necessary for public-highway purposes: Provided, That the city of Vancouver shall perform at its own cost and expense such work as the Secretary of War may require for the protection of or to prevent interference with the use of any underground or other improvements on said reservation which may be affected by the construction and maintenance of said highway.

SEC. 2. No part of the property granted and conveyed by the Secretary of War for the purposes aforesaid shall be used for any other than highway purposes, and when said property shall cease to be so used it shall revert to the United States of America: Provided, That the United States at all times shall have the right to pass over or across said highway for gaining access to the Columbia River or for any other purpose and, in case of an emergency, may assume control of, hold, use, and occupy, temporarily or otherwise, without consent or leave from the city of Vancouver, any or all of said property and highway for any governmental purposes. And the United States shall not be or become liable for any damages or compensation whatever to the city of Vancouver for any future use by the United States for the aforesaid purposes of any or all of said property and highway.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUPERINTENDENT OF ANTIETAM BATTLE FIELD

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 227) to regulate the appointment and duties of the superintendent of the Antietam battle field.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the superintendent of the Antietam battle field, near Sharpsburg, Md., shall perform his duties under the direction of the Quartermaster Corps and shall be selected and appointed by the Secretary of War, at his discretion, the person selected for this position to have been either a commissioned officer or enlisted man who has been honorably discharged or mustered out of the military service of the United States and who may have been disabled for active field service in line of duty.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 232) to amend the act of June 7, 1924, prescribing the persons entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and the method of their admission thereto.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved June 7, 1924, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The following persons shall be entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and may be admitted thereto upon the order of a member of the Board of Managers, namely: Honorably discharged officers, soldiers, sailors, or marines, including women commissioned or enlisted, and male and female Army and Navy nurses under commission, enlistment, or contract since April 21, 1898, who served in the regular, volunteer, or other forces of the United States, or in the Organized Militia or National Guard when called into Federal service, and who are disabled by disease or wounds and who have no adequate means of support, and by reason of such disability are either temporarily or permanently incapacitated from earning a living."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 3, strike out the words "male and female".

Page 2, line 4, insert after the word "enlistment" the words "appointment, assignment."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8550), to amend the national defense act.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That "for the conduct of the annual competition known as the national matches and for the purpose of furnishing a national trophy, medals, and other prizes, to be provided and contested for, which competition shall be held annually, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, said competition to be open to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the National Guard, or Organized Militia, of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, members of rifle clubs and civilians, and for the cost of trophy, prizes, medals, and all other expenditures requisite for and incident to the conduct of the annual competition and the maintenance and operation of the Small Arms Firing School connected therewith, and a sum necessary for the above-named purposes is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually as a part of the total sum appropriated for national defense; and for the promotion of rifle practice throughout the United States, including the reimbursement of necessary expense of members of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice to be expended for the purpose hereinbefore prescribed, under the direction of the Secretary of War, the sum of $7,500 is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually: Provided, That no competitor shall be entitled to commutation of rations in excess of $1.50 per day, and when meals are furnished no greater expense than that sum per man per day for the period the contest is in progress."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 2, after the word "assembled," insert the following: "That the act entitled 'An act for the promotion of rifle practice throughout the United States, approved February, 14, 1927 (U. S. Stat. 44–1095),' which adds an additional paragraph to section 113 of the national defense act, is hereby amended to read as follows."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, before the figures "$7,500," insert the words "not more than."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF OKANOGAN IRRIGATION PROJECT, STATE OF WASHINGTON

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1661) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to transfer the Okanogan project, in the State of Washington, to the Okanogan irrigation district upon payment of charges stated.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHINESE SUBJECTS AT WEST POINT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 39) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive, for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, two Chinese subjects, to be designated hereafter by the Government of China.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

TWO SIAMESE SUBJECTS AT WEST POINT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 50) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive, for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, two Siamese subjects, to be designated hereafter by the Government of Siam.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE, SIXTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8229) for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the sixth judicial circuit.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. It is rather late, and possibly the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] may have a dinner engagement.

Mr. DYER. I wanted to state that this legislation is recommended not only by the Attorney General but by the judges who have to do with making recommendations as provided by law for additional judges.

Mr. BLANTON. Was it Attorney General Daugherty who made the recommendation?

Mr. DYER. No; it was made by the present Attorney General and approved by the commission of judges headed by the Chief Justice, Mr. Taft.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the objection.

AMENDING CODE OF LAW, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CLERK'S FEES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9020) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

STENOGRAPHERS IN UNITED STATES COURTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9024) to authorize the appointment of stenographers in the courts of the United States and to fix their duties and compensation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without objection.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I have no objection to its retaining its place on the calendar.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request with respect to the two previous bills that were objected to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the two bills just objected to and the one now under consideration be passed over and retain their place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MARSHAL'S FEE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9026) to amend section 1112 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 1112 of the act of March 3, 1901, chapter 854, entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1112. Marshal's fees: For each return on any warrant, attachment, summons, capias, or other writ (except execution, venire, or a summons or subpœna for a witness), whether or not service has been made, $1 for each person: Provided, however, That for the return on any citation, summons, notice, or rule issued by the probate court the fee shall be 50 cents for each person."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUNISHMENT OF ESCAPING CRIMINALS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9021) providing for the punishment of persons escaping from Federal penal or correctional institutions, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That if any person convicted of an offense against Federal statutes, committed to any Federal penal or correctional institution, or any State, county, or other institution, designated as a place for the incarceration of Federal prisoners or being conveyed to or from such institution, shall break such prison and escape therefrom or shall escape from the custody of any official or employee conveying such person to or from such institution or shall escape from or leave without due authority any building, camp, farm, garden, city, town, road, street, or any place whatsoever in which such person is placed or to which such person is directed or permitted to go or in which such person is allowed to be by the warden or any other officer or employee of the prison, whether inside or outside of the prison walls or grounds, such person shall be deemed guilty of an escape and shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment for a term not to exceed five years, to commence from and after the expiration of the term of previous sentence: Provided, That in order to constitute an escape under the provisions of this act it is not necessary that the prisoner be within any walls or inclosure nor that there shall be any actual breaking nor that such prisoner be in the presence or actual custody of any officer or other person.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

APPROVAL OF MARSHALS' VOUCHERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9051) to amend section 1 of the act of February 22, 1875, entitled "An act regulating fees and costs, and for other purposes."

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. DYER. This bill is asked especially by the Comptroller General in order to facilitate the keeping straight of the marshals' accounts.

Mr. BLANTON. What good reason is there for not rendering all accounts monthly, instead of quarterly?

Mr. DYER. They render their accounts to the Attorney General.

Mr. BLANTON. Why do they not want to render them monthly as the law requires? Why do they want to render them quarterly?

Mr. DYER. This is recommended by the Attorney General. It passed the House at the last session without objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 234) to amend section 47d of the national defense act as amended, so as to authorize an allowance of 1 cent a mile for subsistence of candidates in going to and returning from camp.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 47d of the national defense act, as amended by the act approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. p. 779), be, and the same is, further amended by inserting between the words "mile" and "for" in the fourteenth line of said section 47d the following language, to wit:

"Or, at the option of the Secretary of War, transportation in kind may be furnished, and in addition thereto candidates may be paid a subsistence allowance at the rate of 1 cent a mile within such limits as to territory as the Secretary of War may prescribe."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 244) to enable members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps who have interrupted the course of training prescribed in the act of June 4, 1920, to resume such training and amended accordingly section 47 of that act.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 47c of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following additional proviso:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to require that the advanced training provided for herein shall follow without interruption upon the completion of the two years' elective or compulsory course of military training prescribed in section 40 of this act or to require that such advanced training be pursued without interruption after it has been commenced in those cases where the person selected for advanced training at any institution will, under the rules and regulations thereof, normally require in order to be graduated therefrom a period of sufficient duration after any interruption to complete the advanced course without curtailment."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the remaining bills have not been on the calendar here the requisite number of days. Therefore the calendar having been completed, unless there is a unanimous-consent request I shall move that the House do now adjourn.

PERMISSION FOR A COMMITTEE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary or its subcommittees during the present session of Congress may hold hearings at any time that will not interfere with the meetings of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary and its subcommittees may hold public hearings during the sessions of the House.

Mr. DYER. Public hearings only during the time when the House is in session. We have several public hearings set for to-morrow, and there are a number of gentlemen who are coming here from out of town.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it for the next few days only?

Mr. DYER. I make it as a general request.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I shall not object to limiting it; I shall not object at all if the gentleman is making this request at the order of the committee; but unless it is at the order of the committee, I am not sure. Some members of some of the committees have spoken to me and objected to certain committees holding sessions during the sittings of the House.

Mr. DYER. I will limit it to the present week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that during the present week the Committee on the Judiciary or any subcommittee thereof may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 17, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, January 17, 1928

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, who knowest our downsittings and our uprisings, who understandest our thoughts long before, send us forth to our labor with the panoply of Thy love. Make us to be like unto Him who came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life for the world. Imbue us each day with a deeper sense of obligation, a tender pity for those who toil and weep, a noble impatience with the wrong, a reverent approval of the right. Reveal Thyself in every duty of the day and make every common task to glow with the beauty of Thy touch. For the sake of Him who loves us to the uttermost, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

TAX REFUNDS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 110) which I introduced on last Saturday. If it leads to any debate I shall not press it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 110) submitted by Mr. HEFLIN on the 14th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate a list, by States, of the names of people to whom taxes have been refunded, and the amount so refunded in each case, in the last refund of taxes made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator let the matter go over? I thought I had brought from my office a letter from the department with reference to it, but I find that I do not have it here. I have no desire to delay the resolution but would like to have the letter here when it is considered.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well; I am willing that it shall go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, in behalf of the special committee appointed to investigate campaign expenditures and subsequently directed to grant hearings to FRANK L. SMITH, of Illinois, I present at this time, as a matter of high privilege, the report of the committee (No. 92), together with a resolution (S. Res. 112) touching the matter in controversy. The report proper—that is, the report as to the facts—is concurred in by all the members of the committee who were present at the hearing. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], being ill and unable to be present, is still unable to take part in any matter concerning the resolution.

The resolution which is attached to and is made a part of the report is offered by myself, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I ask that the report may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the report (No. 92), as follows:

SENATORIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. REED of Missouri, from the Special Committee Investigating Expenditures in Senatorial Primary and General Elections, submitted the following report (No. 92) pursuant to Senate Resolution 1:

THE CASE OF FRANK L. SMITH

The special committee appointed pursuant to Senate Resolution 195, Sixty-ninth Congress, and the various resolutions supplementary thereto, to whom Senate Resolution 1, Seventieth Congress, first session, was referred, respectfully reports on the case of FRANK L. SMITH, as follows:

That heretofore, to wit, on the 16th day of December, 1926, said committee reported its proceedings touching the primary in Illinois at which the said FRANK L. SMITH was nominated as a candidate of the Republican Party for the United States Senate. Said report is hereby incorporated by reference.

Your committee begs to report that after the passage of Senate Resolution 1, Seventieth Congress, first session, the following proceedings were had:

On the 13th day of December, 1927, the committee sent to Mr. FRANK L. SMITH the following telegram:

"The special committee at its meeting this morning agreed to take up and consider your case at the earliest possible time in which you are prepared to proceed. The committee suggests and would like to hold its meeting beginning Friday, December 16. If you can be ready on that date, please wire immediately to that effect. If this is not possible, then indicate at once the earliest possible date when you can be in readiness. In this connection the committee will accord you every privilege to submit such evidence, produce such witnesses as you desire, and will be pleased to hear any statement which you may care to make either in person or by counsel. The committee will also accord you the full privilege of representation by counsel. Your earliest possible reply is solicited."

On December 14 the committee received from Mr. SMITH his reply to the foregoing telegram, said reply being as follows:

"I have for acknowledgment your telegram of yesterday indicating the special committee of the United States Senate to which my right to take the oath of office as Senator elect has been referred would consider my case first and suggesting Friday of this week or an early convenient date thereafter. It will not be possible for me to make appearance the 16th, as time is too short. It is generally understood that Congress will recess early next week for the holidays, and with this in view may I suggest a day be fixed agreeable to your committee for my appearance immediately after the holiday recess. Your advice as to the day appointed with these suggestions in mind will be appreciated. Please answer Dwight, Ill."

Upon receipt of Mr. SMITH'S telegram the committee again held a meeting, and in accordance with the instructions of the committee a telegram, dated December 17, 1927, was sent by the chairman of the committee to Mr. SMITH, which reads as follows:

"In accordance with the decision of the special committee I hereby notify you that in accordance with your request that a date be fixed after the holidays a hearing will be held at 10 o'clock January 7, 1928, in order that you may be heard in the manner stated to you in committee telegram dated December 13."

Accordingly, on January 7, 1928, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., the committee assembled to conduct the said hearings, at which time proceedings were had and evidence taken, all of which is set out in extenso in the document hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A," and made a part of your committee's report.

At said hearing of your committee the following appearances were made:

Mr. FRANK L. SMITH appeared in person and by his attorney, Hon. C. J. Doyle.

Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom appeared for the State of Illinois.

A delegation on the constitutional rights of Illinois also appeared, and was represented by State Senator John Dailey as chairman. The president of the Illinois Senate, Hon. Richard T. Barr; Hon. Robert Scholes, speaker of the House of Representatives of Illinois; Representatives Reed F. Cutler and Gus J. Johnson of the House of Representatives of Illinois, members.

These gentlemen were also accompanied by United States Senator CHARLES F. DENEEN.

Hon. C. J. Doyle stated to the committee the order of procedure which it was desired should be followed, and in accordance with his suggestion the proceedings were so conducted.

Mr. Samuel Insull and his counsel, Mr. Daniel J. Schuyler, appeared and gave testimony, which in general was confined to those phases of their former examination in which they had declined to answer the questions of the committee. The testimony of these witnesses will be detailed more fully in a separate report. For the present it is thought sufficient to state that their evidence, so far as direcly pertinent to this report, was to the effect that Mr. Insull had by the hand of Mr. Schuyler delivered to Mr. Charles F. Francis for the Small-Lundin organization $20,000 in cash; that Francis had charge of the publicity work of the Small-Lundin faction. That faction was understood to be supporting Senator SMITH, but that they also had a candidate for sheriff, and that the candidate for sheriff was running with a group of other men that the same organization was supporting.

Mr. Insull also contributed $20,000 to Mr. George F. Harding for the so-called Harding organization. This was paid in cash by hand of Mr. Schuyler; that Mr. Harding was an important man in certain wards in Chicago, particularly the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh wards; that he was understood to be supporting SMITH and a group of candidates, and that the money was turned over to Harding to help him in his fight for his group of candidates; that the reason the witnesses had refused in their previous examinations before the committee to disclose the persons to whom these moneys were paid was because Francis and Harding had told Schuyler that they did not want him to mention their names and did not want Mr. Insull to mention their names, because they were not in the senatorial campaign and had not been interested in it and did not want to be mixed up in it. Nevertheless, Witness Schuyler stated that he understood that they were supporting a group or groups of candidates which embraced Mr. SMITH as a candidate for nomination to the Senate.

At the conclusion of the testimony of Mr. Schuyler, the attorney general of Illinois, the representatives of the general assembly, Senator John Dailey, and Mr. SMITH in person addressed the committee. No evidence whatever was furnished. The protest of the General Assembly of Illinois, which has already received the attention of the Senate and been printed in the record, was formally presented to the committee.

The attorney general of Illinois, State Senator Dailey, and Mr. SMITH all took the position that until and unless Mr. SMITH was sworn in as a United States Senator, neither the special committee nor any regular committee of the Senate, nor the Senate itself, had the power or jurisdiction to pass upon the qualifications of Mr. SMITH, or to take any action whatsoever in relation to his claim to a seat.

The arguments presented by these gentlemen all appear in the transcript of the proceedings, which is herewith filed.

It will be observed that nothing was presented by Mr. SMITH or on his behalf which has not in substance been heretofore presented upon the floor of the Senate. He offered no new evidence; he presented no new argument; he simply stood upon the claim that the committee and the Senate were alike without jurisdiction to consider and pass upon his right to a seat in the Senate until it shall have first seated him as a Senator.

Your committee, having complied with the instructions contained in Senate Resolution 1, Seventieth Congress, first session, respectfully presents and recommends the passage of the attached resolution, being in substance and effect the resolution offered by the senior Senator from Nebraska, Mr. NORRIS, on the 5th day of December, 1927, and incorporated in and being a part of Senate Resolution 1, which said resolution was by the Senate approved on the 7th day of December, 1927. There is omitted from said resolution the clause instructing this committee to grant further hearings, and there is added to the resolution a further clause relating to the right of the said FRANK L. SMITH to membership in the Senate, all of which appears from the text of said resolution which is by your committee respectfully recommended for passage:

RESOLUTION 112

Whereas on the 17th day of May, 1926, the Senate passed a resolution creating a special committee to investigate and determine the improper use of money to promote the nomination or election of persons to the United States Senate, and the employment of certain other corrupt and unlawful means to secure such nomination or election.

Whereas said committee in the discharge of its duties notified FRANK L. SMITH, of Illinois, then a candidate for the United States Senate from that State, of its proceeding, and the said FRANK L. SMITH appeared in person and was permitted to counsel with and be represented by his attorneys and agents.

Whereas the said committee has reported—

That the evidence without substantial dispute shows that there was expended directly or indirectly for and on behalf of the candidacy of the said FRANK L. SMITH for the United States Senate the sum of $458,782; that all of the above sum except $171,500 was contributed directly to and received by the personal agent and representative of the said FRANK L. SMITH with his full knowledge and consent; and that of the total sum aforesaid there was contributed by officers of large public-service institutions doing business in the State of Illinois or by said institutions the sum of $203,000, a substantial part of which sum was contributed by men who were nonresidents of Illinois, but who were officers of Illinois public-service corporations.

That at all of the times aforesaid the said FRANK L. SMITH was chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission, and that said public-service corporations commonly and generally had business before said commission, and said commission was, among other things, empowered to regulate the rates, charges, and business of said corporations.

That by the statutes of Illinois it is made a misdemeanor for any officer or agent of such public-service corporations to contribute any money to any member of said commission, or for any member of said commission to accept such moneys upon penalty of removal from office.

That said SMITH has in no manner controverted the truth of the foregoing facts, although full and complete opportunity was given to him, not only to present evidence but arguments in his behalf; and

Whereas the said official report of said committee and the sworn evidence is now and for many months has been on file with the Senate, and all of the said facts appear without substantial dispute: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the acceptance and expenditure of the various sums of money aforesaid in behalf of the candidacy of the said FRANK L. SMITH is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of free government, and taints with fraud and corruption the credentials for a seat in the Senate presented by the said FRANK L. SMITH; and be it further

Resolved, That the said FRANK L. SMITH is not entitled to take the oath of office and is not entitled to membership in the Senate of the United States, and that a vacancy exists in the representation of the State of Illinois in the United States Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I presume that members of the committee and those who are more familiar with the facts and arguments, and so forth, are ready to proceed with the discussion; but I should like to know whether it is the purpose of those having in charge the resolution to have a vote on it to-day?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I have had some talk with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN], who tells me that he is ready to proceed on behalf of Mr. SMITH, and I understand also that Mr. SMITH has been notified and that he is agreeable to having this matter proceed at once. I should like to know if that is certainly the case. I make that inquiry of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DENEEN. That is the case, as I understand.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I want to be particular about it, because the Senate has accorded Mr. SMITH the right to be present on the floor and to say whatever he may see fit to present to the Senate; but if it is clearly understood that he does not desire to be present, then we are ready, so far as the committee is concerned, to proceed at once.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to have sufficient time to examine the hearings and the arguments at the last hearings, and it is impossible to do that without some little time. I should not want to postpone the resolution over to-morrow, but I should like to have it go over to-day after those who are prepared to speak have spoken.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the report is printed; and in so far as the evidence is concerned, as is stated in the report, Mr. SMITH declined to produce any evidence, and no evidence was produced. The committee received the testimony of Mr. Insull and his attorney, Mr. Schuyler, in answer to certain questions that they had previously declined to answer. The substance of their testimony is reported. It simply was to the effect that Mr. Insull had given two sums of $20,000 each to two gentlemen who were concerned in the political campaign at the time as managers or members of organizations, and that this money had been expended in the interest of a group of candidates of whom Mr. SMITH was one.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I know in a general way about that, and I am not particularly concerned about it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Let me proceed. That brings us back to the question, then, of what was presented on behalf of Mr. SMITH. That is contained in the arguments of the gentlemen mentioned in the report—the attorney general of Illinois, a representative of the General Assembly of Illinois, and the statement of Mr. SMITH. It is all set out in the report, and I think all together embraces five pages. The Senator can read it in a few minutes.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; perhaps I can read it in a few minutes, but I should like to have a little more time to consider the effect of it. Of course, if the committee insists on proceeding, I can only acquiesce in the program; but I should like it very much if the matter would not be voted on until to-morrow.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Idaho that what he says is wholly beside the mark. The tumbrel is at the door; the guillotine has been greased for use. Why delay the execution?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is one feature of this matter in which I am very deeply interested; and in the light of the present situation, and as the matter is now presented, I should like indeed to have an opportunity to examine it a little further before I make up my mind what I shall do. I say, however, that I am at the disposal of the committee.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not want to be understood as trying to force any proposition connected with this case to a vote at any inopportune time. The fact is that it has been generally regarded that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] in a way was the spokesman for Mr. SMITH, and for several days this evidence has been presented and been in the hands of the Senate, and Senator DENEEN several times has expressed a desire to dispose of the matter. Action was delayed for two or three days, I presume I might say, because I was partially ill and unable to be at the Senate.

I want to accommodate the Senator from Idaho, of course. I want, however, to have in consideration the desire of the Senate and also the desire of Senator DENEEN, and I do not want to be in the position of forcing action; but I had assumed that it was rather generally understood that this matter would be taken up to-day, and I announced on yesterday that it would be called up this morning.

I do not know what I can say further in regard to the matter; but I do not want to be in the position of forcing a vote at any time when the Members are not ready to vote.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am interested in this matter wholly aside from Mr. SMITH. So far as the first part of the resolution is concerned, I am entirely in accord with the committee. It is the second paragraph of the resolution in which I am interested. I am not interested because of Mr. SMITH's interest in this seat, but for a wholly different reason. I do not think anything will be lost by having the matter go over a day, but I shall try to be prepared when the time comes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I am not interested at all in the personality of Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, but I am very profoundly and deeply interested in the rights of States. I think that this subject should be further considered, and I should be very glad to listen to the views of the Senator from Idaho, and it may be that I shall be moved to add a word or two. I am deeply interested, not in personalities, but in the right of Illinois to be represented by two Senators chosen by the free men and women of that State. I am interested in the right of every State in this Union to have Senators seated here, sworn in here when they come with credentials which upon their face speak verity. Therefore I do hope that while we may proceed to-day with some arguments on the matter, the vote shall not be pressed until to-morrow.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield until I make a suggestion?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that we proceed with this matter until the speeches which are ready to be delivered to-day have been made, and that at the conclusion of the business to-day we take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. Then we can finish up the matter very easily, and save two hours for debate in the morning.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I have no objection to any method that will allow every Member of the Senate the fullest opportunity to speak—a right which they, of course, always have at all times except when cloture is applied, and that is not going to be applied to this resolution. I am also willing that they shall have time to read the evidence if they have not read it; and I think the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas is a very satisfactory one, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, under the provisions of Senate Resolution No. 195, agreed to May 17, calendar day May 19, 1926, a special committee was appointed to consider and investigate expenses in primary and senatorial elections. The committee has submitted several reports and is now submitting, as I understand, its final report in the case of FRANK L. SMITH, Senator elect from Illinois.

The committee was not directed or required to make findings or submit conclusions, but to ascertain the facts in connection with expenditures in primary and senatorial elections. That interpretation, as I understand, was placed upon the resolution by the committee at its hearings on Saturday, January 7, 1928.

I subscribe to the special and final report herewith submitted by the majority of the committee, except that part which refers to the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and also the final resolution contained in the report. I did not sign the report, Mr. President, and am not in accord with the parts of it to which I have just referred.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, at the hearing before the special committee of the Senate on January 7, 1928, FRANK L. SMITH, Senator elect from Illinois, said:

> I can at this time do neither more nor less than to insist upon the sovereign rights of the State whose credentials I bear. That right is to have the candidate of her choice, who possesses all the constitutional qualifications, admitted to membership in this body, thereby according to my State the equal representation to which she is constitutionally entitled. When that right is granted, then I shall freely, gladly, and unafraid meet any and all charges respecting my moral or other fitness to continue a Member of this distinguished body. But unless and until the right of my State to such full, equal, and continuous representation is first accorded, I can not become a party to an unwarranted precedent nor to any pretended inquiry as to my personal fitness for association with the distinguished men now composing the Senate of the United States.

The attorney general of Illinois, the Hon. Oscar E. Carlstrom, the official spokesman of the State, said:

> We feel that we can not submit the rights of sovereignty of the State of Illinois at the present moment to this committee and recognize its jurisdiction until this Senator [Senator SMITH] has been fully accorded his rights before the bar of the Senate.

The Hon. John Dailey, member of the Illinois State Senate, presented on behalf of the committee on constitutional rights appointed by the General Assembly of Illinois in this matter resolutions in part as follows:

> Resolved, That a delegation on the constitutional rights of the State of Illinois be, and the same is hereby, created, the said delegation to consist of the speaker of the house of representatives, the president of the senate, and two members of the house of representatives to be appointed by the speaker thereof and two members of the senate to be appointed by the president of the senate on the nomination of the executive committee, and it shall be the duty of said delegation on the constitutional rights of the State of Illinois to appear before the Senate of the United States, or any of its committees or subcommittees upon the convening of said Senate and at any time thereafter, and to present to said Senate and its committees a consideration of the constitutional rights of this State, and on behalf of the people of this State respectfully to insist upon the recognition by the Senate of the United States of the constitutional right of this State to be represented in the Senate of the United States by two Senators, and that said constitutional right be recognized by the administration of the oath to the Hon. FRANK L. SMITH as United States Senator from this State.

The issue presented by the State of Illinois and by Senator-elect FRANK L. SMITH is, therefore, his right to take the oath of office before a trial upon any objections to his right to retain his seat in the Senate.

Mr. President, on January 19, 1927, and again on December 6, 1927, I discussed the precedents in the Senate regarding the administering of the oath of office to Mr. SMITH as Senator designate and Senator elect from Illinois, and on December 6, 1927, I discussed the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution for a Senator elect, and the resolution of the senior Senator from Nebraska, the concluding paragraph of which was:

> Resolved, That the said FRANK L. SMITH is not entitled to take the oath of office and is not entitled to membership in the Senate of the United States.

I shall not occupy the time or the attention of the Senate in restating matters submitted in the speeches to which I have referred. But in view of the importance of this case to the State of Illinois in the matter of its full representation in the United States Senate and of the precedent which will be established by the decision of the Senate in this matter, I wish to state briefly the contentions of my State on the facts and the law in this case:

First, at the Republican primaries for the nomination of United States Senator in Illinois, on April 13, 1926, FRANK L. SMITH received 642,023 votes and William B. McKinley received 522,771 votes. In the Democratic primaries, George E. Brennan received 201,851 votes. Mr. Brennan was unopposed. At the election of United States Senator on November 2, 1926, FRANK L. SMITH (Republican) received 842,273 votes; George E. Brennan (Democrat), 774,943 votes; Hugh S. Magill (independent Republican), 156,245 votes. No contest has been filed against FRANK L. SMITH on his nomination or election.

The hearings of the special committee were held in Chicago from July 26 to August 5, inclusive, 1926. The testimony was given wide publicity and the independent Republican candidate at the election based his candidacy and made his campaign on the testimony submitted. The testimony which the Senate has was submitted to the people of Illinois in the campaign preceding Mr. SMITH's election and was a matter of general discussion and the people passed upon it.

Will it be contended that the people of Illinois had not the legal right to elect Mr. SMITH United States Senator?

The Senate has no legal power to elect a United States Senator for Illinois. Its legal powers are limited to determining whether in fact Mr. SMITH was elected United States Senator and whether he has the qualifications prescribed in the Constitution. The Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate passed upon the credentials of Senator-elect SMITH on March 4, 1927, and reported that the certificate of his election "is in due and correct form."

There is no dispute about the legality of the election or that Mr. SMITH has the qualifications prescribed in the Federal Constitution, which are:

> No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not when elected be an inhabitant of that State from which he shall be chosen. (Art. I, sec. 3, par. 3.)

The position which the State of Illinois takes is that the United States Senate can not create any additional qualifications for a United States Senator or limit further the power of a State to elect him; that neither the Senate nor the Congress nor the States can add to the qualifications of a Senator as expressed in the Constitution of the United States; and that neither the Senate nor the Congress nor the State of Illinois, nor any other State, has prescribed any additional qualifications for United States Senator; that the pending motion attempts to add additional qualifications and by the Senate alone.

On this matter I wish to quote from the decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois in the case of People v. McCormick (vol. 261, p. 423), as follows:

> It may be true that many persons having the constitutional qualifications are wholly unfit to discharge the duties of many offices within the State, but if the legislature possesses the power to vary the constitutional qualifications for office by adding new requirements or imposing additional limitations, then eligibility to office and freedom of elections depend not upon constituitonal guaranties but upon legislative forebearance. If the legislature may alter the constitutional requirements, its power is unlimited, and only such persons may be elected to office as the legislature may permit. In our judgment, when the constitution undertakes to prescribe qualifications for office, its declaration is conclusive of the whole matter, whether in affirmative or in negative form. Eligibility to office belongs to all persons. In our constitution no other form of stating eligibility to office is found than the declaration that no person shall be eligible who does not possess certain qualifications. The Constitution of the United States is in the same form in this particular, and so are the constitutions of other States. The expression of the disabilities specified excludes others. The declaration in the constitution that certain persons are not eligible to office implies that all other persons are eligible.

But it was urged in the previous debates in this case that the Senate has the inherent power of self-defense; that otherwise a State might send to the Senate an idiot, an insane person, a leper, a man with an incurable, contagious disease, a man without moral character, or a criminal. The Senate is not without power under the Constitution to protect itself in self-defense or otherwise. Senator Philander C. Knox, on February 14, 1907, expressed the law very clearly, as follows:

If I were asked to state concisely the true theory of the Constitution upon this important point I would unhesitatingly say:

First. That the Constitution undertakes to prescribe no moral or mental qualification, and in respect to such qualifications as it does prescribe the Senate by a majority vote shall judge of their existence in each case, whether the question is raised before or after the Senator has taken his seat.

Second. That as to all matters affecting a man's moral or mental fitness the States are to be the judges in the first instance, subject, however, to the power of the Senate to reverse their judgment by a two-thirds vote of expulsion when an offense or an offensive status extends into the period of senatorial service, and such a question can only be made after the Senator has taken his seat.

If to this it is objected that it contemplates admitting a man who may be immediately expelled, I reply that it is hardly proper to adopt a rule of constitutional construction and senatorial action based upon the theory that the States will send criminals or idiots to the Senate. Besides, it does not seem to me to be conceding much to a State after it has deliberately and solemnly elected a Senator after the fullest consideration of his merits to concede on the first blush of the business the State's intelligent and honorable conduct by allowing its chosen representative admission to the body to which he is accredited.

If, therefore, Mr. SMITH took the oath of office as United States Senator and objection were made that he was disqualified, he could be expelled, but not until he had had the right to be heard as a Senator. (Art. I, sec. 5, par. 2.)

It is sought to establish a new precedent here. What will be the limitations of the power of the Senate to deny a man, by a majority vote, the right to take the oath of office as a Senator elect or designate if Mr. SMITH is denied the oath of office? Suppose the offense charged were a violation of the Volstead Act; suppose it were failing to pay taxes; or suppose the objections were directed to the question of politics or religion or race or occupation or social status of the Senator elect or designate. What are to be the limitations set to the power of the United States Senate by a mere majority vote to deny a sovereign State the right to elect its own United States Senator?

Suppose a political party or a coalition of minorities in the Senate should refuse to admit from a State a Senator who had been elected by less than a majority of its electors on the theory that the election did not represent the views of the State or that the State tolerated or approved minority government. I ask those who support the motion to refuse the oath of office to Mr. SMITH to define the limitations of the power they seek to have exerted in his case.

The procedure sought here is in fact to expel Mr. SMITH from the Senate by a majority vote before he has become a Member of this body. This is an indirect, an improper, and an unprecedented procedure.

To refuse him the oath of office means to ignore the election in Illinois. It means that a State can not elect a United States Senator without the consent and approval of the Senate. It means to subtract from the sovereignty of the State and to make the United States Senate sovereign in the matter of choosing United States Senators.

Mr. SMITH stated before the special committee that he will defend himself after taking the oath of office, should objection be made to his right to a seat in this body. He said:

I shall freely, gladly, and unafraid, meet any charges regarding my moral or other fitness to continue a Member of this distinguished body.

Mr. President, the oath of office should be administered to Senator-elect SMITH. The sovereign right of the State of Illinois to elect its United States Senator should be respected. Should objections be made in the Senate against him thereafter, let him then meet them in his own defense and in his own proper person.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. DENEEN. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the Senator's view that if one should come to the Senate with a certificate from a State showing that he is a Senator designate, he should be seated without question?

Mr. DENEEN. Yes; if he has the qualifications prescribed in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. How are we to know that he has those qualifications?

Mr. DENEEN. There is no question about that in this case.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; but the Senator was discussing the theory. Does the Senator concede that the Senate has the right to decline to let him be sworn in until it investigates whether he has the requisite qualifications?

Mr. DENEEN. If he has the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution——

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; but how would the Senate go about ascertaining that fact?

Mr. DENEEN. There is no objection on my part to any inquiry into those matters.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am talking about the theory of it. I am trying to find out what the Senator's theory is. Does the Senator concede that the Senate has the right to refuse to administer the oath until it shall make inquiry to ascertain whether he has certain qualifications?

Mr. DENEEN. Certain constitutional qualifications.

Mr. CARAWAY. It has the right then to go back of the certificate of election to ascertain whether he is a citizen of the State, whether he has attained legal age, whether he is not tainted by treason?

Mr. DENEEN. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senate has a perfect right to deny him the right to be sworn in until it has made an investigation of those facts?

Mr. DENEEN. And whether he is an inhabitant of the State.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator concedes that?

Mr. DENEEN. Yes; there is no dispute about that.

Mr. CARAWAY. In other words, the right is not absolute to be sworn in, but it depends upon whether a certain number of facts back of it entitle a man to a seat?

Mr. DENEEN. The administering of the oath of office is an administrative act. The President of the Senate has no discretion in the matter. If the Senator elect or designate has the qualifications prescribed in the Constitution and his State has elected him, he is entitled to take the oath as a matter of course.

Mr. CARAWAY. He is entitled to take the oath regardless of whether he is a citizen of that State at all or not?

Mr. DENEEN. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am trying to get the Senator's position. The Senator does concede that the Senate has the right to stand the Senator designate aside and make an independent inquiry as to certain qualifications, does he not?

Mr. DENEEN. There is no question about it. I cited precedents on that point in a former speech on January 19, 1927.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am trying to get the Senator's view. The Senate has a perfect right, then, to make inquiry as to whether he is a citizen of the State, whether he has attained legal age, whether he is a citizen of the United States, and whether he has not been convicted of treason? It has a perfect right to go back into those questions?

Mr. DENEEN. There is no question about that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, if the Senate has the right to go back of the certificate of election for any purpose, it has a right to inquire into other matters, has it not?

Mr. DENEEN. Not beyond the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution. It can not make new rules as new Senators come to the body.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator's position resolves itself into the question of what the Senate's constitutional right is, does it not?

Mr. DENEEN. The State of Illinois——

Mr. CARAWAY. No, no. Will the Senator answer my question?

Mr. DENEEN. May I answer the question in my own way?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. DENEEN. The State of Illinois has a sovereign right to elect a Senator. No other State has that right as to the State of Illinois. The Senate has a right to pass on his constitutional qualifications.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then the question is what the constitutional qualifications are?

Mr. DENEEN. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is no dispute about certain things being qualifications, but does the Senator think that no kind of immorality is pertinent to be inquired into by the Senate?

Mr. DENEEN. Not on his mere right to take the oath——

Mr. CARAWAY. Where does the difference arise? Where does the Senator ascertain that the Senate's right to inquire into his qualifications ceases? On what authority does he limit the Senate?

Mr. DENEEN. Its power is limited to an inquiry into his constitutional qualifications.

Mr. CARAWAY. Has it any more right to deal with him after he comes into the Senate than it had before he got into the Senate?

Mr. DENEEN. It has a right to expel him for disorderly behavior or, as stated by former Senator Knox, for an offense or an offensive status extending into the period of senatorial service.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator denies the right to exclude a man, no matter how corruptly he came here, for acts that transpired before he was sworn in by the Senate?

Mr. DENEEN. The Senate can make that inquiry on a motion to expel.

Mr. CARAWAY. But it has no right to expel him for acts which transpired before he became a Member, has it?

Mr. DENEEN. The State passed on that question.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I said. The Senator then does not believe it makes any difference how a man comes here, if he is ever sworn in then he is entitled to stay?

Mr. DENEEN. I do not. He may be expelled for certain offenses.

Mr. CARAWAY. But that is for conduct after he comes into the Senate.

Mr. DENEEN. The Senate can not expel him before he arrives.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know; but he has a perfect right to stay here if he gets in, unless he does something after he takes the oath of office. Is that the Senator's view?

Mr. DENEEN. I will not say as to that.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am trying to ascertain the Senator's position.

Mr. DENEEN. The authority is not clearly defined.

Mr. CARAWAY. What is the Senator's view about it?

Mr. DENEEN. I think former Senator Knox stated it clearly.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator's position is that it makes no difference how a man gets here, if there is nothing against his conduct after he becomes a Member he is entitled to stay?

Mr. DENEEN. Yes. He would be entitled to stay unless found to be disqualified.

Mr. CARAWAY. He is legally entitled to stay?

Mr. DENEEN. If he is legally admitted, he is legally entitled to stay, unless he is expelled.

Mr. CARAWAY. But for acts committed after he becomes a Member?

Mr. DENEEN. That is not the subject matter of discussion.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know; but I am trying to find out the Senator's position.

Mr. DENEEN. Many men have differed about that. The record is filled with opinions of distinguished Senators on the subject.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am trying to get the opinion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DENEEN. I am trying to cross the first bridge before I come to the second one. The only issue is whether Mr. SMITH is qualified under the Constitution to take the oath of office.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; that is not the issue here at all, and anybody that drags that in is trying to evade the real issue. The real issue is whether a man may corruptly come here and retain his seat, or corruptly obtain it and retain it. That is the issue, and there is no use talking about whether he is a citizen of Illinois, because nobody questions that.

Mr. DENEEN. On that matter, Senator-elect SMITH says he will meet the issue and meet it fully.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; I remember he said that to a committee of which I was a member; and then he did not do it.

Mr. DENEEN. That is a matter of conduct and not a matter of constitutional right.

Mr. CARAWAY. The thing we are dealing with here, and the Senator from Illinois is well aware of it, is conduct preceding the election. If the Senator contends that the Senate has no right to inquire into what happens before a man becomes a Senator, he concedes that Insull can buy both seats in Illinois and the men for whom he purchases the seats have a perfect right to be sworn in and retain their seats. Is that so?

Mr. DENEEN. May I answer the Senator's question in Yankee fashion? Will the Senator say that a man who has committed any offense or violated any law, no matter how petty, may be thrown out by the Senate when it has the votes?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I am talking about corruption. I say the Senate has a perfect right to see that a man does not purchase a seat for somebody else and put him in the Senate. Insull has no more right to buy a seat in Illinois than he has a right to buy one in Nebraska. I am asking the Senator from Illinois if he believes Insull has the right to buy both seats in Illinois and whether he would have the right to have both men seated to represent Insull through being called "Senators from Illinois"?

Mr. DENEEN. That matter would have to depend upon a hearing and not upon supposititious facts.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senate has a right to inquire into that, has it not?

Mr. DENEEN. I think the only issue is as to the constitutional qualifications in reference to taking the oath of office. That is the contention of Senator-elect SMITH and it is the contention of the Illinois Legislature and of the attorney general of Illinois.

Mr. CARAWAY. I must admit that I can not follow that line of reasoning.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. DENEEN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator's study of this matter will, of course, have apprised him of the fact that following the Civil War quite a large number of Members elect of the House of Representatives and some Members elect of the Senate had participated in the war against the Union and were, of course, guilty technically of treason. Had the Senator been a Member of this body at that time would he have voted to admit those men?

Mr. DENEEN. My answer was made on January 19, 1927. I reviewed about 40 cases and drew this conclusion:

> It will be observed that in the foregoing 16 cases the grounds for contest in 6 related to the loyalty of the Senator elect; in 7 the question related to irregularity of elections; in the case of Adelbert Ames, of Mississippi, in 1870, the contest related to inhabitancy; and in the case of Shields in Minnesota and in the Louisiana cases the objection was that there was no constitutionally organized State government.
> It appears, therefore, that in these 16 cases where the oath was denied until charges were heard by committees, the grounds of contest were the lack of the qualifications defined in section 3 of Article I of the Constitution—relating to age, citizenship in the United States, and inhabitancy—and the inhibitions under the fourteenth amendment.
> To sum up, then, the precedents establish that since the case of General Shields in 1849 the Senate has in no case denied the right of a Senator elect or designate to take the oath of office before the hearing of his case, except where the qualifications specifically defined in section 3 of Article I of the Constitution itself were involved.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator mean by that to say that the House did not exclude Members upon the sole ground that they had participated in the rebellion?

Mr. DENEEN. There were some cases after the Civil War.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is what I am asking about.

Mr. DENEEN. They exerted that power without constitutional right. On another occasion I reviewed about 40 cases and expressed my views. I did not deem it necessary at this time to review the cases which were reviewed in a former speech, nor have I discussed the law regarding the term "qualifications" in the Constitution, having done so on December 6, 1927.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I put what I thought was quite a direct question to the Senator, namely, had he been a Member of the Senate at that time when a man appeared here asking the right to take the qualifying oath and it was undisputed that he had participated in the rebellion, would the Senator have voted to have the qualifying oath administered to him?

Mr. DENEEN. I do not intend to be led away from the issue in this case by creating supposititious cases and then arguing them. The facts here are plain, and the law relating to them is plain enough.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. DENEEN. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not desire to enter into a controversy with the Senator. He has expressed his views, and I shall later express mine; but, so that I may be certain I understand his position, I want to ask him if it is the Senator's position that if an election is tainted with fraud and corruption of such a character and gravity as to determine the result, the Senate can not at some time exclude the Member?

Mr. DENEEN. There is no doubt that the Senate could on a motion to expel.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. Now, suppose that these facts of fraud and corruption were well known to the people of the State and discussed during the election, and that, nevertheless, the applicant for a seat obtained a majority, would it still be within the power of the Senate at some time to exclude the applicant?

Mr. DENEEN. As I stated, in my opinion the Senate would have the power to exclude him on a motion to expel; but if he comes with the constitutional qualifications, he has the right to take the oath and then meet objections which may be raised.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So if I understand the Senator, his position is this: If there be fraud and corruption materially affecting an election, even though that fraud and corruption may have been discussed by the people of the State during the campaign, the Senate, after having sworn the man in, has the right then to try the case, and if it determines there was material fraud and corruption, it has the right to exclude him?

Mr. DENEEN. I have replied to that question in discussing the case before us.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator thinks he has done that?

Mr. DENEEN. I think so.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So that the real questions, as I understand, that we have here to settle are, first, was there corruption or misconduct of such character as to affect materially the election and the right of the applicant to retain a seat; and, secondly, when does the Senate come into possession of the power to pass upon that question? The contention of the Senator from Illinois in this case is limited to the one matter, namely, that the Senate can not at this time and prior to swearing in Mr. SMITH act on his case in any particular. That, I think, is the position the Senator from Illinois takes.

Mr. DENEEN. If he has the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Exactly. May I ask another question? Does the Senator think that if a man comes here with a certificate reciting that he possesses the qualifications named in the Constitution expressly the Senate must receive him and swear him in, or can the Senate stop him at the threshold and inquire whether he possesses the particular qualifications named in the Constitution?

Mr. DENEEN. I think I have answered that question. The Senate can inquire into the qualifications as outlined in the Constitution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then the Senator concedes that the certificate of election is not conclusive or binding upon the Senate in the matter of originally acting upon the right of the applicant to be sworn in; that the Senate can go back of the certificate in so far as the constitutional qualifications are concerned and can inquire into them?

Mr. DENEEN. I think so. For instance, if the matter related to the organization of a State, it certainly could. It would seem to me that the Senate could inquire into whether or not the Senator elect or Senator designate had the qualifications prescribed in the Constitution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So that the proposition, then, narrows itself to this: The Senate is not bound absolutely by the terms of the certificate of election, but may inquire into the recitations of fact contained in the certificate in so far as the facts being inquired into relate solely to the specific qualifications mentioned in the Constitution; but the Senator takes the further position that we can not inquire as an initial step into any other matter but must swear the Senator in?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Just one moment, please. Let me proceed. What I have stated I understand to be the position of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. DENEEN. I could not hear quite all of the question of the Senator; I think I apprehended it; but I am not quite sure.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understand the Senator to admit that if a man comes here with a certificate regular in form and embracing the statement that he possesses the constitutional qualifications, the Senate can hold him up at the door and make a preliminary inquiry as to whether he possesses the particular qualifications named in the Constitution?

Mr. DENEEN. I think the Senate has the power to do so, and has exercised it many times, as stated by me heretofore in a review of the precedents.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will not the Senator from Missouri permit a question there?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I should like to continue on this line of thought.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator from Missouri will permit some questions after a while, then?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; I will permit all the questions the Senator from Pennsylvania may desire to ask me.

The Senator from Illinois states that after a man is sworn in the Senate can then inquire into frauds or irregularities or of improper conduct tainting the election.

Mr. DENEEN. I have so stated in my remarks, in which I quoted the speech of former Senator Knox, which, I think, expresses the correct procedure more clearly than anything that I could find by my examination.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That being true, will the Senator tell me where he finds in the Constitution any statement to the effect that the right of the Senate to inquire into the qualifications of its Members as to acts which transpired before the election is any greater after the oath has been administered than it is before the oath is administered? There is, of course, no such clause. I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] had enlisted my attention.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether I am the subject or the object of this Socratic method of bringing out the truth, but I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What was the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I stated that I did not know whether I was the examined or the examiner.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Pennsylvania rose to examine me.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; that is what I hope to be able to do now.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; proceed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator from Missouri find any significance in the use of the word "member" in that sentence of the Constitution which gives the Senate the power to pass upon the elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members? The Senator from Missouri is asking to have pointed out some place in the Constitution which indicates that the inquiry must be made after the individual becomes a Member.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas rose.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] desires to answer that question, and I yield to him.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I claim the same privilege that the Senator from Missouri claimed a few minutes ago.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. Then, I will say I think there is no peculiar, hidden, or mysterious meaning about the word "member" at all as used in the Constitution. It applies to a man who comes here and asserts his right to a seat in the Senate as a Member. I think the refinements that have been indulged in along that line if they came from any other source than the very high and distinguished places they do come from would be utterly puerile.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then the Senator thinks that the word "qualifications" should be carefully scanned and should be widened to allow any matter of mental, moral, or physical capacity to be brought in within that scope, but that the word "members" which immediately follows the word "qualifications" in that sentence of the Constitution is to be given no particular significance?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Arkansas desires to read an authority on that question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania permit me to read it now?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I beg the Senator to postpone that treat for a few minutes because I have not reached the subject about which I wanted to interrogate the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Well, will the Senator from Missouri permit me to make a brief statement?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I beg the Senator to let me finish. I will not take more than five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Pennsylvania has asked a question as to the true construction of the word "member" in this connection, and I wanted to point out to him the fact that the courts have defined the word "member" in a similar connection to mean a person who has been chosen to serve in a political convention or a legislative body.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Very good. Just a little while ago I rose to answer a question propounded by the Senator from Missouri and he objected to allowing me to do so or to my interjecting a single suggestion.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I wanted to stick to the theme, but I am perfectly willing now to answer any questions. Can the Senator repeat his question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am going on with my next question.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have not answered the question the Senator just asked.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator has not answered any question that I have asked.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is merely a matter of understanding; that is all.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Perhaps that is it. When the Senator from Missouri began to investigate in his incomparable way the primary in Illinois in the spring of 1926 he brought out all the facts regarding the contribution by Insull for SMITH's benefit; he reported them to the Senate, and they were known to the entire country. Now, it is the Senator's view, is it not, that those facts then disclosed made Mr. SMITH incapable of election to the United States Senate? Is that correct?

Mr. REED of Missouri. They did not make him incapable of election to the United States Senate, but they made it improper for him to sit in the United States Senate, because one of the steps by which he secured his election was through the improper methods used to get on the ticket.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. And that was the Senator's view in the spring of 1926, was it not?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; it was my view and has been the view of almost everybody who knew the facts ever since.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Very good. It seems not to have been the view of some 800,000 citizens of Illinois who constituted a majority of the voters at the general election in the following November.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Now, what significance, if any—and I ask the question in all sincerity to inform myself and others—what significance, if any, does the Senator attach to that general election and to that action of the voters of Illinois? Does he think that their action in November was a complete nullity?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now let me ask the Senator what he has to say to this——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No. I should like to get the Senator's opinion, and then I will tell him mine.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am going to give the Senator my opinion and give it to him very plainly. Does the Senator mean to say that if a man by any kind of fraud or corruption can get his name upon a ticket, and if thereafter he is elected, he is entitled to take his seat, although he never could have been upon the ticket except for that fraud and corruption, and that the vote of the people is final and conclusive regardless of any fraud, chicanery, or corruption which may have been committed? Does the Senator take that position?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator wants me to answer his question before he answers mine? Is that right?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am asking the Senator that question. I can answer the Senator, however. I hold to the view that whenever any material step which a candidate for office takes in order to secure a seat in this body is a corrupt step materially affecting the result, and the Senate is apprised of that corruption, and the man would never have been here except for the corruption, it is the duty of the Senate in the protection of the country to say that that kind of fraud and corruption vitiates the election. That is my view. To take the view that if a man can by bribery, by fraud, by corruption, by any kind of villainy get his name printed upon a party ticket so that, although there may be great numbers of people who vote their protests, yet in the general sweep of the election he is carried over with the tide, he must thereafter be seated, is to open the door to every kind of fraud and iniquity; it is to say to every scoundrel who is at large, "All you have to do is by some means to get upon a ticket in a State that is largely Democratic or largely Republican, and then by virtue of the very fraud which gave you that position you can finally land here and there is no power to prevent it." If that is the case, then the Senate is defenseless, and rogues may as well begin their nefarious business in the open.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Now, will the Senator tell us whether he thinks it is significant that full knowledge of this so-called fraud was enjoyed by the people of Illinois before their election? Would that change his conclusion at all?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Not a particle—not a particle.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator would not attach any importance, then, to the action of the people of Illinois, who knew all about this election, just as much as the Senator from Missouri knows, and nevertheless chose to elect FRANK SMITH to the Senate?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I would not attach the slightest importance to the fact that in a party-ridden State a political machine was able to put over a candidate, even though he was covered all over with the leprosy of crime, if when he came here one of the steps that he took was in the teeth of the law, in the teeth of morals, and in violation of the statutes of his own State, which is the case here.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Would the Senator extend that to a person who was nominated in a Southern State which excluded all negroes from the right to vote?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will extend it to any State where fraud and corruption and villainy have tainted the election; and I will say this: I have heard a good deal about Southern States and I am not going to go into a discussion of that question; but I will say that there was such a spectacle presented in the Senator's own State, where the white people of the State were debauched, as ought to chain his attention and all his moral risibilities and energies within the confines of his own Commonwealth. He need not look beyond.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, my moral risibilities—whatever those articles may be—will be devoted to the election in Pennsylvania when we get to that subject; but what I am trying to get the Senator to answer is——

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator need not try. He has been getting answers. Just let him keep right on. He will get all he is entitled to, and get them very directly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is encouraging, because I should like this one answered directly: Does the Senator consider it to be corrupt and improper to suppress the vote of the entire negro population in each of the Southern States?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator what that has to do with the question of FRANK SMITH in Illinois?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We have just been answering hypothetical questions from the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]; and the first time we begin to apply the doctrine to that side of the aisle the Senator asks what that has to do with FRANK SMITH.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. Now I understand the Senator's position.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I want to know whether, in the next Congress, the Senator, if he is here—and I hope he will be—will join with us in applying this principle to men nominated in primaries from which all colored voters are excluded?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator asks four or five questions, and does not wait to be answered. The Senator's position now seems to be this: "It is true that we have here a case of corruption"——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am instancing another case of corruption.

Mr. REED of Missouri. "Our defense is that there was corruption somewhere else. Ergo, there being corruption in more than one place, we must admit all."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am trying to find out whether the Senator is consistent in his statements of constitutional law or whether he is not; and all I can get is argumentum ad hominem, which means vilification of me.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Why, I have not vilified the Senator from Pennsylvania. I have simply stated his position. If he is vilified, sir, he is vilified by his own language, for I have simply called attention to what his position is—that his defense is not the defense of Mr. SMITH; it is not the assertion that Mr. SMITH comes here with clean hands; but that somewhere else, some hundreds of miles away, in other States, there have been things which the Senator regards as improper. That has nothing to do with this case, unless the Senator proceeds further and says that because there is wickedness in other States this particular wickedness must be palliated and excused.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I never expected to hear such an argument from the Senator who stood and questioned the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] about hypothetical cases of constitutional law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, let me answer the Senator directly. The Senator, I presume, thinks he is discussing a constitutional question now; does he?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am surprised to know that it has not occurred to the Senator from Missouri that the action he proposes here is a serious invasion of the constitutional rights of the States.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. And I hoped that by giving him illustrations from among his friends he might be brought to realize it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator need not worry at all about my views on the Constitution.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am gravely worried about them.

Mr. REED of Missouri. They have been taken with reference to this case, and the same views will stand with reference to every State of this Union when the case is presented.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am encouraged to hear that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But I do not propose to be led aside from the discussion of this case into the discussion of problems in other States until we come to them. If, however, the Senator will stand with me and try to do what can be done to see that men who come to the doors of the Senate come here properly elected by the people of their States and with clean hands, then we will be in agreement for once or twice in our lives; for I think we did agree once before, when I was quite certain I must be mistaken.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am trying to get the Senator now to realize that my position applies as well to these Southern States as to the Northern States.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not believe that the Senate has any right to pass on the primaries in the Southern States, either. I say, that when the Southern States elect their representatives here in the general election that is binding on us, and we are no court of appeal from them.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator will, of course, note that if he can establish that doctrine, Pennsylvania can continue to hold the same kind of elections she has been holding.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; and Kansas City; but I am going to respond to the Senator's appeal and stick to Illinois for a minute.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator seems to think I am taking my position in one way in Pennsylvania and that I would not take the same position with reference to other States. That may be the Senator's viewpoint; it may be the point from which he reasons; but I beg to assure him that at any time while I am a Member of this body, if a case comes here showing fraud and corruption I shall be ready to vote to exclude the applicant for a seat if the evidence is before the Senate. If the evidence is not before the Senate when he makes his application, in ordinary cases he would be sworn in and the evidence would then be taken, and then I would vote to exclude him.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is all I am asking the Senator. I did not mean to imply the contrary at all.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator need not spend a moment about that. He must not draw the conclusion—I hope he does not draw the conclusion—that any action I have taken in this matter has been taken on any other ground as to Pennsylvania or as to Illinois than the ground I would occupy in any case. He has no right to draw that inference.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have not drawn the inference. I am merely asking the Senator to establish that fact.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator ought to assume it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have been very glad to have it put beyond the reach of assumption, because the time will come, if this principle is established now against the State of Illinois when most of the Senators who vote for it will live to rue the day.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, when a man in the course of a colloquy gets to the point of making threats against Senators from other States, practically telling them that they are hereafter going to be excluded, it rather seems to me we have reached a point where it is useless to proceed any further.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I beg the Senator to listen to me, and not to imagine innuendos that I never intended myself. I want to ask the Senator whether the fraud of which he complains in the Illinois primary was a fraud committed on the people of Illinois which they themselves fully understood before they acted in November, 1926.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is the same question that has been asked three times in at least that many different ways.

The fraud that was perpetrated, the wrong that was done, obtained a position upon a ballot. There was discussion in the State of Illinois. Nevertheless, whether the people of the State of Illinois still continued to vote for this man or not, if this was a substantial step taken by him to gain a seat in this body, the action of the people of Illinois can not ratify that kind of wrong. In other words, it takes more than a vote of the people of a State to wipe out a fraud, to extinguish an iniquity. If that be not true, then this body and this country are powerless to preserve free government.

The Senator seems to think that if a majority of people vote for the ratification of any kind of iniquity, that purges the act of its iniquity, and that the people of the United States have no right to protect themselves against men who come here by those methods. I have this to say to the Senator on that point: A Senator who is sent here by the State of Illinois must have been elected by the people of Illinois in accordance with law; and any man who commits frauds in an election taints and destroys his election just as fraud taints and destroys any contract or any act——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is there any fraud claimed in this election?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Plenty of fraud in the primary; and that no vote thereafter taken by a people can cleanse the act of its fraud and its iniquity if it be an act which contributed to the bringing of the individual here to the Senate.

More than that, there are other States in the Union that have some rights; for when a Senator comes here from Illinois he becomes a Senator of the United States, and he is as much a Senator for each of the 48 States as he is for the State that sent him here, and his vote binds all of the States.

Therefore these other States have the right to say that, no matter what the vote may have been in a particular State, if the individual coming here does not come along the road of the law, walking it straight, and coming here without taint upon his office, they will refuse to allow him to sit here and bind the sovereign people of this Republic.

Any other view than that means that fraud can walk in the noonday, that corrupt organizations can defeat any chance at fair elections, and that every kind of iniquity and every sort of villainy will triumph, provided by some means a majority of votes can be gotten into a ballot box. That is not good morals; it is not good law.

This body does have the right to protect itself, and protect the country by protecting itself, and when men stand here as the special pleaders for fraud, as the defenders of iniquity, as the partners in crime, making themselves partners by ratifying a crime, when they get into that sort of mental frame there is no use carrying on debates with them.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, for the first time since these debates began we have arrived at a concise statement of the law which our adversaries believe governs this case. For the first time they have frankly thrown to the four winds the doctrine that the States have left any rights in such a matter and have taken the position that the voters in the States, with full knowledge of the facts, are nevertheless to be treated like little children, subject to our guardianship.

I do not believe that my distinguished colleague from Missouri has any monopoly in being an opponent of corruption and of fraud and of other villainies of which he has talked to us so often, but I do believe, sir, that he confuses his thought and ours when he claims that the successful candidate in an election should not be seated because of some supposed corruption in a primary election committed back in the spring of 1926, against the people of Illinois, if you please, for they were the victims of that corruption if it existed; they knew all about it. They knew as much about that so-called corruption by the time November brought its election as does the Senator from Missouri at this minute. Yet he would set himself up as a divinity above the people of Illinois to say that they were so feeble-minded in condoning that, as they appeared to have done in the general election, that although they know FRANK SMITH better than he does, although they may have reasons for electing FRANK SMITH that we can not know, reasons that to them outweigh this irregularity in the primaries many months before, yet nevertheless the State of Illinois is so far gone in subjection to this little group of us who sit here that we can override the judgment of nearly a million voters who cast their votes for FRANK SMITH; a majority of 96 of us stands so supreme in integrity and in intelligence that we can say to that great mass of people in Illinois, "You are moralless, if you will, or imbeciles, and your judgment deserves no respect."

I say, Mr. President, there never would have been any Constitution of the United States had it ever been supposed that this little group of Senators here would arrogate to themselves a power like that. There never would have been any compromise in the Philadelphia Convention, there never would have been any agreement that the States should have equal representation in this body, had it been so much as suspected that the Senate would gather to itself so extravagant a power as that.

We talk of State rights. For a long time, for many decades, the declaration for State rights was the foundation stone in the platform of the Democratic Party. You have thrown it to the winds. I put to you as an illustration the well-known evasion of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments throughout the primaries in the Democratic South. I do not believe that is any of our business. I believe in the rights of those Southern States. I believe that the men they elect to represent them should be received here, as they come as the ambassadors of those Southern States. But you are destroying that principle.

I always had thought, and I believe my colleagues joined with me, that if those primaries you have down there were unconstitutional, it was up to the citizens in your States to correct them, and beyond our power and beyond the scope of our authority. You are destroying that principle.

You have never yet, in your consideration of these so-called corruption cases in the North, had the courage to consider the vast numbers of people on which those campaign funds were spent. You have never yet treated VARE fairly in the recitals of your resolutions. You have ascribed to him expenditures made long before he knew it, for the benefit of other men, without his knowledge, and without his getting one penny's worth of benefit. One hundred and five thousand dollars in Beidleman's fund was spent before Beidleman ever became an ally of VARE, and yet in the resolution which you passed here last month you ascribed that to VARE, and put it in your preamble as if it were proof of villainy.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask the Senator to yield for a correction.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not care to enter into a discussion of the minutiæ of the resolution which was offered here. The Senator says we have never yet given VARE an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I did not say that. I made no such statement. The Senator must have misheard me.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then I certainly misunderstood the Senator. He said that VARE never had an opportunity to present his case.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I did not say that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the Senator did not say that, I have nothing to say; but I certainly misheard him if he did not. I understood his statement to amount to this, that we had never yet had the courage to inquire into the number of voters; that we never yet had had the courage to give Mr. VARE an opportunity to explain anything.

Mr. REED of Pensylvania. No; I did not say that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; if the Senator did not say it, I have no complaint. I want to say that Mr. VARE was welcomed to the committee; he was given every opportunity he asked for; he gave his own testimony; the testimony that was produced was practically undisputed; the matter has gone back to the committee, and just as soon as Mr. VARE is able—and if he is able now, we are ready to proceed now—we are going to give him an opportunity to put in whatever evidence he wants to put in. It is perhaps unfortunate that we have been discussing the Pennsylvania case here this morning, but it has been dragged into this controversy by the ears, as it were.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Not by me, Mr. President. So, because of the facts I was recounting when the Senator interrupted me, I wonder at the correctness of some of these statements in the preamble here. I am sorry the Senator from Illinois has not seen fit to discuss them.

That is not the question on which I have risen, however. This is what I want to say, and to say it with every particle of sincerity of which I am capable, that in the second paragraph of this resolution we are pretending to assert a power the Constitution never gave us, a power no one who helped to frame the Constitution meant to give us.

I do not need to go back and quote to the Senate those sentences with which we are all so familiar. Obviously it is true that in this resolution, and particularly in the second paragraph of it, in declaring SMITH'S seat vacant we are not passing on the election of one of our Members, because it is admitted that there is no charge of fraud in that election, that the people of Illinois knew all the facts that we knew before they went into that election, and therefore the adoption of this resolution is not an assertion of that power in the Constitution.

There is no question of the returns of this particular Member of the Senate. I will not stop to quibble about the word "member." We will assume that SMITH is a Member.

We do not pretend by this resolution as reported from the committee to be passing on the qualifications of a Member of the Senate. If the wording of this resolution now reported to us were that "the Senate finds that FRANK L. SMITH has not the qualifications to be a Member of the Senate," I should quarrel with the extension of the word "qualifications" to cover such broad power, but I should, nevertheless, admit that the resolution showed a definite intent on the part of the Senate to exercise that particular constitutional power. But it does not do that.

It is perfectly obvious, from a reading of the proposed resolution, that it is not to be adopted in the exercise of that power which the Constitution gives us, to judge "of the elections, returns, and qualifications" of our Members.

It is equally obvious that it is not intended to be an assertion of our disciplinary power to expel by a two-thirds vote. It is quite obvious that it is not an assertion of that power. Those are the only two powers the Senate has over its membership.

We look to the Constitution for some authority in ourselves to adopt this resolution now presented, and we find that under neither of the two clauses referred to is the Senate authorized, and apparently the resolution is drawn with no regard for either of those two clauses. If I am wrong in that, I hope the author of the resolution will point out which of the powers given in the Constitution is attempted to be asserted by this resolution, and particularly by the second paragraph of it.

In conclusion, Mr. President, there is no use arguing against the adoption of this resolution. As the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] said a short time ago, "The tumbrel is at the door, the guillotine is greased for use." But I do not believe that anyone who is a sincere believer in the sovereignty of the separate States, as I claim to be, ought to let this resolution pass without some such word of protest as I myself have freely tried to utter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate bill 744.

In this connection the Chair wishes to state that his personal opinion is that the question already before the Senate is one of the highest personal privilege and should be continued with, but the precedents of the Senate are uniformly in opposition to the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have not been hastily committed to the view which I have expressed by my vote in the Vare and the Smith cases. But I have reached my conclusions after the most mature deliberation I have been able to give to this important question. My conclusion briefly is that the power of the Senate in the premises can not be denied, that it is only a question of the rightful exercise of that power. I base the conclusion entirely upon the Constitution. I shall read but briefly and speak briefly.

The Constitution provides that no person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of 30 years and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State from which he shall be chosen. It will be observed that the Constitution does not lay down positive qualifications. It simply specifies disqualifications.

Another provision of the Constitution:

> And no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office.

Again there is no attempt to prescribe a positive qualification, but the Constitution merely asserts a disqualifying fact.

Then, when we go to the fourteenth amendment we find in section 3 that no person shall be a Senator so far as this matter is concerned—> who, having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress or as an officer of the United States or as a member of any State legislature or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House remove such disability.

Wherever the question is dealt with in the Constitution it is stated in the negative. There is no positive qualification laid down in the instrument. Mere disqualifying facts are noted.

I am quite familiar with the doctrine that where a constitution prescribes certain disqualifications, the disqualifications enumerated are exhaustive of all others. That view may be supported upon a highly technical process of reasoning. It does not in fact or in practice control either in the construction of statutes or constitutions. Some authorities follow it, but I can not subscribe to that view. I have reached the conclusion, as I have said, not hastily, but cautiously and deliberately, that the Constitution merely prescribes certain disqualifications and says to the Senate, "You shall not admit a man under 30 years of age and who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not an inhabitant of the State from which he was elected." It says to the Senate, "You shall not permit one to sit here who is at the same time the holder of an office under the United States."

That that is the correct view of it seems to me to be beyond the peradventure of a doubt when one considers those circumstances which occurred prior to and during and immediately following the War between the States. The fourteenth amendment prescribed an additional disqualification. Those who framed and submitted the amendment never doubted that the Senate had the power to exclude a Member who had previously taken an oath to support the Constitution and yet had engaged in any one of the several things enumerated and prohibited in the amendment; but they were anxious to make that disqualification absolute, and so they said that no one who had previously taken the oath of office and who had subsequently engaged in any of the several acts enumerated in the amendment should be eligible to membership in the Senate. Prior to the submission and ratification of the amendment the power to exclude a Senator elect had been exercised by the Senate, composed in large part of the same Senators who framed and submitted the amendment. Throughout its history the Senate had in fact excluded Senators elect for reasons other than those specifically set forth in the Constitution.

But the Congress submitting the amendment and the States ratifying it went one step further. They said that while no one can be a Member who, having taken the oath and thereafter has engaged in any one of the several things enumerated in the amendment, yet by a two-thirds vote of both Houses the disqualification might be relieved, showing beyond all reasonable doubt the intent and purpose to further limit a general power. We construe the Constitution for its intent and meaning and not by highly technical rules which would destroy it. Looking to the real meaning of the instrument, it always was the concept that either House of the Congress had certain powers, entirely unlimited, save and except by the Constitution itself. With respect to the power to judge of the election returns and qualifications of its Members, the Constitution is at pains to declare that the Senate had not the power to admit and to recognize the right of one to sit who was under a certain age and who was not an inhabitant of the State at the time of his election and who had not been a citizen of the United States for a certain number of years, and who fell under the condemnation of certain other disqualifying facts in the instrument enumerated.

It has been said that at the time of election the people of Illinois knew all of the facts which the Senate now knows. There is a confusion in the thought. The right of a State is one thing, but the right of the Congress of the United States is another thing. Every right that the Congress has has been given it by the States themselves, including the State of Illinois. The States have given to the Congress, and each House of it, the power under which we act, and the granting of the power is a direct command to the Senate to exercise that power on proper occasion.

The Senate acts under the provision that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members. The narrow argument is here made that one is not a Member until he has actually taken his seat, though he may have been elected for that purpose, and is appearing here and demanding the right to take his seat. Why "judge of the election" if there can be no inquiry until the man has taken his seat? I grant that in the majority of cases it is contemplated that the Senator elect will be admitted to the Senate, and I grant that in the vast majority of cases the Senator elect should be admitted to a seat in the Senate. But the conclusion to which I come is that the naked power of the Senate can not be questioned; that it is in every instance only a question of the rightful exercise of the power.

The assertion that when the people of the State of Illinois, with full knowledge of all the facts, have elected Mr. SMITH to represent the State in this body, that then this body has no power to make inquiry concerning those same facts at least, overlooks the controlling fact that the people of the United States and the several States thereof, including the State of Illinois, have conferred the broad power upon the Senate to do the very thing that the Senate is proceeding to do in this instance. We do not here judge an offense committed against the people of a State. We assert our right to protect the Senate in the exercise of a power expressly granted and conferred by the States themselves upon the Senate.

The doctrine has here been invoked that, perchance, some Southern States have discriminated in their primary or election laws against a certain class of our citizens, that in some way we on this side of the aisle are estopped, especially those of us from the Southern States, to raise any question touching the qualification, election, or returns of any man who comes here from any State. I have no desire to get into two controversies at once, but that argument has about as much logic in it, of common sense in it, and of fairness in it, as the argument frequently advanced that because one comes from the South where certain amendments are alleged to have been nullified, he is estopped from saying that other amendments shall not be nullified. In my place I say now that whenever any Southern State, my own included, goes beyond the limitations of the Constitution, any person at interest is invited to take an appeal through all of the courts to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the question. There is no such thing as violating the Constitution by legislative action when a State asserts its power within the limits of the Federal Constitution.

It is said we violate the spirit of the Constitution. I am not concerned with that. The Supreme Court of the United States has not hesitated to strike down State law, and State primary law at that, whenever the law has been found to be unconstitutional. As late as March last the Supreme Court of the United States declared unconstitutional a provision of the primary or election law of the State of Texas. I believe it was a provision of the primary law of the State of Texas.

Why this effort to invoke this doctrine here? Why should Senators persist in the effort to frighten by threat the South every time they wish us to do wrong? Why do they not undertake to scare us when they wish us to do right?

I have said before and I repeat—and this by way of answer to the ridiculously extreme argument that has been submitted—that whenever this body exercises the right to exclude a Member because of a State policy which the Supreme Court of the United States, specially charged with the construction of the Constitution, has held to be a valid exercise of State power, then a seat in this body will not be worth retaining. That is my answer to it. That is the only answer that I desire to make to it.

On the facts I might answer that in my State we have not integrated the primary law into the election law. The primary is purely a party regulation. In my State and in every Southern State so far as I know the members of the Negro race may qualify and may vote. Approximately 3,000 of them in the last election for President in one city in my State did qualify and vote for the present Chief Executive of the United States.

That was not a primary, but, as I have said, we have not integrated our primary laws into our general election laws. We have not sought to control the Republican primary or convention. The Republican Party generally conducts its affairs in my State through conventions, though it may make use of the primary system, the choice being absolutely within its discretion. But the point, Mr. President, is that when my State violates the Federal Constitution an open invitation is issued to every man or woman in interest to test the validity of that law, and when it is stricken down by the Supreme Court we will acquiesce in the decision.

More than that, I have not the slightest hesitancy in saying that when the time comes, as happily it will come, I believe, when every line of our law which seemingly gives offense to any right-thinking man or woman in this country may be written out of it, no section of this Nation will be happier than will the South itself. But are we to be forbidden to take a position upon a highly moral question because perchance somebody thinks that we have overridden some provision of the Constitution? We have made our fight within the Constitution. We do not seek to go beyond the Constitution, and within the Constitution we have a perfect right to make our fight. Furthermore—and the argument is applicable to this issue and to another to which I have adverted—whatever the South may have done, she has acted in the honest and abiding conviction that it was necessary for her so to act in order to preserve her own civilization for the protection and welfare of every race within her borders. That is to say, Mr. President, the South has done what men and nations have ever done, and, I undertake to say, will ever do; she has responded to what she sincerely believed to be the supreme law—the law of self-preservation. Whether she was always right, whether she was sometimes wrong, is not now the question; but honest men are not estopped from casting their votes upon great moral questions simply and solely because their people, actuated by high and controlling motive, may on occasions have been mistaken.

It might have been the wiser course to have permitted Mr. SMITH to have taken his seat, to have received the oath of office, and then to have proceeded, without further business intervening, to determine his final right to a seat in the Senate; but that time has passed; the case is now here, and Mr. SMITH has declined to go forward with his case. He has seen fit to stand on what he deems to be his constitutional right, a right supported by the view of many able men from the beginning of the Government, but to which we who are in favor of this resolution do not agree.

What are we going to do? The facts are undisputed; the material facts have never been at issue. They are recited in the resolution. They are known of all men. It is unnecessary to repeat them here. If a case ever called for the exercise of the power which I think the Senate undoubtedly possesses, it is the case at bar. Irrespective of whether the Illinois primary law has been integrated into the general election law of that State, waiving that question aside, it is a fact that Mr. SMITH entered the Republican primary; it is a fact that an enormous sum of money, more than $400,000, I believe, was expended in that primary, partly at least, to secure his nomination.

It is also a fact that a large sum of money, more than $200,000, was contributed by Mr. Insull, and the connections of Mr. Insull in this case are not disputed. Whether the primary law of Illinois was and is a part of the election machinery of that State, as a matter of fact Mr. SMITH elected to go into the Illinois primary; as the result of that contest his name was placed on his party's ticket in the general election, and the general election resulted in his coming to the Senate. So that the facts which the Senate is called upon to consider are facts related directly to his election, and if the facts and circumstances disclose fraud in the actual step which, whether he was obliged to take or not, he elected to take and did take, then the Senate has the right to say to Mr. SMITH, "In the examination of your election and your qualifications, in view of the undisputed facts and circumstances, we will exercise our power to prevent your coming into this body."

Mr. President, the power may have been as well exercised after Mr. SMITH had taken the oath of office; I grant that, because the question of exclusion or expulsion does not so much depend upon the time when the motion is made, but, in fact, upon the character of the motion and the grounds upon which the motion proceeds. When a fact vital to the election and directly connected with and related to the election is the subject of the inquiry, the proper motion, in my judgment, whenever made, is one to exclude. The motion to expel is against a sitting Member and on account of an act which has occurred or transpired after he has qualified as a Member of the body.

The Senate has no quarrel with the people of Illinois; it does not take issue with the State of Illinois; it answers to Illinois and the 47 other States to which it is directly responsible in the language of the Constitution; in the exercise of the power to judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of Mr. SMITH it is found that he is not entitled to a seat here.

The offense committed by Mr. SMITH against the people of Illinois is and must remain a question between Mr. SMITH and the people of his State; but whatever, in the light of the undisputed and uncontroverted evidence, it is the duty, under the Constitution, of the Senate to do, the Senate must do regardless of other considerations, not as a challenge to the great State of Illinois but because Illinois and all other American States expect the Senate of the United States to exercise the power which was given to it in the Constitution for the protection of the Senate and the people of the United States.

My vote here may determine no less an issue than the issue of peace or war; and my State alone, regardless of my election and qualifications, can not insist that that great power shall be exercised by one who, in the deliberate opinion of the majority of the Senate, has no rightful place to a seat in the body.

I am not much concerned whether Mr. SMITH knew at the time that contributions to his campaign were being made by one who, under the law and in all good morals, had no right to make the contributions, or whether he knew at the time the amount of money expended for and on his behalf. To quibble over these questions is to permit the ultimate corruption of the legislative branch of the Government by a Senate too timorous to exercise its plain right under the Constitution.

One thing, Mr. President, is certain—long before the election, even while the primaries were in progress, the facts were disclosed. They were brought to the attention of Mr. SMITH as well as to the attention of every man in the Republic. When those facts came to Mr. SMITH, one course, and one course only, was open to him: To surrender to the people of his State the nomination which his party had given him, and, if he then desired, to go before his party and the people of the State and ask for their confidence. That way, and that way only, the path of duty lay; that way, and that way only, honor pointed.

To those Senators who believe that power exists under the Constitution in this instance to preserve public and political morality, but one course is open—the calm and dispassionate exercise of the power. We are fortified by the uncontroverted facts. No one has and no one will justify, excuse, or condone the things that have transpired in this case.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the distinguished constitutional lawyers who have argued this case from the beginning. I have the very highest regard for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] as a constitutional lawyer, and for the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who has so ably presented the case against the Senator elect from Illinois.

I have not the good fortune to be a constitutional lawyer or a lawyer of any kind. I am merely a student of history, as all of us are. I speak merely as one who is interested in preserving that form of government which the fathers gave us, and which has made our land more prosperous and given us a better Government than any constitution has ever given to any other country.

The Senator from Missouri has charged—unfortunately, it seems to me—that those who are opposed to this resolution are partners in crime. He said:

> When men stand here as the special pleaders for fraud, as the defenders of iniquity, as the partners in crime, making themselves partners by ratifying a crime, when they get into that sort of mental frame there is no use carrying on debates with them.

His zeal has affected his judgment in this matter, Mr. President, it seems to me, if I may say so without any reflection on the distinguished Senator. It surely may be permitted to one to take a view contrary to that taken by the majority of this body without being accused of being a partner in crime.

As a matter of fact, the Senator from Missouri and his friends are arguing this case from the point of view of those who believe in a strongly centralized government rather than from the point of view of those who believe in the rights of the States.

It is, of course, obvious that the great Democratic Party, which for many years has expressed in its platforms a belief in State rights, finds itself in an embarrassing position at the present time. The Democratic Party has no monopoly of a belief in State rights. Many of us who sit on this side of the aisle are earnest followers of the doctrines of local self-government and of State rights as laid down by Thomas Jefferson and the fathers. To us these doctrines still have a certain vitality, even though they lead us into embarrassing situations. I submit that it is an extremely embarrassing situation with which we are faced at the present time, when, if we speak against this resolution, we are accused of being partners in crime; when those who venture to differ with this distinguished special committee are accused of condoning fraud and corruption, while they, standing on a high moral plane, and with earnest emphasis and magnificent oratory, look upon those of us who venture to disagree with them as condoning crime, as condoning corruption.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this situation calls vividly to mind the fact that in this country we are drifting more and more away from the views of the fathers, more and more away from that doctrine of the rights of the sovereign States on which the Constitution was founded, more and more toward the benefits of a benevolent despotism.

There is no question that a benevolent despotism can secure more efficient government, more moral government, more immediate righteousness than a free, popular government. One has only to read history, to read the debates about the establishment of popular government, to realize that the founders of our Constitution and those who preceded them, who were interested in this subject, were afraid of popular government, were afraid to trust the judgment of the people. Many preferred a benevolent autocracy. Many of them preferred a monarchy. Many of them would have preferred to see George Washington—whom they worshiped, and whom we still revere—raised to the position of a constitutional monarch. It has been said that that was the view of Alexander Hamilton and others.

There is no question, Mr. President, that a benevolent despotism secures more righteousness, more morality, than a popular government where people may act as they choose to act.

Mr. REED of Missouri and Mr. WALSH of Montana addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Missouri or to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the Senators will not interrupt me for just a moment. I shall not be very long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut declines to yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have in this case the extraordinary fact, as presented to us by the Senator from Missouri, of a State which, having full knowledge of certain circumstances, unfortunate to say the least, has proceeded by a very large majority to elect to membership in this body one of its citizens who fulfills the qualifications as laid down in the Constitution, but who does not suit the committee. The 800,000 people who voted for FRANK L. SMITH knew that there had been certain irregularities at the primary. Nevertheless they chose Mr. SMITH. Furthermore, it is stated by the committee in one of the paragraphs preceding their resolution, one of the whereases—

That by the statutes of Illinois it its made a misdemeanor for any officer or agent of such public-service corporations to contribute any money to any member of said commission, or for any member of said commission to accept such moneys, upon penalty of removal from office.

Mr. President, this special committee tells us that that law of Illinois has been broken. Before it tells us this, it is in evidence in the hearings that three members of that committee had already gone on record as being opposed to any claim of innocence on the part of Mr. SMITH.

No court in Illinois has ever passed on this case. The people of Illinois, through their district attorneys or through their officers of the law, or whatever may be their usual methods of bringing criminals to the bar of justice, have not proceeded against Mr. SMITH. He has had no fair trial in a court of law as to whether or not he broke the law. We have in this case merely the decision of this committee that he broke the law. That is not our usual way, under the principles of justice which we have inherited from our ancestors, of trying those who break the law in this country. It has been our practice from time immemorial to assume that a man was innocent and to consider him innocent until he had been proven guilty in a court of law; but this case evidently is not regarded in Illinois as of sufficient importance for any district attorney or any special attorney to bring any case in any criminal court against Mr. SMITH, and so he has not been convicted of any fraud or corruption. Under our practice, then, he is innocent.

Notwithstanding that fact, the Senate by a large vote has denied him the privilege of taking his oath as a Senator from Illinois, although it seemed to the minority at that time, and still seems so to me, that we had no right so to deny him.

Mr. President, I can only read the Constitution as a plain man, not as a lawyer; but the way the Constitution reads and the way the rules of the Senate read, I do not see how the Senate was justified at all in voting as it did. In view of the fact that the credentials arrived in due form, and that the committee had said that the credentials were correct, were signed by the proper authorities, and that the credentials were presented at the desk, and the man to whose election they certified presented himself and asked to be sworn in, I confess that I can not see by what right he was denied that right which he had under the Constitution and under our own rules. However, that right was denied him. Now we are asked to pass this extraordinary resolution. It is, in effect, an act of despotism.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Since this morning session I have had an opportunity to go through this record, and since that time I am also informed that some Senators desire to get away to-morrow. If there is no one who desires to continue the debate, I am willing to vote this afternoon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have some convictions in this matter which I desire to submit, and I will not be able to present them to-day. I should like to have the matter go over.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.
